DEVOTED TO THE REPORT OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

Down from the Mount of Inspiration we must enter the Valley of Service

THE VALLEY OF SERVICE

And when they were come down to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, kneeling down to him, and saying, Lord have mercy on my son . . . And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him. . . . The disciples said, Why could not we cast him out? Jesus said, Because of your unbelief.

MINUTES OF THE FORTY-THIRD GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

The Forty-third Annual Conference of the Brethren Church convened at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 24, 1931.

The Moderator, A. V. Kimmell presided, introduced and presented the Song Leader of the Conference, Leo Polman. The evening song service was opened by singing, "He Keeps Me Singing." The devotions of the evening followed, which consisted of quoting memory Scripture verses, testimonials and sentence prayers, closed with prayer by the conference secretary.

Prior to the evening message Conference enjoyed hearing Leo Polman sing, "Why Should He Love Me So?" The Vice Moderator, R. Paul Miller, brought the first conference message entitled, "The Living Christ." Session closed with singing, "Tis So Sweet to Trust in Jesus," and the benediction by A. V. Kimmell.

Tuesday Morning

The morning session was opened by making use of song "The Solid Rock." The devotions were conducted by Grant McDonald who read from the fifth chapter of Ephesians and offered prayer. A solo entitled, "Can Men Tell That You Love Jesus?" was rendered by Leo Polman. The Vice Moderator, R. Paul Miller, presided and presented A. V. Kimmell who read the Moderator's Address entitled, "The Church, the Body of Christ." Conference joined in singing, "True-Hearted, Whole-Hearted," as the period emerged into the business session or conference organization.

The Credential Committee submitted the first report which resulted in 73 ministerial and 141 lay credentials, totaling 214 credentials.

A motion prevailed to adopt the report. Business session closed by singing "I Love to Tell the Story." C. C. Grisso presented the conference to the Throne of Grace through prayer. Mrs. Samuel Adams sang "Let Me Dream On," which prepared the hearts of all for the Bible lecture entitled, "The Holy Spirit's Testimony Concerning Jesus Christ."

Because of no complete election for conference organization a motion prevailed that the two highest persons in each office be declared nominees for election and proceed with the election. The result of the election is as follows:

Moderator, W. I. Duker.
Vice Moderator, S. M. Whetstone.
Secretary, J. L. Gingrich.
Ass't. Secretary, Herman Koontz.
Treasurer, Norman Kimmel.
Statistician, George Cone.
Committee on Committees, W. S. Bell, Charles Anspach, L. S. Bauman.

A motion prevailed to adjourn and the benediction was pronounced by A. V. Kimmell.

Wednesday Morning

The morning session opened with song entitled, "I Shall See the King." W. I. Duker, the new Moderator, invoked God's guidance upon the day's work.

The report of the Credential Committee was given which resulted in a total of 84 ministerial and 169 lay credentials or a grand total of 252. The report was accepted. Minutes of previous session were read and approved. The following motion, proposed by the Home Mission Board, was passed, namely, That, in view of the present situation relative to the policy of our Kentucky mission work, a committee of 15 members of this conference, composed of laymen and ministers, be appointed to investigate the facts concerning the same and to report to Conference on Friday morning.

The following reports were carefully submitted and duly accepted:

Comments on the General Conference for 1931

General Conference for 1931 was somewhat of a surprise and disappointment of attendance. There was widespread uncertainty as to what the year of depression might bring out, and there was a feeling that it would show a decided decrease in attendance. Conference leaders, therefore, were happily surprised at the opening session the largest crowd at a like number of years. The attendance was uniformly good throughout the week and on Saturday the Credential Committee reported a total of 297 registered delegates. Last year the number of delegates was 261 and for the year preceding that. If we go beyond that we find that the conference held at Ashland, Ohio, in 1928 when the Golden Jubilee of Ashland was celebrated there were 317 delegates present, but preceding that the records for several years back show an attendance decidedly below the 300 mark and below the attendance of 1928. It is not, therefore, the most prosperous years when men are willing to pay money to attend conferences and to forsake spiritual realities of the kingdom and the program. It rather seems that in the lean years men appreciate things more and are willing to make greater sacrifices.

Our purpose to comment on the business of the late conference being we have the secretary's report published in this issue is merely to observe certain encouraging characteristics. One of these is the high spiritual tone of the conference. The opening program set the pace for the entire week in a high and doubtless the fine spirit that prevailed at that time much to do with the way the conference continued. V. Kimmell called the conference to order and placed the emphasis of participation in worship up to the assembly by calling for memory Scripture verses, testimonies and prayers. The song service conducted by Leo Polman was enthusiastic and worshipful and did much to spread the message into every heart. It was a great inspiration to sit and sing. The song leader showed his skill not only in singing, but in getting people to really worship God. His own excellent solo work showed him to be a promessage rather than a demonstrator of voice. The evening by Vice Moderator R. Paul Miller was also a lift for our souls to new heights of spirituality and longing for a new appreciation of the Lord Jesus Christ. The heights ran all through the conference. The opening meetings especially emphasized it, as also did the Bible studies at the opening of the evening programs. God was very real and his work was in evidence. The man who was at all responsive must have had his heart greatly quickened by his attendance upon this conference.

One outstanding characteristic of this conference was the emphasis upon exalting the person and work of Christ. No one could have dropped in as a stranger upon any session and not have been impressed with the fact that the people regard Jesus and worship him as the divine Son and as worthy of all worship, adoration and glory. Miller proclaimed the living Christ in the opening session and the key-note of the entire conference. The first message by Brother Polman was of the same mold and proved a powerful message that we are quoting the words written in the scriptures with the hope that they may carry a measure to the hearts of our readers that they did to the hearts of those at Conference. The verses follow:

He sent my Savior to die in my stead,
Why should he love me so?
Nail to Calvary's cross he was led,
Why should he love me so?

"Nails pierced his hands and his feet for my sin,
Why should he love me so?
He suffered sore my salvation to win,
Why should he love me so?"

"O, how he agonized there in my place,
Why should he love me so?
Nothing withholding my sin to efface,

The Moderator came on with an address that added to the glory of Christ as the Head of the church, which address we are passing on to our readers in this issue of the Evangelist. Dr. J. C. Masse's first lecture dealt with "The Testimony of the Holy Spirit Concerning Jesus." The next day he spoke of "The Self-emptying of Jesus." Professor McClain's first lecture set forth the incarnation of Christ. And many other speakers united to exalt the name and glorify the person and work of our Lord Jesus Christ. A people who will give Christ the pre-eminence in all their discussion and worship will find that they have within their hearts an inspiration and a power that will go a long way toward enabling them to give Christ first place in their daily lives.

Another feature worthy of note was the emphasis placed upon the church and its duties and responsibilities. Naturally evangelism was stressed as the church's first task, and we may well allow that duty to loom up large in our spiritual horizon. The life and progress of the church depend on the faithfulness with which it gives itself to evangelism. Its relation to the great Head of the church was also pointed out, and also the necessity of keeping itself unspotted from the world. Two very practical problems facing the church received consideration—one growing out of marriage and family relations and the other growing out of the Christian's relation to earthly governments in time of war. Doctor Bauman treated these problems in a way that called forth the commendation of many and challenged the thought of others. It is a hopeful sign that such vital and intensely practical problems are beginning to receive such serious attention as was given them at this conference. The problems are not settled, so far as the church is concerned, nor is the accepted Brethren attitude yet fully determined. But the interest of men was aroused in them and committees were appointed to study them and bring in recommendations with regard to proper Christian attitude toward them. There are other fields of practical religion that we need to be stirred up about, and doubtless we will eventually give them our more serious attention, but in the meantime we are grateful that the Holy Spirit is leading us in an endeavor to face frankly our duty toward the problems of marriage and divorce and of war.

It was encouraging also to observe the spirit of confidence in the future of the church that seemed to possess the leadership and the readiness manifested to take such measures as seemed necessary to launch out upon that larger future, that is, to insure the growth that seems both possible and probably. We detected none of the feeling of fear expressed on previous occasions that possibly we were a diminishing denomination. There seemed to be on the contrary, a growing conviction that the world sorely needs the message and mission of our church and that if we are faithful to our trust we will inevitably be led into the larger place that God would have us to occupy. That growing confidence has a basis in fact, for we have gone forward during the past year, in spite of the financial depression that is abroad in the land. In some particulars we have advanced financially. The offering for the Home Mission Board for this last conference year was an increase of $4,097.22 over the offering made by the churches for the previous year. That is tantamount to a vote of confidence in the Board's aggressive policy. The Foreign Board's offering was increased $2,649.71 over the previous year. In membership the statistician reported "a net gain for the year of 1,395, which is almost twice that of the previous year" for the United States, the total reported membership being 28,140 and the total reported membership including our African and South American missions being 29,586. Those figures do not represent big gains, but they do represent gains, and in the face of prevailing conditions they are quite encouraging, and give warrant for a growing spirit of confidence.

Let us bear in mind, as Brother E. L. Miller pointed out in his Sunday morning conference sermon, that the church is "God's church", and with courage and confidence and willingness to do our part, let us work in cooperation with, and in obedience to, the great Head of the church that it may be in deed and in truth a victorious church and may accomplish the will of God in the world.

How Long is a Public Prayer?

Public prayer is a most important element of public worship and much thought should be given to it. It appears, however, that it gets very little attention, as a rule, neither as to its content, nor as to length. And bear in mind that the length is not to be left out of consideration. Ministers sometimes spoil good effects produced by their prayers by continuing on too long. It used to be thought that to guard the length of public prayer was to run the risk of quenching the Spirit. But we have come to understand that the accomplishment of the Spirit is not dependent upon time so much as zeal and sincerity, and that a worshipper is not heard of God nor respected by his fellow-worshippers for his much speaking. Sometimes the shorter prayer will go farther than the longer prayer we might make.

On the subject of the length of a public prayer, the Christian Standard has the following helpful suggestions:

Surely there is no value in a public prayer unless most of those in the audience are genuinely engaged in prayer. We who do not believe that preachers fulfill the ministry of priests can not accept the theory that it is enough if the preacher is truly in the spirit of prayer while he speaks the public petition. We believe that the only justification for public prayer must be that it actually leads the whole assembly in prayer. It is not a prayer for them, but a prayer by them.

Now it must be quite manifest that the average congregation has a time limit beyond which it will not remain in prayerful spirit. Possibly that maximum ought to be much greater, but what it ought to be and what it is are two different factors. There comes a time when the average gathering tires of the attitude (especially if standing) and becomes more conscious of other circumstances than of the prayer itself. The preacher's tone, his purpose, his clothes, his last visit to one's home, the seat neighbor's clothes, that troublesome cough of the man on the other side of the room—all these come to the fore in consciousness.

Of what value to carry on the form of prayer when the spirit of it has gone from the group? Aye, more, is it not a distinctly hurtful thing thus to train a congregation to go through a form when the spirit is not there? Is this not a species of hypocrisy? May not the preachers' very zeal for prayer thus defeat the true appreciation of prayer in those he would teach?

A preacher ought to keep very sensitive to the spiritual atmosphere of his group, and so study to prolong his public prayers no further than the point where they are genuine prayers to his people.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother and Sister Foster, furloughed missionaries from our African field, write us that they will spend the entire month of September visiting churches in Indiana and that they may be reached by correspondence at the following address: Joseph H. Foster, 209 New Street, Goshen, Indiana.

Dr. L. S. Bauman, one of the Bible lecturers of the late General Conference, arrived in Ashland together with his wife and after a business trip east, they will motor back to California by a southern route. He is pastor of the First Brethren Church of Long Beach.

Due to the prompt work of the General Conference secretary, Brother J. L. Gingrich, we are enabled to publish the report of the conference business sessions in this issue and we are giving to it all available space in order that the report may be as nearly completed in one issue as possible.

Brother and Sister N. W. Jennings were called from Lake on the first day of conference to hasten to the Mrs. Jennings' father, who was critically ill at Roanoke. Brother and Sister Archie L. Lynn, who traveled from with the Jenningses and whose home is also in Virginia, accompanied them on their journey.

Brother Floyd Sibert of Ellet, Ohio, informs us that, in illness of their baby, Mrs. Sibert was unable to fill her announced date for broadcasting over WAIU, Colura, and he substituted for her, delivering a sermon on "Forgetting God." Mrs. Sibert was given another date, September 5th, for the broadcasting of her address on "American Women."

An announcement just reached the home of the newborn child to Rev. and Mrs. Quinter M. Lyon of a little son, born June 26, 1931, and his name is David Beekley Lyon. On behalf of the Evangelist family we extend congratulations to Brother and Mrs. Lyon. Brother Lyon will be remembered as the recent contributor to the Sunday school lesson publications. He now has a position in Ohio State University and is working on a degree.

Work is going forward in the furnishing of the new House concerning which Prof. Alva J. McClain made mention in a recent issue of the Evangelist and it is expected ready for occupancy by the opening of school on September 1st. It is not too late for Sunday school classes, missions, and other similar organizations to help in the furnishing of rooms, the approximate cost of which is said to be $100 per room.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey, pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, and for many years editor of the Evangelist and a school literature, took suddenly ill as he was about to leave for the General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, where he was to preach one of the evening sermons and to read "Fifty Years in the Ministry," before the Brethren Association. We are just informed that he is in a hospital, and there is hope that he will thereby be able to avoid an operation. There was keen disappointment at the conference because of his enforced absence and sorrow for his critical illness. Let the prayers of God's people be for the throne of grace in his behalf.

Brother William Shaffer writes in his weekly church paper that his Sunday school is contemplating the establishment of a circulating library "to contain all manner of profitable literature." The membership is invited to donate good books for the library. We commend them for their aim and wish them success. We recall that the general secretary of the National Sunday School Association in his annual report to General Conference mentioned a goodly number of Sunday school libraries among our churches. The Association is doing a good work by fostering the establishment of libraries, not merely to encourage greater efficiency of Sunday school workers, but also more wholesome character of a general character. That reminds us that the Ashland Sunday school, through the initiative and under the direction of Guilford Leslie, is conducting a magazine exchange library. Members of the congregation are invited to bring their magazines, which they have read them and place them on the magazine table to take with them others that they may not have read. The supply of the best religious and secular magazines is on the table at all times available for reading by any one interested. It is a good idea. It pays to encourage people to read the best literature. An informed person is more useful, other things being equal, and more strongly fortified against error, than the uninformed person.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother E. J. Rohart, pastor of the church at Winona, writes: "The Lord willing, we plan to have a campaign for souls in our big tent the first three weeks of September (1-20). We covet the earnest prayers of every member in the brotherhood. The meetings will be under the leadership of Brother Leo Polman. We are looking forward to a great blessing in the Lord."

The Church--The Body of Christ

By Elder A. V. Kimmell

Moderator's Address at the General Conference

never was an hour when the Church needed to position in relationship to her Head, the Lord Christ, as in the present crisis. In the face of present conditions one could think the needs of the church material but this is far, far from the truth. Her needs are spiritual. Her needs are not dollars and possessions but she does need men and women of the Lord; who know how to pray and how to answer from God; who meditate upon the deep truths of the Word of God.

When a man was in a hard place it was Joshua who took the place of leadership after Moses. Did he take the place of Moses? He led Israel over the land. He prayed and food fell as dew from heaven; he had the rock and the water gushed forth. Who could take the place of Moses? When Joshua finally consented to lead the hosts of Israel what did he do? Did he plan an army? Did he organize an unemployed committee to rush around distributing baskets of food? Josh. 1:8 tells exactly what he did. "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest do according to all that is written therein: for thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success." Now note closely that when Joshua was followed Israel had food and clothes and had possessed the land.

Who is bound to reply that such a program will not solve the present world crisis and my answer is: that it will not work for the church is too busily occupied about material matters to give it a trial.

BRETHREN CHURCH IS A PART OF THE BODY OF CHRIST

The Brethren Church is in need of a renewed vision of God and majesty which attends the position of those members of the Body of Christ. Our gatherings are much occupied with plans, methods, and programs enough consideration is given to the fact that as we are a part of the "Mystical Body," the invisible church of the Living God. This "Mystical Body" or invisible church is so called because through the ages it was kept from view. Eph. 3:5 speaks of this Body of Christ, "Which in other ages was not made manifest to the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto the apostles and prophets by the Spirit." But the question here when all men may see and know as in the beginning of the same chapter, "And to make all men see the fellowship of the mystery (the mystical body, the church) which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." The church, the mystical body, is never mentioned in the New Testament. Applying Old Testament prophecies to the church is a sad misinterpretation of Scripture. Even the prophecies where the foundation for the church is begun and where the ordinances to be observed by the church are given, the church is held as still future. Our Lord said, "I will build my Church."

The church and Israel are not the same and much confusion has resulted from an attempt to apply Scripture to Israel to the church, the Body of Christ. The church and the Kingdom are not the same in spite of the use of the term in many religious circles. It is even painful at times to find preachers praying, writing or speaking of men being born into the Kingdom when they mean the Body, the church. I note that another address is to be given on this subject so I leave this point by saying that I hope the efforts of the whole Brethren Church in Soul Winning may produce results in conversion before the "Kingdom Comes" that those won to Christ may be Kings and Priests with him and reign with him through the Kingdom Age.

II. THE BEGINNING OF THE MYSTICAL BODY: The Invisible Church.

The Church, the Mystical Body was first called out on the day of Pentecost. Some of these called out believers had been prepared by months of fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ, the head of the body, and others heard the message for the very first time but all who received Jesus Christ as Lord by faith were saved, baptized and became members of the church, the mystical body. On that day the Holy Spirit descended, baptizing them into the one body. This was a complete act. The Holy Spirit is a Person, the third person of the Godhead. When he was given he was entirely given. The Holy Spirit thus entirely given, completely given, is here now. He never has been withdrawn. This is the day or the age of the Holy Spirit, officiating and operating through the church, the mystical body. Why not recognize his leadership and even in difficult times rest contentedly in his abiding presence? At this point it seems timely to suggest that crying for another Pentecost is all wrong, singing for another Pentecost as some of our hymns request is conveying an unscriptural idea. Tarrying meetings pleading for the baptism of the Spirit are plain error. I repeat, the Holy Spirit is a Person he came as a complete personality. He is here—All of him. Therefore it is foolish to cry that he may come when he is already here—It is just as reasonable to demand that Christ be crucified again.

It is not a question of the believer having the Spirit. All who receive Jesus Christ by faith have the Spirit. If you have part of him you have all of him for he is not divided he is not cut up in parts and pieces to be apportioned out in response to enthused petitioners. Here is the vital question: Believer: Does the Spirit have you? So many Christians are only partly yielded to Christ. When your life is completely yielded the Spirit possesses full control. This is in harmony with the Scriptures which say, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," and "Be ye filled with the Spirit."

III. CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

1. If "God so Loved the World that he gave his only begotten Son" is the Golden Text of the Bible then, "Christ so loved the church that he gave himself for it," should be the Golden Text of the New Testament. That Christ gave himself for the church no true believer will deny. While no mention of the body, the church, is made in the Old Testament we find due provision being made for it. The church was in the mind of God before the worlds were made. A splendid type is to be found in the creation of the woman given as a help meet to Adam:

"And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam." This typifies the death of our Lord upon the cross. As Adam slept the Lord God opened his side and took therefrom a rib. While Jesus Christ was in the sleep of death his side was opened, pierced, with a spear, and the blood gushed forth. From Adam was taken bone: from the Lord was taken blood. Out of the bone Eve was made and with the blood of the Christ of Calvary the church of the living God was purchased. Thus early in the history of man the coming of the church was finely typified. Women, in the Bible are not always a type of good as in the case of the woman who hid the leaven in the meal or the woman who is to ride the scarlet beast and the church has not always been true to her head but at such times she has lost sight of the fact that she is loved with an eternal love by the Father and by the Son and by the Holy Spirit. If in this present hour the deepening apostacy is pressing closer it is because the church has lost her first love and no longer worships the person of Christ but has turned to and is occupied with the things the church has brought to view, therefore worshipping the creation more than the Creator. May this conference direct our love and devotion to the Person of Christ.

2. The proof of Christ's love for the church is that he gave himself for it. This great truth is given in the parable of the Pearl of great price in Matthew thirteen. A pearl is the perfect symbol of the true church. A pearl is formed by accretion and that not mechanically, but vitally, through a living one. Christ sold himself under the sins of the world to purchase redemption for the church; the pearl of great price. He offered no substitute. His creation was pronounced good but he did not offer it. The arch angels are a high order of created beings but he offered neither Gabriel nor Michael in his place. He gave himself. "He loved me and gave himself for me." This puts the church separate, apart and high above any organization known to man. It is in a class altogether by itself. To use methods and try schemes that seem successful in other lines would be entirely out of place and often actually sinful if used in the church, the body of Christ. How often the Lord must be grieved to note the disgrace brought on the church by those who claim to be members when they seek by worldly means to make her effective and popular with men. There are those who place the lodges, fraternities, clubs, and sororities before the church of the Living God. What a shame to the blood purchase of our Lord. Why is it that the church has lost her influence and fails to command respect in so many places? It is because her leaders and her preachers too often ignore and fail to teach that "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." No doubt all the pastors as well as myself have been flooded with every sort of financial scheme to tide the church over the times of depression. Have we been able to always reply, "I am not interested, the church of Christ is too divine to be caught in worldly methods" or has this excuse been used to drag the church into begging or bartering or gambling, or buying and selling for gain? If we can somehow inspire the delegates of this Conference to see the place of the church as the Body of Christ, and the dignity, honor and respect that is due her because of this position we will have done more to assure a successful year than the combined work of Boards and committees. This does not mean that we are so visionary as to fail to appreciate the necessity for Boards and Committees.

3. Christ sanctifies the church, "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." The Brethren Church need not be afraid of that word sanctification. It has been abused, it is true, but this should not cause us to neglect the doctrine. If sanctification means to be holy then let the Brethren Church be holy—for to be either sanctified or holy mean "To be set apart for God." If worldliness haunts our beloved church until we can no longer lay separation, then God have mercy on the Brethren. The amusements offered by this present world are severing the body, which is the church, from the head which is the Christ. It's about the same old story—dance, shows, etc., etc., only the difference is that the church too often has invited them into her precincts. With what results? Sports and pleasures about emptied the churches on the Lord's Day. Dances and the movies have killed hundreds of meetings. Sunday automobile trips have won the spiritual lives of many church officials, and the Sunday school teachers from their classes. A separated church will keep us from the above, then we pray for a sanctified church.

The strange situation with regard to the practical stress is that the pleasures, the sports, the extensive traveling keeps up just as in the day of old and many church members who can no longer go to the church still go to ball games, the movie houses, the autos running.

Now a remarkable provision Christ has made for the church is that he keeps and cleanses true believers as he separates or sanctifies them unto himself.

Sanctification is setting apart.

Cleansing is keeping apart.

Sanctification is the inward work.

Cleansing is for the outward walk.

Cleansing provides for the contracted defiler. Every pilgrim passes through a world of corruption. Christ sanctifies and cleanses his church. No body of men should stress this more than the Brethren, for we gather about the Lord's table and prepare for the taking of the sacrament we pause for the washing of the saints' feet we practice in symbol the cleansing of the Christian from the contacts with the world. For the practice of this ordinance should be in the church.

4. Christ Preserves and cares for his Church.

The church visible of which we shall speak has received many, many hard blows. Some of the most serious others given as the mark of Satan's wrath. The church, the Mystical Body, is as triumphant as ever, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This church of true believers shall have no outward defilement; no blemish—no inherent weakness—no sigh of decrepitude or lack of vitality. In other words the real church is in a perfect state of preservation—kept by the power of God. What figment of the so-called optimist can begin to compare with the facts as revealed in the Word of God. Christ not only preserves the church, he also nourishes and cherisheth it. Truly he is El Shaddi, the Almighty—El signifies the "Strong One"—"Shad" is the Hebrew word variably used in Scripture for a woman's breast. El Shaddi means—"The Strong Breasted One." As a fretful, hungry babe is strengthened, nourished and finds every element necessary to its growth from the milk supplied at the mother's breast so the true church finds herself supplied and nourished by the milk of the Word—El Shaddi—The Almighty God. Christ the Lord, the sustainer, the very life of the church. Oh that we were a people calling themselves a church but rejecting their head the Lord Jesus Christ. Doubters may say that some churches rejecting him seem to prosper.

they are living on a stimulant and some day will in utter collapse.

THE VISIBLE CHURCH

is not a term of Scripture but has been coined by indicate the order and function of the church on d is perhaps as good a term as can be used. There no question but that the organization of local is according to the early practices of the first be- Local congregations were established in many and leaders or officers were selected, appointed or This gives us the visible church or the local con- a. We find no provision made in the Bible for de- ons and we are sure that it was intended that ould be one body directed by the Holy Spirit. How- ominations are with us. We who are members inations are not responsible for them, we inher- 1. However the question of what we are going to this inheritance is being considered by most Pro- bodies. The denominations which have made an ward church union have gone but a few steps in ction so it can truthfully be said that there is ame only. The movements to this end have been ral to say the least and impress the observer with f definite convictions on the part of those who it. It seems to be a sorry state of affairs when practically say, "I no longer have a stated belief willing to yield any doctrine in order to bring leration."

also worthy of serious consideration at this point dly that there is a willingness to surrender fun- doctrines much faster than to give up the ordi- practiced by the various denominations. This alone e a danger signal for our church. Thus there are o would more quickly give up the doctrine of the Christ than to yield to either sprinkling or im- as the mode of baptism. I am citing these cases that the real serious problems of church union eing discussed but the argument centers about s which becloud the deeper issues involved with that the popular demand will bring about union nor matters and that the doctrines eternal as self may be completely submerged without a ser- t being made in their defence. Thus many who t deny the fundamentals of faith give consent by the discussions at Brethren conferences and the some published articles it is not difficult to see e of our leaders still think that manner of dress of service, or the traditions of the elders, are the questions at issue and that these objections have been outgrown or should have been forgotten long since. Certainly these have been outgrown or should have been long ago, but these are only minor issues. Then there are those who think that the bitterness caused through dis- sension of past days is keeping the Brethren church from seeking union with others of similar practices. If an un- forgiving spirit over wrongs fancied or real still main- tains it is in the breasts of those who have not the mind of Christ for we are expressly told to, "Let all bitterness, and wrath and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you with all malice: and be ye kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Therefore it is inconceivable that any considerable number of the Breth- ren should be influenced by such motives.

The real issue is a question of Fundamental Doctrine. What would happen to our boasted slogan, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible" if we should unite with any body observing certain practices that even our brethren looking forward to church union would insist on being maintained? When we speak of this slogan we have in mind the meaning given by our forefathers, a meaning which in their day means a literal application and inter- pretation of the Word. When men were not trying to dodge a plain statement as to the Deity of our Lord, the Virgin birth, the Substitutionary Death and the bodily Resurrection with well worded phrases or cloudy interpre- tations. I repeat what would happen our slogan including these great fundamental doctrines if we were to surrender our churches, our institutions and our members to the in- fluences of other larger bodies.

The Brethren Church right now occupies an enviable position: During the past year we have not learned of one Brethren pulpit being prostituted by the preaching of modernism. Perhaps in some places more attention is given to a social order than in others but no outright de- nial of the fundamentals.

Read every page of our literature, Brethren Evange- list, Brethren Missionary, Brethren Witness, Brethren Teacher, Sunday school quarterlies or tracts published by our pastors and who can find one sentence when fairly understood which directs any criticism toward the Deity of our Lord and his finished work or the infallibility of the Holy Scriptures.

We point with pardonable pride to the doctrinal posi- tion boldly taken by the professors in Ashland Seminary and the fact that in no uncertain tones they declare them- selves to accept without reservation the fundamental doc- trines of the Christian faith. Furthermore we have the confidence to believe that the new preachers being trained by them for pastors of our churches will follow in this same deep conviction. Furthermore Ashland College seeks to do her work in a Christian atmosphere and with ideals that lead to Christian character.

These coveted places were not reached in one day nor in one year. They were not gained without effort and many a battle. They came through much prayer and pro- longed effort. Then why even think of yielding the posi- tion thus gained by seeking union with those who are threatened or endangered by modernism. Therefore we recommend that the Brethren Church keep her eyes fixed upon her Lord and pursue her God given task with dili- gence and be not entangled with the affairs of others. Ap- parently the time we have as a church to gather the har- vest is short. Let us be about the Master's business that many more precious sheaves may be garnered before the harvest is ended.

Sharing Conference with Those not There

NATIONAL CONFERENCE AND THE BIBLE HOUR

By C. A. Stewart

Our National Conference is always a cause for rejoicing because of the fellowship, inspiration, and the consciousness that we are permitted to plan together, with the Holy Spirit as our director, the work of the Lord. And when it is all over there is always the joy of going over the entire program in our own minds and our hearts are warmed when our minds rest upon some part of the program that carried us up and lifted us to a higher plane.

For us our conference has been a joy and blessing, especially the eleven o'clock hour, when we were taken into the very presence of God in a way that some of us never realized before, by every speaker. Every subject discussed by these speakers was very timely and of the utmost importance. While these subjects were some of the deepest and most important, they were discussed in such a way as to make them clear and understandable by all present, which makes us feel that the impressions made by such stupendous truths as were presented to us, will not soon be forgotten. To my own mind this hour alone was well worth all the time and effort put forth and all the money spent to attend conference. There was the manifestation of the leadership of the Holy Spirit in the delivery of every one of those messages, and those who listened felt that they were looking through windows into the deep things of God. Every member of the Brethren Church should praise God that he has among us men whom he is able to use in such a wonderful way. Our conference may not be the largest, but the type of men and the wonderful way in which God has been able to use them to present his Word without fear or favor, ought to cause us to rejoice. One of the greatest comforts to me is the way our ministry presents the Word, and after all that is the message the world needs, and all that our Lord and Master has commissioned us to preach.

OUR IMPRESSIONS OF CONFERENCE

By Samuel J. Adams

We wish first to thank God for his goodness and mercy in granting to us the blessings of such a wonderful conference. The depression many thought would keep folks away but the opposite was true. Our own heart was warmed by the positive note heard in the preaching of the Word. Morning, noon and night through the Word the Lord Jesus Christ was glorified and this is always a joy unspeakable. With the work of the winter ahead we should not forget the things we have heard. We should faithfully and willingly serve him, not as men pleasers but as those whose desire is to serve aright.

The messages brought to us in song we cannot overlook and the manner in which this part of our conference program was cared for was wonderful. Let us hope, if the Lord tarries, we shall next year have this task placed in the hands of the one who cared for it so well this year.

Our days were full, yet the attractiveness of the program found every service well attended. After a busy day we gathered together in the evening for the Bible study and evening message. These messages were the result of study and thought, sending us home to think about him. The Devotional Bible studies pictured for us the Lord Jesus as King and Deliverer, Savior and Wonderful One. These, followed by themes regarding Christian living and work, guided by the Holy Spirit "hands full of purpose."

We thank God for a ministry and a message to be used to his name's honor and glory. May God give us grace to walk worthy of the blessings of our conference and enable us to plan for the next, even to him for all things, and the one who will guide us aright.

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

5. The washing of feet as commanded by every element of a sacred rite.

- (1) It has the example of Jesus (Jn. 13:5).
- (2) It has a spiritual significance (vs. 8).
- (3) It has the command to observe it (vs. 14).
- (4) It has a punishment for those who refuse (vs. 8).
- (5) It has a promise of blessing for those who observe (vs. 17).
- (6) It has a precedent in the types of the old law (Ex. 20:30; Num. 9:6-13).
- (7) It has the sanction of apostolic practice (1 Cor. 11:23-25).

6. Feetwashing was practised as a rite by the church.

Giving the conditions of receiving a widow into the church, Paul mentions among other things "that they have washed the saints' feet" (1 Tim. 5:10). This cannot be considered as a simple act of hospitality, for hospitality is first named as something "If she have shown hospitality." Besides hospitality required only water that a guest might wash his feet (Lk. 7:44), but here the washing is required. It was to be shown by Christians to all (Heb. 13:2). This was only for saints or believers. Paul was careful to avoid all appearance of evil, but for a man to wash the feet of a man not her husband would be considered scandalous. It must therefore require participation in the rite in the church.

Tertullian (200 A. D.) mentions the ablutionary to the Lord's supper and names the article of feetwashing.

Irenaeus, disciple of Polycarp, who was a disciple of John, says, "He who washed the feet of the disciples purified all the body."—Ad haer. 2:1.

Clement of Alexandria (153 A. D.) says, "We go to the sacrifices and prayers (the Lord's supper) washed and clean, and this adornment and purification is practised as a symbol"—Stromata 4:2.

This testimony reveals that the rite was practised in Egypt fifty years after it was suppressed in Asia by order of Pliny the governor, the emperor had forbidden secret meetings. The Lord's supper was ordered a secret meeting because it was only for Christians. It was restored also in other places, and in the fourth century Augustine says, "We commend your attention to this act of the Lord, who when he washed the feet of his disciples, which were already washed and clean, instituted a symbol. What else can the Lord intend in the profound significance of this sacrament?" (Jn. 13).

The first opposition to the rite was manifested of Elvira in 307. But the council of Toledo in 694 that any one refusing to participate in the feet-washing should be excluded from the communion. The practice of feetwashing still exists in perverted form in the Greek, Armenian and Roman Catholic churches, and has been restored in the apostolic form in evangelical denominations.

Historians testify to the practice in the early church. Alford in his Commentary says, "This washing was the necessity of being cleansed from the daily sinning even after being regenerated."

The Bible Encyclopedia says, "The washing of feet is one of the rites practiced in the apostolic church."

Ward's Church History says, "The washing of feet described in John 13 seems to respond to the conception of baptism. On Thursday before Easter the feetwashing was observed along with the agape or supper and the resurrection."

Better than the testimony of historians is the testimony of experience. "If any man will do his will he shall abide in the teaching." Many doubts are born of unwillingness to obey. The observance of this rite will prove itself to exist. Observing it in the spirit, understanding its meaning, will actually produce the spirit of abnegation for which it stands, thus confirming the promise, "I know these things happy are ye if ye do them." In his book, "Life and teachings of Jesus Christ," printed by L. Selbie, speaking of feetwashing says, "This is the sacrament, the 'sacrament of service' as it has been called, which the Christian church would do well to observe as scrupulously as she has celebrated the sacrament of communion. It sets forth in a beautiful and unimpeachable fashion, the real spirit of Christianity, the spirit which Jesus inculcated upon his followers and of which he was himself the perfect embodiment."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

MODEST APPAREL

Bathing is one of the most wholesome of our recreations, and it is almost impossible to entice people to resorts where there is not an abundance of water and attractive beaches. And where people there would be no better place of association than the lakes and on the sands of the seashore, but for one thing. The manufacturers of bathing costumes have been cutting down the attire until the line of decency has been passed, and we must say that it is time to call a halt.

Unclothed savages in Africa, when they accept Christianity, receive instruction regarding the putting on of clothes. In the process we push us back to savagery we think it is time to protest. Summer we have talked with many who would like to dress modestly for their daily swim, but the complaint is the same. The stores are not handling longer suits, and they are for what they desire in vain.

We think it is time that the principle which led to the change in the Old Testament that the sexes should be distinguished by their dress, that the women should not wear man's clothes be re-asserting in Christian circles.

It is not written by one who desires to be anciently puritan. The writer believes that as a whole the dress of today is no more to be decried than the foolish fashions of fifty years ago. It has given us no uniform or special garb as a mark of Christianity, but it has laid down the simple principle that we should wear "modest apparel." Any Christian desirous of pleasing God in this sphere will have no difficulty in determining what is becoming. And this can be done without making ourselves conspicuous. We recall the testimony of a simple-hearted man who said: "When I refused any longer to be a guy for the Lord, I tried to make me a scarecrow for God." Christian modesty avoids both.—The Evangelical Christian.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

2 Cor. 5:1-4. "We know"—there are so few things in this life that we can really say we know; we believe, or think, or hope a thing is so, but what added satisfaction in being able to say we know! There could be no more fruitful theme for our meditation and devotion this morning than simply to sum up how we know the great truth set forth here, and realize anew the firm foundation upon which our faith rests. Certain "free-thinkers" have criticised the church because they say we worship death; perhaps they have heard some rather maudlin expressions, or perhaps they have not fully understood our words; it is not that any of us wish for death—rather, we wish for fuller life. When the struggle to live becomes especially trying, it is only natural that we long for the better life, and the house eternal.

TUESDAY

2 Cor. 5:5-8. That mortality might be swallowed up of life—this is the very thing for which God hath wrought us! This means not merely in the resurrection of the body, but in the resurrection of our lives here and now from the forces of sin and death. One direct evidence of this is in the testimony of God's Spirit within our spirits, by means of which we walk with confident faith. They that have been justified by God need not fear to enter into his presence!

WEDNESDAY

2 Cor. 5:9-13. It is well to remember that even though absent from the Lord, we are still in his presence, and the all-important thing is that whether absent or present we may be accepted of him. The judgment seat of Christ is the place where the believer receives the reward for the race which he has run with patience. However, we can easily understand the terror of the man who knows he should have done certain things and failed to do them. Having been saved from this terror, we MUST persuade others!

THURSDAY

2 Cor. 5:14-17. The Christian's whole rule of living is summed up in these words: "The love of Christ constraineth us." No matter what it is that comes up to be decided, the question is: Shall I live to please myself? or shall I live to please him? And the answer is ever the same: The love of Christ constraineth us! In this alone we have evidence that in Christ we are new creatures, for we no longer please ourselves, but we take pleasure in the things of Christ, and all things in our lives are of God.

FRIDAY

2 Cor. 5:18-21. We have been reconciled to God through Christ, and he has in turn committed unto us the ministry of reconciling others to him. What a wonderful mission is ours: envoys of God and his Christ, as though God were speaking through us, entreating men to be reconciled to him! And what a wonderful message we have for the world: that through the finished work of Christ even our trespasses are not imputed to us!

SATURDAY

2 Cor. 6:1-3. Our privilege in Christ is great: we may be workers together with him who created the heavens and the earth and all that in them is. He hath succored us, and we are his "new creation;" what sobering thought in the words of this passage, implying that unless we do in turn strive to reconcile others to God, we have received the grace of God in vain!

SUNDAY

2 Cor. 6:4-7. In these few verses a number of things are mentioned by which we may prove that we are true ministers of God (as used here, minister simply means servant, and the layman is as truly a minister as the ordained elder). Let us consider each of these things. Whether or not they have their proper place in OUR life: how about persecution? Watchings? fastings? pureness? kindness? the Holy Ghost? the word of truth? the power of God? the armor of personal righteousness on either hand? May we truly be approved ministers of God!

The Holy Spirit and the Bible

By Leander S. Keyser, D.D., Professor of Systematic Theology, Hanna Divinity School, Springfield, Ohio

II. The Holy Spirit Begets a True Experience Through the Bible

The Holy Spirit works in an orderly way in begetting a Christian experience—that is, in calling, enlightening, regenerating and sanctifying the human soul. He uses the divinely appointed means of grace, and especially the Word of God. The Holy Spirit baptizes the penitent believer with fire—but not with wild fire. It is spiritual fire under divine control.

All these facts are beautifully in accordance with right thinking and reasoning. Since the Holy Spirit has indited the Bible, it is reasonable and congruous to believe that he would honor the Bible and use it as his instrument in converting men and impinging upon their consciousness the experience of his redeeming love and grace.

The Facts About Christian Experience

By canvassing the history of Christian experiences we shall find that every true conversion has been begotten by the Holy Spirit through the Word of God. On the day of Pentecost, Peter preached a powerful sermon, using the Old Testament history and prophecy as his text, while he himself spoke under the influence of the Holy Spirit; and it was after the preaching of the Word, that men cried out, "What shall we do?" and when Peter gave them further instruction in the way of faith and salvation, three thousand of them bent the penitent knee and received the gift and experience of the Holy Ghost.

The conversion of the Ethiopia eunuch is another conspicuous instance. As he rode along in his chariot, he was reading a portion of the Old Testament; but he could not understand it until Philip explained it to him and showed him that the prophecy was fulfilled in Jesus Christ. Then he accepted Christ and submitted to baptism. The same principle holds in the conversion of Cornelius, the Philippian jailor and the apostle Paul. In every case some divinely guided word of God preceded the experience of conversion.

Moreover, where do we learn the true way of salvation? In the Bible, and only in the Bible. It is only through the Bible that we know of the love of God in sending his Son into the world. It is only in the Bible that we learn of the fact and the work of the Holy Spirit. How do we know that there ever was a Pentecost in the history of redemption? We know it only through the record we have of it in the Bible. These matters, so fundamental to our well-being here and hereafter, were written down and gathered together in a holy book that would preserve them from generation to generation in their truth and integrity; and thus they become the inerrant channel through which he performs his gracious work in the hearts of men.

The Testimony of the Word

The Holy Scriptures bear clear witness regarding the source of the new birth. They say that regenerated men are "born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1:13). Again, they teach that men must "be born of water and the Spirit" (John 3:5). And again they speak of men "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Pet. 1:23). All these passages teach the same vital doctrine. When they are correlated, they mean that God and the Holy Spirit employs the Word of God as his vehicle for bringing saving truth to the human soul.

Our Lord clearly taught the same: "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I spake, the same shall judge him in the last day" (John 12:48). Yes, even the final divine judgment will be according to the norm of God's Word, and that carries with it the truth that God operates through his Holy Word.

With this teaching Paul's doctrine agrees: "For whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? ... So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:13-17).

Why do we insist that the Holy Spirit performs his gracious work in the human heart through the Word of God? Our purpose is to defend and save the Church from fanaticism and false illuminism and mysticism. If time and space permitted, we could cite many instances in history to show the harmful effects of a false illuminism which leads men to think that their experience is something superior to the teaching of the Bible; that they are directly enlightened by the Holy Spirit, so that they are independent of the Word. We hold that a true, Biblically-begotten experience of pardon and salvation can never turn about and hack the Bible to pieces, the very instrument through which it was begotten by the Holy Spirit.

To sum up, what is the relation of the Holy Spirit to the Word of God? It is this: (1) The Holy Spirit indited the Word, so that it is all divine. (2) The Holy Spirit honors the Word and uses it as his vehicle for begetting the work of grace in the human heart.—The King's Business.

As long as there is money in war, and glory, the altruism of peace will have poor sledding.

The Church--The Body of Christ

V. IN THE FIELD OF EVANGELISM

We wish to note the evangelistic work of the Brethren Church under three divisions.

1. Evangelistic Meetings which have been held in the churches the past year have brought results. The old type of meetings that told men they were sinners and pointed the way to salvation through belief in Jesus Christ is never out of date. While some churches are departing from the evangelistic platform, we commend that every Brethren Church urged to have at least one real revival during the coming year. Let the larger churches assist the smaller by the lending of even in a greater measure than in the past year. Let the churches that think they cannot afford a meeting ask the Lord to save them; they are not worth any sacrifice and the small churches will have to do it. We recommend that the Evangelistic Bible Study League be reorganized and made effective in the field of evangelism this coming year. Soul winning is one of the two supreme tasks of the church and we must not neglect it.

2. The Home Mission Board Is Active

The work of this Board can be traced under Evangelism for the air. One of its members is to train every church member in the work of soul winning. The Board has conducted a number of these meetings and many souls have accepted Christ as Lord. We believe this Board is honestly endeavoring to follow the recommendations of past Moderators and is bringing the now dependent churches to report that other places may be occupied by whole gospel preaching. The funds of the Board are quite a bit larger than last year and every pastor should see that the needs are fully presented to the people in order that many thousands of dollars above the ordinary being given may be available for the work.

There is a feeling in our churches that small churches are doomed to die, and that we must try to save them. This may be true, but it is not the plan for the spread of the gospel. We believe that new work will begin in the more populous centers and also believe in conserving the small churches. Our Lord did some of his best work with small groups of people. Members of small churches should be encouraged with a conviction of the need for their continued existence and should be made to see that by united effort and some sacrifice churches now having part time service or irregular preaching have a preacher on the job the year around. The small church will then find itself the center of enthusiasm and power which will accomplish real progress for him.

In reaching out to the goal set for missions not every one will understand the plans adopted by the Board and some might hope to attain the same results by different methods but every one should be in mind that this Board is composed of representative men; many of them from all our districts and that they are giving their time and their best thought

are truly grieved by any movements which embarrass the progress of our Home Board, and we greatly deplore divisions of groups or individuals which hamper any work so vital to the present needs of the church.

The Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren Church is primarily evangelistic school work as is being done on the fields is merely to enable the native to read the Bible or to teach and evangelists and National workers to do their own Brethren. The medical work of the foreign work is for the purpose of strengthening the body that the gospel may be planted to the soul. Many do come to the loaves and fishes but some remain upon the Bread of Heaven. The year has been a most successful one for the Foreign Society. Two new missionaries have been sent out and none have been recalled from the field. Several are on furlough but are only waiting for their bodies have regained sufficient strength to justify returning to the station. The preliminary or the pioneer work that about reached the point on both where real permanent work can now be effective. Both South America and Africa were built from the ground up. A considerable indeed has been the progress in a few short years. We have many thousands of dollars worth of property on all paid for and not a dollar of either field. The missionaries are not or have received their allowances by the transmission of some bills and from the stations to the office of the Treasurer keeps us from saying that the Foreign Board does not owe a dollar.

over the fields are just ready to be harvested. Will we let the corn die in the field? Will we let the grain rot on the stalk? No! No! is your answer. We will take the harvest. Will you say the of these lost souls and go forth to the land? Your past prayers and have enabled our workers to enter the land your present and future prayers permit them to possess the land in the name of Jehovah? Frequently we hear one asking if the limit has been reached in the giving of the Brethren to Foreign Missions, and in these years the question becomes important. Never the intention of the Foreign Board to urge the Foreign work to the hurt of other interest of the church and this always asks itself if a proposed foreign work is fair to all the other departments of the church seeking to be absolutely fair to the whole brotherhood. Several of our Board has dropped or delayed actions that seemed essential to its progress in order to give some other the right of way. However, a survey of the work of several departments giving consideration to all the involved: missions, education, extension, and local current extension, etc., gives the Brethren Church the right to contend that the gifts to Foreign Missions can more than double the amount given before there is displacing too much emphasis on Foreign Missions. In other words the Brethren with its present membership should give one hundred thousand dollars to Foreign Missions and also keep up its obligations to all other interests of the church.

While this statement will stagger some there are others who will praise the Lord God that the Brethren Church is fast learning the blessings which attend sacrificial giving. We cannot reach this goal in one year nor in two in fact the year before us may be the greatest test of our whole history, but by the grace of God and the help of the members it will eventually be done, should the Lord tarry.

Acts 1:8: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

VI. THE MINISTRY OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH.

In this closing item we wish to say a few things about the ministry or the pastors and preachers of the church. The Brethren Church has reason to be proud of her ministry. The old veterans of the cross are growing old graciously, they are sympathetic and encouraging to the younger brethren. The young men of the ministry are taking their callings seriously and thought not long faced and sorrowful they show that they understand that the biggest, grandest task in the world confronts them and they are deliberately and diligently applying themselves to it. For this the church should be grateful. That larger group, the middle aged ministers, upon whose shoulders rest the burdens in the heat of the day, these are not faltering. Whether in executive capacity, teaching or preaching with a very few exceptions they are faithfully performing their duties. The church as a whole is entirely too lax in showing appreciation of these faithful servants of Jesus Christ.

1. The Calling of Ministers.

During the last year, as in previous years, several new men have been ordained to the ministry of the church. Practically all the District Conferences have Ministerial Examining Boards to look into the physical, moral, educational and spiritual qualifications of the applicant that such boards may assist the congregations in the ordination of ministers. This is entirely proper as the Bible plainly states that certain qualifications should be met. The purpose of presenting this matter is to call attention to the fact that there is more or less variation in the standards maintained in the various districts, some being what might be called high standards and others somewhat indifferent. Inasmuch as the pastors often move from one district to another, it seems for the sake of uniformity and efficiency, one standard should govern all the districts. Therefore, we recommend that the faculty of Ashland Seminary be asked to secure copies of the present standards used by the Ministerial Boards and from these and other sources produce a guide to be used in all our districts in the examination of candidates for the Ministry of the Brethren Church. We believe that these men, while directly interested in giving our preachers the advantages of a Standard Seminary education, will at the same time recognize that the Lord calls men from various positions in life and that no barriers will be erected which will keep one called of God from exercising his rights as a preacher of the gospel.

2. Last of all we are kindly calling the attention of our ministers to a situation that needs immediate correction, namely the lack of faithful attendance to the General Conference sessions by the preachers who are on the grounds. This neglect is noticed by laymen, some of them from churches which pay the expenses of their pastors to the Conference. It is also noticed by friends not members and by visiting speakers who may be invited in. It is true that visiting is one of the happy features of this annual gathering but it is also true that this could be arranged for between sessions and thus due attention be given to the program. If there are those who deliberately refuse to come into the auditorium during the sessions they should most certainly be courteous enough and polite enough to remove themselves from sight and sound of the meeting place, the auditorium. Not once, but many times a pastor speaking from the platform has had to see groups of preachers who should have been inside listening, creating detractions on the outside. However, every speaker on the General Conference Program is urged to bring a carefully prepared message and after having given time and energy to preparation he is entitled to a hearing, at least from preachers and delegates.

There are certain Board meetings which must be held during the time assigned for this purpose and the fact that some preachers are absent on Board matters excuses no others from regular and faithful attendance. We know of no rule to demand compulsory attendance, but we recommend that this matter be discussed in the Ministerial Association with sufficient vigor to place a moral obligation upon the shoulders of every pastor or preacher.

VII. CONCLUSION.

Remembering again the high calling of the church, the body of Christ, we urge that this Conference be faithful to her trust, that the churches at large be true to their head and obey the voice of her Master and that every member be diligent in service while awaiting the coming of the Lord.

Certificate of Auditing Committee

I hereby certify, that I have audited the books of the Missionary Board of the Brethren Church for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1931, and in my opinion, the foregoing statements of receipts and disbursements are correct statement for the period mentioned.

E. W. BAUMGARTNER,

Cashier, Bank of Berne, Berne, Ind.

The Statistician, George Cone, brought a very interesting and encouraging report which was received, with the thanks of the conference and asked to be spread upon the minutes. It reads as follows:

STATISTICIAN'S ANNUAL REPORT

Another conference year has become history and we are gathered here at beautiful Winona Lake to recount the work of the past year and plan for the months ahead.

The District Statisticians have given their willing cooperation in the work of gathering the reports from the various churches. Most of the churches have responded, all but sixteen. Some of those were pastorless, others were not reached because of change of secretaries and some were just plain neglectful. We have records sufficiently accurately kept for the year that we can now be nearly in the report of the churches.

This year, thanks to Miss Johansen and the pastors of the South American churches, we have a report from the American churches direct to the Statistician. It is to be hoped that other year the same may be true churches in Africa. We believe will be if the statistician elected at conference will make it his business such a report.

This year we have 158 churches, 16 not reporting, making a total of 174 churches. Union houses, school houses used, 14. There are sonages and 13 other properties of these churches.

The membership is: Male, 11,129; 15,465 and unclassified, 1,546, making a total of 28,140, this being the membership of the United States of America.

Additions by letter and relation and by baptism, 1,868; totaling 2,138 by death, letter, etc., 740, leaving a total for the year of 1,395, which is almost that of the previous year. There were revivals held.

The prayer meeting attendance of churches is an average of 2,076 per church.

Properties valued at $2,386,099; church houses; $1,400.00 for union houses; $224,520.00 for parsonages, and other property, $74,020.00, totaling 2,686,039.

In the functioning of these churches following expenditures were made: Pastors' salaries, $146,240.60; evangelists, $12,005.76; current expenses, $966.71; improvements, $25,553.40; missions, $7,145.49; home missions, $101.51; foreign missions, $32,566.47; annuated ministers, $1,962.54; 1st Home, $1,046.27; Ashland College, $75; Brethren Publishing Company, $723.75; and for miscellaneous expenses as church debts, Jewish missions, Gifts, etc., $16,717.04; making a total of $248,929.2999 spent in the maintenance of the work of the 158 churches.

These churches have a total of 311 deaconesses to help in the spiritual nurture of these various churches. There are 205 elders and reported by these churches.

We hasten to say that, because of the various sources of income, the report will not correspond with the report of the various boards and societies. Refer you to their reports for the full amount from other sources. The churches are way of knowing these incomes and amounts. We here give only the figures reported by the churches submitted reports, plus membership and church of which we are otherwise informed.

Our South American work has increased. There are 6 parsonages. They have a membership of 118 and female 201, 319 and there are 157 isolated churches making a total of 546 members. There were 7 added by letter, 65 by making a total addition of 72. The loss of 25, making a net gain of 47 were 10 revivals held. Every one of eight churches has prayer meeting total average attendance of 152. The houses are valued at 116,615 pesos; expenses were 1,605.25 pesos and income total 1,146; missions, 7,076, a total paid out of 5,322.90 and ries May 1. These churches have l elder with the exception of one.

give a little more detailed report outh American work than in the frican work reports 3 preaching and 5 churches, making a total established points of work. Com-

Thursday Morning

The morning session convened with singing "How Firm a Foundation" and the invoking of God's guidance upon the conference work of the day by Raymond Gingrich.

The Credential Committee made an additional report resulting in 85 ministerial and 195 lay credentials, or a total of 280 credentials. The report was officially adopted. The minutes of the previous business session were read and approved.

The next item of business was reading of the report of the Spiritual State of the Churches, which is as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE SPIR- ITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCHES

The report of this committee may not be all the sponsors of the committee expect and have a right to receive, but it is hoped that enough information may be given to show a way out of our present situation.

Since the committee was not appointed until late in the National Conference of last year and a number of those who are on the committee were not at conference, it was not possible to have a meeting of the committee for definite organization. The chairman was, therefore, compelled to take the initiative in the matter. The finest cooperation was given by members of the committee. There have been reports from every district but one. In some of the districts a very careful survey was made and a comprehensive report was given. In other districts the one who made the report was apparently sufficiently acquainted with the conditions to give a just estimate without a report from the pastors. In one district a report was received from all the pastors and in at least one other practically every pastor responded to the questionnaire sent out.

In some districts the condition is excellent. In others the condition is fair and in one district, the one making the report states that good church buildings have been closed and work stopped. Various reasons are given for the spiritual state of the churches but there are several outstanding things given that we do well to heed as a church. A few quotations from these reports may be enlightening. One report says: "I believe the Brethren Church as a whole is spiritually higher by a good deal than it has ever been before. There is a keener love for the deep things of Christ manifest generally in our churches. There is a greater tendency toward Bible study manifest everywhere. Our ministry is becoming more expository in its preaching.
There is a general loyalty to all denominational interests that is more manifest than I have ever before witnessed."

Another says, "There is one need, however, as I see it in this district and that is for a more constructive Bible teaching among our constituency. Reports show that most of our churches have evangelistic meetings year after year but there appears to me a lack of systematic, constructive Bible teaching. As a result many are not very deeply taught and are not deriving the joy from their Christian experience they should. The majority know little of dispensational truth. I think if somehow we could encourage more Bible preaching from our pulpits, i. e., doctrinal and dispen-sational preaching, more Bible classes in our churches, and more strictly Bible conferences in our districts we would see a deepening of spiritual life. I have noticed that those churches and districts that do these things are profiting thereby. One minister who has recently come into our district is working along this line and is finding a tremendous interest being aroused in his church and in the community. Folks from other churches are coming to have their souls fed. What little success we have had here in ——— I feel is due to constantly presenting the Word in pulpit, prayer meeting, Bible classes, etc."

Another one who reports says, "Permit me to say that this reply is based upon a report from every pastor in the district.
Therefore, it should be truly representative. The reports show the spiritual state of the churches to be above the average and still improving. We glean from the reports such statements as "walking in separation," "not hob-nobbing with the things of the world," "no cliques," "charity on the increase," "members cleaning up," "increased concern for the lost." I quote still further from this same report. "The contributing causes for the condition as we now find it are: (1) Pre-eminently preaching and everlastingly teaching the Word of God; (2) The good prayermeetings besides well attended mid-week services. Most of the churches of this district have group prayermeetings for intercessory prayer at stated times. The teaching and preaching of the Word has entered into the situation beyond computation. The great evangelical doctrines are emphasized constantly. The pulpits of the Brethren churches are ringing true to the Word. They have not time for discussions outside the spiritual realm."

I quote from still one other report: "Now, we are asked to report our findings. Why, we have had enough 'commissions' appointed in the last fifteen years, with their 'findings,' in most cases reported, to change the entire map; but what has been done about it? Nothing. In the Annual for 1926, page 6, is a report if the "Committee on Church Extension and Conservation." But what program, either district or national, has ever been built around the committee's findings? Why not some action? I think I shall say my all in two statements: What the church was twenty years ago, the ministers brought about; the church of today the ministers are responsible for. If conditions are to be changed in the future, the ministers will have to change them."

Many other illuminating quotations might be given but enough have been given to show the conditions and to point to a possible way out.

In EVERY CASE where the report stated that the spiritual state of the church is good the report also said that giving the Bible a large place in the preaching and teaching has brought this result. This means not simply emphasizing Bible truths but it means that the Bible must be known. In one report it is stated, "Brother _____ gave us a good meeting and emphasized the need for deepening the spiritual life but the conditions now are worse than ever." From the reports which have come there is but one answer as to the Word—it must be in the hearts of the people. The statement of Paul, Rom. 10:17, "So then, faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God," is still true. Only as the people learn to know the Word in such a way that its truths are grasped can they apply these truths to their own lives and only in this way will conviction come. Conviction is needed for without definite conviction there is no deepening of spiritual life. It is all too true that the Bible is a "sealed book" to the majority of folks. We think of the Bible as being a "sealed book" to the members of the Roman Catholic Church but we need know that only such parts of the Bible as we know and can appropriate in our individual lives are worth anything to us. Our Bible is no longer than the part we have made our own. As stated in one of the foregoing quotations the responsibility for the present condition rests with the ministry, also the leadership necessary to bring up to the place we should be as churches spiritually must be furnished by our ministers. We cannot escape this responsibility.

Another thing of vital importance, if we are to experience any benefit from the work of this committee, is to see that some action results from the information we have received. It is simply a waste of time and energy to find our ailments and suggested remedy and then pass these by without doing the things we are convinced should be done.

Respectfully submitted,
Committee on the Spiritual State of the Churches,

J. C. Beal, Chairman.

The above report was received and requested published in the Brethren Evangelist.

The recommendation of the Home Mission Board to elect the following brethren, H. F. Stuckman, C. C. Grisso and C. L. Anspach to membership, was passed.

The Brethren Home Board asked to have C. G. Wolfe to succeed himself for 5 years and Lester King as a new member for 5 years. This request was granted. A resolution from the Pennsylvania District Conference was read, which is as follows: "Moved that our District Conference delegates to National Conference be instructed to petition National Conference to authorize and execute plans for an endowment for the pensioning of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund."

A motion prevailed that a committee shall be constituted by this conference consisting of a representative from each of the conference districts and the members of the Board of Benevolences to study the problem and endeavor to formulate a plan for the accomplishment of aim of this memorial from the Pennsylvania Conference.

At this time a resolution from the Men's Bible Class from Ashland, Ohio, relative to war, was read, which is as follows:

"The members of the Men's Class of the Ashland First Brethren Church, being movingly convinced,

"(1) That the moral precepts of Christianity, as they are revealed by Jesus Christ, are in irreconcilable opposition to war; (2) that war, especially modern war, violates all Christian values; and (3) that the state that makes preparation for war and forces its citizens to share in the business of war de-Christianizes itself;

"Do urgently appeal to our brethren, to our National Conference, and to the Christian Church everywhere, to consider it their duty,

"(1) To protest continuously and fundamentally against the sin of war and war preparation; (2) to convince our nation that, in harmony with the Briand-Kellogg Peace Pact, it ought to assume the righteous risk of peace rather than assume the sinful risk of war; and (3) to create such sentiment, such understanding, and such organization at home and abroad, as will lead to international disarmament."

Unanimously adopted by the Men's Bible Class August 16, 1931.

Further adopted by the First Brethren Church.

The above resolution was referred to the special committee of the Ministerial Association.

The Conference moved that the conference secretary be authorized to write to Elder A. D. Gnagey, who is critically ill at home expressing the sympathy of the Conference for his forced absence for the first time since he began his ministry 50 years ago.

Upon motion to adjourn, Conference closed with prayer by L. S. Bauman.

Friday Morning

Regular morning session, devoted to business convened by singing, "I'll Live for Him," and the offering of prayer by S. Adams.

An additional report of the Credentials Committee resulted in 91 ministerial and 204 lay or a total of 295 credentials. The report was regularly adopted.

Minutes of the previous business session were read and approved.

By prevailing motion J. Wesley Platt was elected to represent Northern California on the new Executive Committee, which follows:

Ohio, Chas. A. Bame, J. Allen Miller
Southern California, A. J. McClain
Northern California, J. Wesley Platt

R. A. HAZEN, Auditor

By a vote of conference all financial reports given to conference should be read upon the minutes.

According to usual custom the Moderator appointed the following brethren, tons, L. G. Wood, Miles Taber, to pute the committee to convey frater-Christian greetings to the Eel River Conference in session.

in order was the report of the Com-of Fifteen relative to the Riverside, ky, situation and read as follows:

Winona Lake, Indiana,
August 27, 1931.

er a full and fair hearing of both par-the Kentucky controversy, a hearing vledged as eminently fair by the Com-from Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, ky, your Committee of Fifteen deto submit its findings to this Confer-for your approval.

committee desires to express its ap-tion of the fine spirit manifest on the of both the members of the Home Mis-board and the members of the com-from Lost Creek, Kentucky, during session.

Committee also desires to express iation for the real devotion of Broth-r Sister Drushal and their associates r work at Riverside Institute, and re-because of the far-reaching influence ir lives and work; but,

ERAS, absolute cooperation is neces-o carry forward successfully a mis-y program; and

ERAS, Brother Drushal, on his own ony, admits that he has not always orders of the Board, and refuses to romise of definite obedience in the
; and,

ERAS, Riverside Institute is, by tes-y of the workers, of the nature of a ial school; and,

ERAS The Brethren Church is not filly able to conduct parochial schools;

ERAS the local constituency at Lost Kentucky, is not able to meet the ial needs of the school,

IS THEREFORE RECOMMENDED by this ittee that this Conference give its val of the action of our Home Mission to close immediately the entire Riverstitute, Lost Creek, Kentucky, until ime as the Home Mission Board can

The report of the Committee on the Mod-erator's Address reads as follows and was officially adopted:

COMMITTEE ON MODERATOR'S AD- DRESS

1. We, your committee, desire to voice our approval of the high spiritual tone of the Moderator's report and believe that its publication and further study would be valuable as a Bible study on the church.

2. We commend the position taken on the solidarity of our movements toward church union. We believe that our churches should hold our organizations until such time in the providence of God we can move as a body and on the soundest of Scriptural basis.

3. The Conference will be further informed that a committee from the Ministerial Association is working upon the Uniform Ordination recommended by the Mod-erator's Report and needs no further action by the Conference now.

4. We recommend immediate action on the reorganization of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League by the officers of that league present at this conference; membership being on the basis of one dollar per member per year and workers employed on the basis of their acceptance of the Message of the Brethren Ministry.

(SIGNED) CHARLES A. BAME,
W. C. BENSHOFF,
F. G. COLEMAN.

Conference elected the following personnel to the National C. E. Association:

President, E. M. Riddle; Associate President, F. C. Vanator; Secretary-Treasurer, Gladys Spice; Editor, C. D. Whitmer; Intermediate Superintendent, Mrs. Joyce Saylor; Junior Superintendent, Mildred Dietz; Quiet Hour Superintendent, Ray Klingenssmith; Stewardship Superintendent, Herman Koontz; Citizenship Superintendent, Floyd Seibert; Publicity Superintendent, Thomas Hammers; Missionary Superintendent, Grant McDonald.

At the conclusion of the business session Dr. J. Allen Miller was asked to voice the expressions and sentiments of Conference in prayer to God for past session and guidance upon the succeeding period.

Saturday Morning

The final business session of conference convened by singing "Work for the Night Is Coming," and the invocation by Miles Taber.

The Credential Committee made its final report totaling 85 ministerial and 212 lay or a grand total of 297 credentials.

A motion prevailed to accept the report and to dismiss the committee with the gratitude of the conference.

Minutes of the previous business session were read and approved.

Conference moved that Dr. L. S. Bau-man's sermon, "Can a Christian Serve Both Christ and Napoleon?" be printed in tract form.

The report of the Resolutions Committee was read and adopted as follows:

RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE REPORT

Inasmuch as our Heavenly Father "has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in the heavens in Christ" (Eph. 1:3), and in a time of unusual depression enabled us to maintain our denominational life without retrenchment, yea, even with expansion and growth, be it resolved:

1. That we render unto him fullness of honor and praise, from the depths of our heart, not a mere lip service, but, "with a true heart in full assurance of faith."

2. That we extol the Name, exalt the Person, abide in the sacrificial work, trust in the advocacy and mediatorial intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ "earnestly waiting for his appearing as the bright and morning Star."

3. That we acknowledge the Person, power and leadership of the Holy Spirit in all our denominational plans and activities seeking "the mind of the Spirit" in all things.

4. That we re-affirm our faith in the Holy Scriptures as inspired of God, the only and all sufficient authority of faith and practice of the church.

5. That, in these day of departure from the faith, both in belief and life, we urge the constant and emphatic preaching and teaching of the whole Gospel, that our church may maintain purity of doctrine and scriptural standards of conduct.

6. That, in these days of industrial depression, we urge upon all those who have the worlds' goods, the obligation of Christian stewardship that the work of the Lord shall not suffer for lack of funds. Also, that we urge upon such the obligation of Christian helpfulness to the needy as set forth in such Scriptures as Gal. 2:10 and 1 John 3:17.

7. That we re-affirm the position of our Church as unalterably opposed to Christians engaging in carnal warfare and as committed to the New Testament principles of "overcoming evil with good." In this particular, we urge the stressing of our pilgrim character as citizens of heaven and maintain our separation from the world as set forth in Phil 3:20 and 2 Cor. 6:14-18.

8. That we note with grave alarm the increase of divorce and the re-marriage of divorced persons within the church and that we earnestly entreat the emphatic proclamation and practice of the teachings of the Word of God upon this subject. We further urge that the National Conference arrange for the thorough presentation of the Bible teachings upon this subject that we may come to uniformity of practice in this respect in the near future.

9. That we deplore the widespread revolt against constituted authority in our country and that we commend the earnest efforts of the President of the United States and others in behalf of law enforcement, especially in relation to the Eighteenth Amendment.

10. That we deplore the un-Christian and degrading influence of all forms of worldly amusements, such as the movies and the dance, and that we urge every member of the Brethren Church to "keep himself unspotted from the world."

11. That we express our appreciation to O. A. Kanauer for the beautiful flowers for the conference and to the Winona Association management for accommodations provided.

12. That we commend our conference officers, boards and committees, the song director and assistants for their united and untiring efforts toward the success of this conference.

CHARLES H. ASHMAN,
G. C. CARPENTER,
R. F. PORTE.

Conference next adopted the budget submitted by the National Sunday School Association, which is as follows

Budget of National Sunday School Association of the rBrethren Church for 1931-32 Seminary of Ashland College,
(Chair of Religious Education)	$2,000.00

Total.....	$4,100.00

The report of the Sunday School Nominating Committee as also adopted, as follows:

President, W. I. Duker; Vice-President, E. L. Miller; Secretary, N. V. Leatherman; Treasurer, M. P. Puterbaugh; Administration, S. M. Whetstone; Children's Superintendent, Miss Hazel Keiser; Young People's Superintendent, Geo. H. Jones; Adult Superintendent, Prof. K. M. Monroe; Educational Superintendent, Prof. M. A. Stuckey; Home Department Superintendent, H. A. Kent; Missionary Superintendent, Miles Taber; Citizenship Superintendent, Prof. R. R. Haun.

Respectfully submitted,
N. V. LEATHERMAN,
HOMER A. KENT,
MILES TABER.

The report of the new conference Executive Committee regarding the location and date for next year conference was adopted which fixed place at Winona Lake, Ind., and time, August 22-28, 1932.

Conference adopted the report of the Finance Committee as rendered:

The Finance Committee beg to submit the following report:

We find that the income from credential fees at this conference will amount to about $300 and three offerings $184.18, also that the direct obligations of the conference amount to $325 and about a $300 obligation for printing created by last year's conference. This will leave a deficit of a little over a $100.

We recommend that some provision be made to take care of this obligation, as it has been carried by the Publishing Company for almost a year and that they have to borrow money and pay interest in order to carry this obligation.

It is our opinion that enough money should be provided for and left in the treasury at the close of each year's conference to take care of any printing or other obligations that conference may create, that as soon as the printing or obligation be completed, it will be paid for, thus relieving next year's conference of all old debts.

EPH. CULP, Chairman.
IRA C. WILCOX,
N. G. KIMMEL.

By prevailing motion conference decided that next year's Brethren Annual should exclude all papers and addresses.

Conference also moved that all auxiliaries be requested to reduce their material to actual business proceedings, including their officiating.

Motion prevailed that the conference secretary be authorized to write to all the churches to aid in defraying the conference deficit.

The Foreign Missionary Society recommended for re-election of the following brethren: L. S. Bauman, Alva J. McClain, and Arthur DeLozier, which was granted. By proper motion conference adjourned the final business session.

JOS. L. GINGRICH, Sec'y.

"THIS ONE THING I DO"

Is it possible for a man to know too much? Is it possible for one to diversify his fields of study beyond what is best for him or his usefulness in the service of God? To all this the great Apostle seems to give an affirmative answer when he says, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

Paul was talking to the Greeks when he announced this determination. They were famous for their thirst for knowledge. Paul had scholarship and training for his day, but he recognized that it was possible for a man to scatter too much in the fields of learning and acquire a quantity or variety of knowledge that would reduce his piety and impair his consecration.

Scholarship is essential in the world and we need Christian scholars who do not have to take second place among the wise men of this world. But the Christian scholar recognizes that there is a proper compass to his field of scholarship. No man can know everything, and when one becomes ambitious to excel in scholarship at the expense of his communion with God, he ceases to be a wise man.

In any field efficiency calls for concentration. A dentist does not have time to become a watch maker. An electrician does not have time to become a manufacturer of shoes. So a servant of God with the call of Christ upon him must concentrate in the line of his calling if he would excel. We do not mean that he should be a hobbyist. He should be practical and should lay a broad foundation in the common fields of information, but when he has laid this foundation

NOTHING TO PAY!

*Nothing to pay! Ah, nothing to pay!
Never a word of excuse to say!
Year after year thou hast filled the score,
Owing thy Lord still more and more.*

*Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily thou hast nothing to pay!
Ruined lost, art thou, and yet
I forgave thee all that debt."*

*Nothing to pay! the debt is so great;
What will you do with the awful weight?
How shall the way of escape be made?
Nothing to pay! yet it must be paid!*

*Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily thou hast nothing to pay!
All has been put to my account,
I have paid the full amount."*

*Nothing to pay; yes, nothing to pay!
Jesus has cleared all the debt away,
Blotted it out with his bleeding hand!
Free and forgiven and loved you stand.*

*Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily thou hast nothing to pay!
Paid is the debt, and the debtor free!
Now, I ask thee, lovest thou me?"*

—F. R. H.

dition he should build for excellent direction where Christ has called Christian Witness.

"SETTING OUR SAIL"

(From The Christian World, L.)
"You remember Pascal's famous about Cleopatra's nose?"

"At the moment I can't recall." "He said that if Cleopatra's nose were shorter, the whole face of the world would have been changed." It's a witty set me thinking. On what frail boats we sail the sea of life! chance take us where we never expect to be taken.

"Suppose—" Her pause set the italics. "Suppose the winds had blown on the Spanish Armada! Suppose, bene no snowstorm when Napoleon approached Moscow! Suppose—one could multiply that 'suppose' indefinitely."

"It gives one food for thought. great an extent are we the mere chance happenings?"

"Well—what answer do you give to your own question mark?"

"This answer. It's not the chance so much as the way we set out to meet them. Skilled fishermen do not fear the vagaries of the winds. They set their sails accordingly, and sail the most part in safety. But the unskilled boat, with untrimmed sails—" was eloquent.

"Setting our sails, so that the chance won't overturn us. It's with comfort at the core of it. sometimes feel so terribly at the mere happenings, mere chance events in the streets of life."

"Well, then, set your sails and laugh at the winds," he concluded. A. N.

Which reminds us very pleasantly of a poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

One ship drives east and another west
While the selfsame breezes blow
'Tis the set of the sail and not the wind
That bids them where to go.

Like the winds of the air are the chances of fate,

As we journey along through life
'Tis the set of the soul that decides
And not the storm or the strife

No one can make progress in this life until he learns when to say "No."

ANNOUNCEMENT

The General Conference issues to the board an emergency call for a Special Ministers' fund offering for one day on Sunday in October. Further announcement will follow.

NOTICE

By vote of the General Conference congregation in the Brethren Church requested to send TWO DOLLARS to the conference Secretary, J. L. Gingrich, 101 St., Johnstown, Pennsylvania, to the deficit in the expense of the conference.

Perhaps a few churches will feel this responsibility, so some of the churches should double their contribution.

WE Start the New Year

It has been a busy summer, culminating in an unusually heavy program of duties at Winona Lake, and now suddenly we find the opening date of the Seminary year is but two days away as this is being written.

With the passage of the years, life becomes more complex and less time is left for relaxation and meditation. I have often wished it might be otherwise. Although I greatly enjoy the National Conference, and I feel that the recent one was one of the best in my memory, sometimes I wonder whether all of us would not benefit spiritually and physically if the programs were not so crowded and more time were left for fellowship and conversation with friends we meet but once a year. One of my dearest friends, a former student, was at Winona Lake for several days, and we saw each other at a distance several times, but the Conference ended before we had a chance to even shake hands. One of the reasons I have for wanting to go to heaven some day is that up there I expect to have time at last for some extended conversations with friends who have been neglected down here. With all eternity at our disposal, the program up there ought to be more leisurely.

My favorite text today is Daniel 12:13, "But go thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest."

DIVORCED: Yes

This morning newspapers carried as front page news the story of a marriage which took place in the desert at Yuma, Arizona. Concerning the best known one of the principals the marriage license gave the following information:

Name: Aimee S. MacPherson
Age: 38
Residence: Los Angeles
Where born: Canada Occupation: Minister
Divorced: Yes

In accordance with the laws of the sovereign State of Arizona, Mrs. MacPherson was made Mrs. Hutton.

But there is another law, a higher law than that of any earthly state, the law of God as revealed in the Bible which this lady professes to believe and preach. And according to this law Mrs. MacPherson is still Mrs. MacPherson, the wife of a man named MacPherson. "For the Woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth." (Romans 7:2).

The Apostle Paul, who wrote this law by divine inspiration, is not popular with women who disregard their marriage vows.

GHANDI Arrives in England

After much discussion and changing of the mind, Gandhi at last decided to attend the round table Conference in London dealing with the affairs of India, explaining that God "told me to go."

He arrived shivering in his loin cloth. With him came the daughter of an English Admiral, Madeline Slade, who carries his bottle of goat's milk, prepares the sleeping quarters for him, and sings Hindu chants to soothe him as he ponders and prays.

Pundit Malaviya, said to be Gandhi's closest friend and companion, also came. But he finds the journey rather difficult, for he is a member of the highest priestly class and must have his gods with him to help in settling the grave issues which concern several hundred millions of people. Hence, he carries as baggage half a ton of sacred Ganges mud, and out of this he makes gods to which he may pray as the need arises.

Do not smile at this little toothless man with his bare legs, goat's milk, spinning wheel and mud gods. For he has become perhaps the most important man in the world, considering the vast number who reverence him and the power he wields by virtue of this fact.

Even in this country Gandhi has his worshippers. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, Unitarian preacher of New York City, went to London in order that he might meet the Indian leader. He reports the meeting as "the supreme experience" of his life, speaks of Gandhi's "ineffable charm and grace," and describes his eyes as "the most wonderful eyes wherein I have ever looked." Of course, Dr. Holmes being a Unitarian, has never looked into the eyes of Jesus Christ, nor beheld his glory as of the Only-Begotten of the Father full of grace and truth.

But all this should remind you how easy it is for the world to worship a mere man. Some day, it may be soon, a greater man than Gandhi will arise to command the homage of men, a man who will wield a vaster power than Gandhi over "all kindreds and nations and tongues," a man who will do greater things than Gandhi. He too will make his gods, but not from sacred Ganges mud. He will make a god and give life to it and cause it to speak. Read the record in the 13th chapter of Revelation. And when he comes, this Man of Sin, "all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the earth."

Man is incurably religious. He may reject the true God as revealed in Christ. But he will worship something, a great leader often, sometimes a god of mud, or even himself.

THE Seminary House

To many of our friends it will be of interest to know that the new Seminary House is ready for occupancy and its rooms will be assigned to the students tomorrow. This will mark a very definite step forward in the life and work of the Seminary.

A number of pastors and churches have expressed their purpose to give us assistance financially in furnishing the house, but on account of the shortness of the time we could not wait for the promised gifts. So we have gone ahead by faith and put in the necessary furnishings, believing that our friends would not fail us.

The first money for this purpose was recently sent by the Adult Christian Endeavor Society of the First Brethren church at Long Beach, California. We appreciate this gift.

Remember that your church, Sunday school class or Christian Endeavor Society can furnish a room for approximately fifty dollars. If your organization cannot undertake this much, any lesser amount gratefully received.

Any gifts for this purpose should be marked for "The Seminary House funds."

THE GOOD OLD HYMN

*There's lots of music in 'em—the long ago,
And when some gray-haired brother the ones I used to know I sorter want to take a hand, I think gone by,
"On Jordan's stormy banks I sat cast a wistful eye!"*

*There's lots of music in 'em—the sweet hymns of old,
With visions bright of lands of shining streets of gold;
And I hear 'em ringing—singin' mem'ry, dreamin', standin',
"From Greenland's icy mountains coral strands."*

*They seem to sing forever of holier days,
When the lilies of the love of God
white in all the ways;
And I want to hear their music oldtime meetin's rise Till "I can read my title clear to in the skies."*

*We never needed singin' books in days—we knew
The words, the tunes of every one-old hymn-book through!
We didn't have no trumpets then,
built for show,
We only sang to praise the Lord whom all blessings flow."*

*An' so I love the good old hymns, my time shall come—Before the light has left me, and ing lips are dumb—
If I can hear 'em sing them then without a sigh
To "Canaan's fair and happy land my possessions lie."*

Repairing the Spiritual House

we think of it in terms of Rally Day features or of a re is need of much spiritual repair work, and this is least a good time, to begin it. As in the days of Nehe-w there are many scenes that occasion sadness and disas we survey the condition of the spiritual Jerusalem n-down condition of the walls that should protect it emies and the unballowed condition of the sanctuary, meeting place of the Most High. The spiritual house eed of repairs and the breaches in the walls must needs Indifference and inactivity have crept in and scattered the living God and there must be a rallying and a ref forces for a new and aggressive campaign against sin. Zeal has become exhausted and devotion has dis-many instances; these must be renewed and there revival of spirituality and of power.

re are to have a revival in the church let us see to it be a genuine revival and not a mere imitation. There o-called revivals that did not truly revive. The par-re merely going through the form. Some were accomlaborate trappings and much display, but were lacking eration of the power of God. Sometimes churches have ey were having a spiritual revival when they were ing a religious pageant. The latter is so much easier and so much less costly than the genuine revival, that uite satisfied with it, and some do not seem to discern e between the mechanical and the spiritual.

ncy toward the superficial is well illustrated by an obade recently (August 17) in the Philadelphia Public Mr. Wm. Feather. He said: "In recent years even the ve apparently fallen victim to the salesmanship of venation and 'just-as-good' materials. Thus we see beaucarvings that are made of saw-dust and glue, marble t is made of plaster-of-paris, cut stone Gothic detail e of galvanized iron and smalt, church bells that are all, pipe organs that contain no pipes. Thirteenth cen-glass that is turned out by the square yard via the od, mosaics that come on big cards, numbered and e to the wall. F. R. Webber, who is conducting a cam-rove the architecture of Lutheran churches, asks this recent issue of his publication, Lutheran Church Art: ore pleasing, a man with a set of cheap false teeth, an g, a glass eye, a dyed beard and a rubber collar, or a eatures and dress are all genuine? By the same token, it ever so small, that is genuine in its structural methin materials and straightforward in its craftsmanship, d more respect than one that is built after the fashion fair building.'"

ay can be carried right over into the spiritual realm to religious revivals. These gew-gaws and imitations churches are symbolical of the artificiality and insin-too much of our revival work, particularly our man-an-praised revivals. We need to launch out upon reall our churches with the utmost of care and planning, all, let it be genuine. Imitations may be flashy and as much attention as the real, or even more, but they on the cost however cheap they may be, for the results be.

ness of a revival should show itself in repairing the neglect of the study of the Word of God and in renew-to its teachings. That the Bible is being widely neg-there can be little doubt. Instead of Bible reading distinguishing mark of the professed Christian, the news-come preferred by him and has largely monopolized stead of the promises of the Word of God being as "wells of delight to the soul" and as "heavenly food" on which he gratefully feasts, the novel has been allowed to corrupt the taste and distort the imagination. Instead of finding the Bible as it were "a glorious country by whose rivers and along whose mountain slopes he loves to walk with God, and out on its plains hold sweet converse with him," the average professed follower of Christ has turned to the movie for his recreation and inspiration and the place where he resorts to get the ideals and attitudes that give character to life. That is a sorry accusation, but it is so generally recognized that there is no need of proof.

Nothing is more needed today than a revival of interest in and an enlarged knowledge of the Book of God, for in it the divine Father has revealed himself and his will concerning man. There is made plain the way by which man can gain the victory over sin and death, and become partaker with Christ of the life that is eternal and of the joy that is heavenly. As another has said: "The church in all ages has looked upon the Bible as containing this revelation. It has considered this book as the gift of God to man to enlighten him on the things most vital to his eternal good. Because so considered it has always been treated with respect and reverence. And it is to be observed as a fact of great importance that in the times when the Bible has been thus revered and read, the church has been strongest, most influential and progressive. God has ever shown regard for his own Word by honoring the people who honor it, by giving them glorious manifestations of his power, and, too, by allowing spiritual death to exist where it is dishonored and neglected." It is therefore important, in this day when, just as Nebuchadnezzar sought to deface the walls of Jerusalem, destroy its gates and trample its glory underfoot, there are spiritual enemies who would break down respect for the Holy Scriptures, that the members of the church of Christ should set themselves to reading its pages more assiduously and prayerfully and to do what they can to repair the widespread neglect of that gracious Word.

Loyalty to the church and to divine worship needs to be repaired, if we are to bring these divinely ordained means of grace up to the highest point of efficiency. The organized church is not an end in itself, nor are the forms of worship ends, but means to an end. God has given these things for man's spiritual good, and they are so necessary to his welfare that he cannot get along without them.
Worship is as necessary to the spiritual man as food is to the body.
The soul turns to God as the plant turns to the sun. Augustine's prayer is humanity's prayer: "O God thou hast made us for thyself, and our souls find no rest until they find rest in thee." And we should not desire to do other than to seek God and to rejoice in his presence. We should rather delight in his worship, should possess a genuine relish for spiritual verities, and should seek the house of God. But what a vast difference between what men ought to do and what they actually do! Everywhere there is disregard shown for God's house and his worship, and this is true not only of the ungodly, but of many church members as well, men and women who have professed to be disciples of our Lord. Even among these there seems to be little or no conviction of duty to meet at the place appointed for divine worship. And this fact brings discredit not only upon church members and upon the church but upon Christianity itself, causing its enemies to say that people are getting tired of it as a religion and that it is fast coming to an end. This is certainly a breach in the walls of Zion that needs to be repaired and may each man begin the task at that point nearest himself.

Finally, there is need of a repairing of inactivity and a setting of ourselves to work with zeal and determination for the building up of the kingdom of God and the achieving of the largest possible future for our church. It is not onlookers nor riders, but workers that are needed to make this year count for the largest possible success for our denomination. On the wall of a certain high school in a western city was once found this motto: "There is no electric elevator to success. Step up the stairs, don't stare up the steps." Those words told the students of that school that if they were to be worth any more when they graduated than when they entered, they must do some real climbing. It is equally true of all who are entering upon this new church year, if it is to be one of success, it must needs be because we have done some climbing. There is no elevator to success in church work any more than in school work; he who desires to win the best must climb. One of the most remarkable examples of success in modern times was Booker T. Washington, who rose from slavery to a position of influence by sheer determination of will and unflagging industry. The same secret to success carries over into the spiritual realm, except that we must be conscious of the cooperation of God. God works with us, but he will not do for us what we can do for ourselves. Let us here dedicate ourselves anew to the doing of the task that God has set before us, realizing that for us as individual Christians and as a church, "There is no electric elevator to success."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

It is a great work to which Jesus has called us. Six hundred million professing Christians face the responsibility of sharing the gospel of the grace of God with 1,000,000,000 non-Christians.

The program for the Midwest District Conference reached our office just as we were going to press. It will be published next week, but we here announce the date and place of meeting—Fort Scott, Kansas, October 6 to 8.

The program of the Illiokota conference is to be found in this issue. The date is October 8 to 11 and the place is Dallas Center, Iowa, where Rev. Austin R. Staley is the pastor. The Conference moderator is Rev. C. C. Grisso and the secretary is Mr. O. A. Prather.

No man can walk untempted in the midst of the blatant and insidious evils of this world, but our assurance is in him who walked this way before us, and feeling the tug of all our temptations, was able and did conquer at every turn and thus led the way to final victory for every child of God.

The new Junior Superintendent of the National Christian Endeavor Union is Miss Mildred Dietz, 312 Cumberland Street, Berlin, Pennsylvania, and she is desirous of getting the names and addresses of all your local Junior Superintendents. If you occupy such a position in your church, she wants your name. Send it promptly.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes of the death of a missionary friend, who has proven himself a most valuable friend to her since the days of her struggle through medical school. The home of Dr. James C. Gardiner of Evanston, Illinois, has been the home of practically all our African missionaries when they have gone through Chicago. And it is fitting that Sister Gribble should pay him this tribute on the occasion of his passing.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes from Argentina concerning the mission work there. He has visited all the mission points, preaching several times at each place. He was greeted with good attendance at the various places. At Realico and Huinca Renanco they have a splendid bunch of young people who offer good promises for the work. Two of the women workers are ill, Mrs. Clarence Sickel and Mrs. Adolfo Zeche. Remember them in your prayers.

Brother N. G. Kimmel, the treasurer of General Conference, publishes in this issue a statement of moneys received and expended. That reminds us that Conference voted to request every congregation to pay to the secretary, Brother J. L. Gingrich, two dollars each to help pay the deficit. Very likely the secretary has already gotten in touch with your church. If so, do your part by responding promptly with the two dollar remittance.

The church at Accident, Maryland, recently enjoyed a season of refreshing from the Lord, under the evangelistic leadership of Brother Leslie E. Lindower, the pastor of the churches at Terra

Alta and Grafton, West Virginia. Brother Lindower preaches nights and closed with a communion service on the evening of the fifth day. Eleven accessions are reported and two preachers reported make thirteen additions to the Accident church in three months, through the ministry of Brother Lindower.

A communication received from Brother Chauncey B. Bellevue, par Bossangoa, in French Equatorial Africa, contains the following information: "Just want to let you know a new missionary arrived on the field. David Paul arrived on July 11, 1911, P. M., weighing eight pounds and ten ounces. Both missionaries are doing nicely. Our praise is unto HIM for his work. The Evangelist extends congratulations, and may God bless him with health and strength."

Our correspondent from Allentown, Pennsylvania, writes that their pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen, has discovered to the membership, the fact that the young people of his church make good leaders of the prayer meeting. The folks are thoroughly convinced and gratified. It is the fact that is being told everywhere that young people are to be given a chance—they prove their worth and demonstrate their reliability, even as their parents before them did when they were young people.

From Oak Hill, West Virginia, comes an encouraging report of the condition of the work since they have been without a pastor. They have held up splendidly during these six months. The local leadership they have there, and it is also for the kind of work their recent pastor, Brother H. E. Eppley, did while on the field that they were able to keep things in such fine style after he was gone and they were without a pastor. Brother H. E. Eppley is now upon the field as the new pastor and has been well received.

The Canton Christian Endeavorers have a splendid report of their interesting meetings, and they are sharing some of their experiences with their fellow-Endeavorers in this issue. That is a good thing to do. Next to having a really good society, a good credit for telling of their good things to others. After you read this splendid report on the C. E. Page, sit down and write a letter to the other societies about some of the interesting things that have taken place in your group, and send your letter to C. D. Whitmer, 217 E. Dubail Ave., South Bend, Indiana. He will see that it gets broadcast.

President E. E. Jacobs in his College news makes mention of his visit to the Royal Seismograph in Canada and speaks of the extreme sensitivity to earth tremors. It is a wonderful thing and as we were endeavoring to consider it there came another thought that strengthened faith. If man can make an instrument that can detect even the most minute throbs of the earth, how much more reasonable is it to believe that he who himself made all things can hear the faintest cry of prayer and can detect even the yearning thoughts of the heart. Every way modern science is making belief in the spiritual seem more reasonable.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey writes a much appreciated new report for the week and by so doing lets us know that he has sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to be back at his work, and forms us concerning some of the problems and the progress of his pastorate. His people have suffered much loss from his death and by the death of some devoted members, but under the ageous and sacrificial leadership of their pastor, they are moving forward. Since last report there have been "some additions to the church by baptism and several by letter." Dr. Gnagey continues to put the emphasis on the training of the young people in his work, and this, no doubt, accounts for the steady, consistent growth of the church under his leadership. For the remarkable degree of youth that he has been able to retain along with his advancing years. It is cause for praise that the part of his many friends throughout the brotherhood has so far overcome his recent periodic illness, and may he continue to bless him with improved health.

Our General Conference

By W. I. Duker, the New Moderator

General Conference has passed into history. Recently we were anticipating the conference with joy and hope, now we look back upon it with satisfaction. Many of us were not sure of the effect that the economic situation would have upon the number who might gather for this conference. Then, too, the problems of a general conference, plus those of this particular conference caused us no little anxiety. So we looked forward to the Conference of 1931. A splendid audience gathered for our opening sermon Sunday evening, causing us all to feel easier in regard to the attendance. The list of delegates reported at business session put us all at ease in regard to attendance. Then we began to look about in an effort to ascertain the "spirit" of the conference. In this regard we were delighted. The business before us began to flow with mechanical precision. Our special addresses were of very high order. The Conference was on! It was for us to say that there were many perplexing problems coming for solution. Many of the issues were of this particular time. When issues are controversial it is too much to hope for a solution that will satisfy everybody. But we believe we can truthfully say that the previous conference did we come as near in our approach to this desired goal.

So, our attendance was truly representative. It came from all parts of our brotherhood. In fact, we can truly say that the largest delegations came from the most distant. It seems that the churches that were most derelict in regards to delegates were those farthest away. There was a certain deficit in funds at the conference and we are sure that if all churches would send a full number of delegates, this deficit would not be so great. Let us speak in reference to our reaction relative to the "boards" that were in almost constant session. It seems entirely necessary that much of the work needs to be done on these respective boards. If the work were brought before the general conference each week would be long enough to give it even the most attention. Then, too, much of the work is of such a nature that it can only be properly handled by committees. On the other hand it seems a pity that our different departments of church interests are neglecting things of special significance, when matters of most concern were being presented to Conference. Where were there to give thought to this same report. We have more than once matters of vital importance, reported with great care and concern to a few people instead of them not delegates.

We were made conscious of the rapidly passing years that gave us delight and pleasure in previous conferences were among those "not present." Many brethren that seemed to be part and parcel of our church were no longer able to be present. Many are gone because of illness and age. Others have gone to the great reward. New faces have come into our conference and welcome as they are, they can never take the place of those men of God whom we now miss so greatly. Conferences change!

Let us say in closing that we believe our present conference is a most splendid reflection of the state of our church. The attendance was good. The spirit was high and the work accomplished was all that could be desired. May we, one and all, go back to our respective churches and places of duty, inspired and enthused. We have touched kindred spirits, we have spent some time on mountain tops. We have seen the face of our Master. Now may we one and all, go down into the valley and find the poor unfortunate folk that needs our assistance. May we already plan for our conference of 1932 in that we shall do the will of the Master and so prepare and do work for him that shall give us great joy to report to our "BRETHREN."

The Forty-third Annual Conference as Seen by the Executive Secretary

By Freeman Ankrum

Whether a conference is pronounced a success or a failure depends much upon hidden machinery, which commences to function a year previous to the Conference. It quietly works up to and including the Conference. Many details relative to the conduct of the sessions fall upon this Committee. The Secretary has the bulk of the correspondence to look after in the arranging the various details of the program. The various members of the Executive Committee having the last Conference in charge were very helpful in the many details necessary for their perusal and approval. Not a single discordant note was sounded. Perhaps this was a contributing factor to the spirit of the recent Conference which seemed to the writer to be of high order. Naturally since this Conference is now history, there are places where it is realized improvements might have been made. However this furnishes opportunity for growth. Where there is no change there is no growth.

As to the work of the Conference it seems to me that there has been accomplished that which ranks as of the utmost importance, the settling Scripturally, honestly and fairly, the matter relative to the Kentucky work. This Conference has succeeded in clearing the decks in such a way as to make possible greater progress as a church than has been made for a decade.

My Expressions of National Conference

By Charles H. Ashman

This Conference was true to "The Faith." Not a question or a doubt was raised concerning the Bible. Every note rang true! The Brethren Church is a very uncomfortable place for one questioning the Inspiration of the Word. All the lectures, sermons, addresses, talks, were Biblical. God will honor a people honoring his Word.

This Conference was stimulating to faith, personal faith. There was a settled conviction on every hand that God will see the Brethren Church through these trying times of test. There was confidence that the message of the Brethren Church is needed for this hour. Genuine Christian optimism radiated from every session. It was refreshing to the soul to be present.

This Conference was one of most encouraging reports. In spite of depression, there was expression of God's favor in the reports of the various Boards. Foreign missions and home missions received larger gifts than in the previous year. God has highly favored us as a denomination in many ways.

This Conference was one of vital decisions. The Resolution lifting the National Voice of the church against the "demoralizing and unchristian influence of worldly amusements such as the dance and movies" and urging all members to be "unsponsored from the world" was one such. The appointing of a Commission on Divorce with instructions to see to it that the subject be presented thoroughly and Scripturally at next conference was another. The reaffirming of our position that it is contrary to the Scriptures for Christians to engage in carnal warfare was another. We believe the decision of the Home Board, confirmed by the Committee of Fifteen, and sanctioned by the Conference relative to the Kentucky Mission was vital and wise.

This Conference was one of undaunted faith in the future. There are grave problems facing us as a people. The stress and strain of these days is terrible. We may be tested and tried in the immediate future as we have never been before, both personally and as a church. But, this Conference expressed itself time and time again in the firm belief that the Brethren Church has a Message and Mission for this hour. We face the future with undaunted faith and hope, looking for the Bright and Morning Star.

Some Practical Work for Laymen in the Brethren Church

By G. W. Brumbaugh

Published in Four Parts. Part IV.

Leadership in the Auxiliaries and other Activities of the Church

This is a fourth way in which Brethren laymen may make themselves efficient in advancing the interests of the church. We should heed the call to leadership if we have the possibilities within us. The Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor work will afford us abundant opportunities to develop our powers and make our lives count for Christ and the Church.

In the business, professional, and industrial world these days we hear much of the need of trained leaders. Efficiency experts are in demand in all lines of human endeavor. Should the Church in its business of ministering to the spiritual needs of humanity be less efficient in its program of work? The great need in the church is for laymen who may become consecrated and trained leaders in some lines of spiritual endeavor.

The Sunday school has long been regarded as a fertile field for training and developing leaders and for furnishing recruits for the Church. It has been said that eighty-five percent of the members of the Church come into the Church through the Sunday school. Laymen serve as superintendents, other officers, and teachers. We need trained leaders. In our public schools the standards for the training of teachers have been constantly raised. If our Sunday school teachers are to compete with the public school teachers in their work of teaching our children and youth, they must have some training. Especially in the work of teaching our adolescent boys and girls, the wisest kind of sympathy and leadership is required if we would win them to active work in the church. The church which has no definite program for its young people will not meet the needs of the future. It is from the people that our future leaders in the church will come when we have gone to our reward.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies afford an opportunity for our young people to become trained leaders. They need the right kind of spiritual and social adult leadership to cooperate with them in their programs for a definite Christian work.

Boys' organizations need consecrated, wide awake, sympathetic and sane leaders. The challenge of the day today is to meet the needs of our children and youth. We must measure up to our responsibility.

The growth of the Adult Bible Class movement in Sunday schools the past two or three decades has been a wonderful step in the education and training of men and women for leadership in the church. As teachers should heed the words of Paul in II Timothy 2:15, "show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Each Sunday school in the Brethren Church should provide for a leadership and teacher training program which future teachers and leaders will have an opportunity to make themselves more efficient for Christian service. These should be recruited from the older members and others who are capable and desirous of doing active work in the church in its various departments.

Laymen should be given an opportunity to do a definite, important service in the church and its work, among which might be mentioned, Organize an Auxiliary, a Missionary Committee to encourage missions; lead in systematic giving and tithing; If possible, support a missionary or native worker in the field; Inaugurate a new work through an Every Member Canvass.

"Service is necessary to our human life. It is the only way to rescue us from selfishness. If one attends church services only to enjoy himself and then never passes on his joy on to others, he may be an outward saint, but really he is but an Epicurean philosopher. Self-sacrifice is the Christian man the gateway to real life. Service is necessary to our finer nature. We must serve to be truly Christian men. Self-forgetfulness is the real reward of service, both to server and served."

"Responsibilities and service through duties taken in the control of the temporal affairs of the church are means by which the layman may work to his usefulness in the Church. For those few who have the privileges of this type of service, it constitutes one of the largest educational contributions of the church to the life of a man. Just here in responsibilities and service, the Church finds her point of contact for the religious training of her men. It is an educational necessity. The efficiency of the Church in securing the religious development of a man's life will depend almost less on the instruction it gives to him than on the training it secures from him. Men need, not so much instruction, but conceptions of life,—as they need powerful influences to direct their conduct; they need directing into the action which, when they are repeated, will establish the habits of a Christian life. The only way to learn to live the right Christian life, is to live that life, to do its deeds, to render its service. Certainly a large part of any normal life lies in religious work, in service for the kingdom of God. Rendering of service is a need of the man just as the service is needed by the Church."

Young men need to do religious work. They need not only to do all work in that spirit of service which is religious in the best sense, but also to undertake definite specific responsibility, and duties in connection with it.

organizations. Such service develops the powers of self-reliance, and initiative. The Church orders to the young man the first and determining duty to exercise his own judgment, throws him on his resources in some perplexing situation and commands him to strike out in self-dependence.

One has said, "The Church is the great laboratory of moral and religious service. Here men must serve apprenticeship and learn the trade of brotherly kindness. The Church lacks efficient workers because it does not train those it has. The Church in its own workers. It must train the men and women who are of age to serve it. We will never secure the services of men until the enlistment of the whole Church actively, intelligently, and thoroughly, through his normal activities and as an active, working person in the activities of the Church, is held as normal as breathing."

There is room for more volunteer workers. All our churches have men and women who have talents which are being used. It will be wise for our Church, in the future, to look well to the proper type of leadership. Christian leadership is a problem and we should prepare it in such a way as will tend to promote a growth and development in all our churches. Laymen do their part. They may have greater influence times than the preacher who is often considered professional. Are we, as laymen, ambitious to do efficient work for the advancement of the interests of the Kingdom?

In conclusion, may we summarize, and recommend a few things which have grown out of our discussion of this subject: The work of laymen in the Church:

1. Laymen are needed to cooperate with the pastor to carry on the highest interests of the Church and its work. Laymen should assume the financial responsibilities of the Church and should be an example in Christian citizenship.

2. Pastors should teach Christian stewardship and inculcate to the flock the basis of the right use of time, talents, and substance.

3. Laymen should assume their part in the evangelization of the Church, and should assist in visitation and personal work to save souls for Christ and the Kingdom.

4. The Church and the Sunday school should give opportunity in their programs to develop leadership in the laity of the Church.

5. The layman who would be an efficient worker in the Church's activities, should volunteer his services where needed and seek to make himself useful in the right way, in spirit, in order that the Church may do her part in the community.

6. The Church should be loyal to all the interests of the community—Missions, Benevolences, College, and Public Interests.

7. We recommend more definite Bible study and the observance of the family altar in every home of the Church. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain." (1 Cor. 15:58).

8. Let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

9. May we all consecrate our lives more fully to the service of Christ and help to do our part toward evangelizing the world in this generation, is my humble prayer.

The Christian's Armour

By Thomas Gibson

The Apostle Paul compares the Christian life to a warfare. A battle, a conflict between Christ and Satan, each striving for the ascendancy in our lives.

Some one has said that there are two spirits, a good spirit and an evil spirit each seeking to dominate our lives. So there is a continual warfare. We must be prepared to fight. He that refuses to fight will be overwhelmed in the conflict, "and be taken captive at Satan's will." II Tim. 2:26.

But while the Christian life is a warfare it is not against flesh and blood we are contending, but against the principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in high places. Eph. 6:12. And so it is a warfare, God has furnished weapons whereby we may successfully defeat, and put to flight the enemy of our souls. And since "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal"

"For the carnal sword, with one accord,
We do reject, as did our Lord."

"but spiritual and mighty through God to the pulling down of the stronghold of sin." The enemy attacks in a multitude of ways. Sometimes he attacks in a subtle way, like the serpent attacked our first parents, beguiling, tempting, deceiving and seducing them. Sometimes he comes as "an angel of light." "And if possible would deceive the very elect of God." Matt. 24:24. If not successful in these tactics, as a last resort he will come "like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour."

The lion, the king of the forest, as he roams the jungle seeking his prey, roars and tears to pieces everything in his path. Peter, when he wrote his epistle, the lion of opposition was Nero, the Roman Emperor, who was notorious in persecuting and perpetrating acts of cruelty upon the saints of God. Peter gives two suggestions how we may overcome his wiles. I Peter 4:7. "Be sober." Don't be intoxicated into insensibility by his cunning, and deceitful suggestions, keep your head clear, and your senses collected.

"Be watchful." Don't go to sleep in the face of temptations. Keep awake and watchful. Remember the foolish virgins. See Ephesians 6:14-18 for the weapons of our warfare.

There is no armor provided for the back, as we are not expected to turn our backs to the enemy. The Christian armor is divided into two classes—offensive and defensive. We are to be ready to meet the lion in his den. "Be sober, and be vigilant." I Tim. 3:2. "Be sober, be vigilant (be alert and watchful) because your adversary the devil as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour. Whom resist steadfast in the faith." I Peter 5:8, 9. Yes, he is walking about. "When the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan came also among them. The Lord said unto Satan, From whence comest thou? Satan answered the Lord and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it." Job 1:6, 7. Satan is omnipresent. Jesus said, "When (anyone) heareth the word of the kingdom and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and snatcheth (grubbeth) away that which was sown in heart." Matt. 13:19.

There is never a gospel sermon preached without Satan being in attendance. "He is diligent in his business," the destruction of body, soul, and spirit.

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

IV. THE AGAPE, SYMBOL OF BROTHERLY LOVE

In the Gospel we do not find the name "Lord's Supper" applied to the bread and cup alone. That was called the "eucharist." The name "Lord's Supper" (1 Cor. 11:20) is used of the footwashing supper and eucharist together, just as the name "Passover" was used of the purification, the paschal meal and the feast of unleavened bread, all together.

The name "Lord's Supper," like that of "Lord's Day," indicates that it is a memorial of the Lord. We have seen that the footwashing is a memorial of his great love manifested in his humiliation or incarnation. We now pass to study the meaning of the supper proper, called in Greek agape or "love feast."

1. The Origin of the name "agape" is proof of the sacred character of the feast.

The Greek language has the verb phileo, which is the ordinary verb "to love." It also has the verb agapao, which means to love divinely. In John 21:15, 16 Jesus uses agapao, "Peter lovest thou me?" But Peter replies with phileo, because he did not venture to use the more sublime word. But in John 13:34 Jesus uses it. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you." They were still seated at the table in the first agape whose meaning Jesus was explaining when he said, "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love (agape) one toward another." In classic Greek literature we do not find this noun. The world did not know this divine love until Jesus revealed it. "As I have loved you" he says, and "having loved his disciples which were in the world he loved them unto the end." The Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels says, "A new name was given to what was a new thing, because we do not find anywhere else this spirit of love which produces this fraternity."

The name "agape," originated by Jesus to express his own love, symbolized in the supper, was continued by the apostles and the church as the name of the supper. The ordinary name "banquet" is not appropriate for this feast, because it has nothing in common with the worldly banquets. This origin of a new name for a new kind of banquet, a feast of brotherly love, gives it the character of a sacred symbol. Jesus himself gave the example of holy love, gave the name to express it and the feast to teach it. The example, the name and the feast should therefore be preserved together in the symbol given for that purpose.

JOWETT

He had no tricks of oratory. He was not an editorializer on current events. He used no arts, no schemes to draw the multitude. He had a touch of glorious mysticism. He was saturated in the Scriptures. To his finger-tips he was effortlessly loyal to his Lord. And he knew the hearts of men.

So he preached; simply, directly, compellingly. And he was utterly content to be a preacher. Not for him administration, authority, affairs, or anything outside the one business of his life.

Only a preacher. Yes; but what a preacher.—Epworth Herald.

TESTS OF A CHRISTIAN

There are two tests of a Christian. He must be humble enough to admit and confess sin, that is, he must be a man enough to apologize to God for his sins. The second test is even harder. It is that he must recognize to his heart the one who has harmed him.—Dr. Williams.

GANDHI'S VIEW OF MISSIONARIES

Gandhi may, on second thought, temporize and pare down his earlier utterance, but what he said about Christian missionaries in India is in the Times of India for March 23, 1931. "Asked if he would favor the retention of American foreign missionaries when India secured self-government," Gandhi replied: "If instead of confining themselves to humanitarian work and masterful service to the poor they engage in activities as they do at present to proselyting by means of aid, education, etc., then I would certainly ask them to leave. Every nation's religion is as good as any other's. Certain religions are adequate for her people. We need no religion spiritually."

Bishop Bradley printed in the same newspaper for the following spirited and sensible reply:

"Mr. Gandhi when he gets swaraj will ask us to leave. How can an Indian say that? Cleanse our villages, wash our faces, heal our sickness, rid us of the rag, the fly, and the filth, promote our health and comfort, but do not give us regeneration. I must tell Mr. Gandhi that no government can drive us to preach Christ in India. We have been commissioned by Christ, and no government on earth can drive us out. By the love of the Lord Jesus we have left our homes and our bracing climate of our countries and have come to live, and die with you, and no one can send us away."—S. S. Tilden.

73 PER CENT OF MOVIES UNFIT FOR CHILDREN

Of 188 feature films now being shown in motion picture theaters throughout the United States, The Parents' Magazine finds 17% fit for children. 73% it declares to be unfit for children from 8 to 12 years of age, while its appraisal of the remaining 10% is "perhaps."

For adolescents from 12 to 16 years of age, The Parents' Magazine finds 32% suitable, 53% unsuitable and 15% are "perhaps."

The motion picture department of The Parents' Magazine was edited with the cooperation of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution; National Film Estimate Service; Women's Union of Los Angeles; and the International Federation of Women's Alumnae.—The Evangelical Messenger.

THESE LAWYERS ARE PUBLIC ENEMIES

The people of Chicago made up a list of men engaged in crime, numbering whom they quite properly listed as "public enemies." Number One in the list was Al Capone. There are some hopes that he is caught and is to be tied up for awhile. If he is successfully prosecuted, it will not be because he is a criminal. Every one knows he is. It will be because some lawyer is clever enough to twist legal provisions to suit his needs, upon the feelings of judges and juries in such fashion as to secure minor sentences.

All over the country are lawyers of this sort. They are engaged in the legal protection of men who make a profession of crime. Yet, these lawyers are received in the best circles, belong to the bar associations. They move in the best society. They are members of what are supposed to be respectable organizations and societies.

They are public enemies. They ought to be treated as such. They ought to be shouldered out of and snubbed out of our society. They are traitors to American institutions. They have prostituted a noble profession, and they ought to be treated as such. Decent people treat a doctor who is guilty of malpractice as a public enemy.

guaranty of fair trial for the offender before the court is lacking. The protection, regular and systematic and tricky, which makes a profession of crime is quite another thing, and it succeeds too well it will bring about the overthrow of the American system.—The Christian Standard.

POLITICS AND LAW ENFORCEMENT

Kansas comes a story of an attack made upon the law enforcement forces operating in that state, which illustrates what happens in all parts of the country. It appears from reports that very vigorous efforts on the part of a prohibition enforcement administrator resulted in the conviction of over 60 men, whom are now in the penitentiary. The same vigorous effort brought forth considerable evidence to the effect that numerous men, some of them of political standing, were violating or aiding and abetting its violation. Then came a counter attack which sought to remove the prohibition administrator from office, and those who believe in law enforcement in Kansas resisting this effort. That is what is happening constantly in one of the main reasons for the failure of our prohibition. The "little fish" are caught and punished, but when investment is made to involve the "higher ups," then political pressure is applied—which probably means that many lies are told—and effort too often successful, is made to remove the officials who created the lawlessness. Such situations call for "eternal vigilance" on the part of men who stand for righteousness.—The Christian Advance.

WOMEN OF CHINA ARE ESCAPING FROM MUCH

These Christian, T. Z. Koo, writes as follows: "Traditionally, the Chinese woman is subject to four kinds of limitations and disabilities: first of all, politically and logically, she is a nonentity. Second, law and order are the special prerogatives of the male and she has no political and legal status. Next, in the sphere of domestic and morals, the Chinese woman is also placed upon a low pedestal. Buddhism considers woman as the primary source of the evil. Confucianism tolerates her because of the necessity of domestication. In Confucian ethics, a woman is not supposed to have personality of her own. When she is under age, she follows her parents; when she marries, she follows her husband; when she is fortunate enough to have a son, she follows him. She has nothing before her but black despair. Thirdly, in the domestic system, she has no prospects in the old days beyond domestic drudgery. Even the pittance she earns as such is not her own. Then, lastly, social customs and conventions have placed a heavy hand upon her life. Woman need not be educated; she must have bound feet; she must be shy and timid before men; she must never marry again, and a hundred and one other rules which are for her cramped and bare." Happily, these traditions are failing.—The Congregationalist.

SOME BARRIERS THAT ARE BLOWING AWAY

One of the near-scandals of the mission field was the disparity between the manner of life of the missionary and that of the people to whom he ministered. This disparity came about in a natural way. The missionary desired to give his children a clean and healthy environment. Usually he was more willing to expose himself than his offspring to various germs and diseases which might be about. To protect his family he lived in a different way from that of the nationals, but the unwitting result was to create a sense of separation such as commonly exists between the rich and the poor. Happily this situation is passing, and the progress which the Christians of other lands are making in the schools of the Orient the Chinese and Japanese, who are well trained as the missionaries, are receiving as good or better as the missionaries, while the standard of living of the two groups is becoming the same. In the past a secret cause of irritation was that the missionaries followed of taking themselves and their families away for a vacation during the heat of summer. The result of these trips to the mountains was the better health and reduced mortality among the missionary families. Now they have decided that this is a good custom, and are going to encourage the missionaries. Thus by a process of levelling-up the conditions which once made trouble are gradually disappearing.—The Congregationalist.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

2 Cor. 8:8-9. Only two verses, but how rich and full of meaning! First, the power of example: who can measure the good accomplished by the example of such men as Martin Luther, Alexander Mack, Moody, and the thousands of nameless heroes of the faith. Second, the GREAT example: our Lord Jesus Christ! What food for thought and meditation in that ninth verse—his riches, what were they? what it meant for him to become poor; the love that made him lay aside his riches; the purpose of his poverty; our riches in Christ Jesus; his present riches in the souls of saved men. "I gave, I gave my life for thee, What hast thou given for me?"

TUESDAY

2 Cor. 8:10-15. "Where there's a will there's a way," says the old proverb, yet so many times we seem satisfied merely with our good intentions. Paul reminds them here that mere willingness means little without the doing. When may we know that we are giving as God would have us? The rule is: according to what we have. Many would like to give much more than they can, and such are blessed according to their willingness, not merely according to the amount. Let us ask ourselves, Are we giving according to what we have? That is, according to God's proportion?

WEDNESDAY

2 Cor. 8:16-22. Again, by forceful example, we see that we can give things other than just money. Some had been eager to give of their substance for the needs of others; Titus was equally eager to give his life for the same service. And what higher renown could we desire than that given in verse 18: "whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches?" Only one higher reward to covet: the words of our Lord in that day, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

THURSDAY

2 Cor. 8:23, 24. Our high position in the service of Christ: these disciples were not merely partners in service, and helpers of the great apostle; they were the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ. We are reminded of Galba who, in response to the boasting of a rich and arrogant neighbor, pointed to her children and said: "These are my jewels." Just so are his children the glory of Christ. As our missionaries and other servants of the church travel about among us in the service of our Lord, what a treat to have them with us in our homes, to care for their needs until they again go on their way! We have had in our homes something of the glory of Christ!

FRIDAY

2 Cor. 9:1-6. What disappointment and loss comes to our lives when those of whom we have learned to expect much, whom we have learned to respect and trust, fall short! Paul was writing to the Corinthians that this might not happen in their case. If we could but receive the full message of verse 6 what a difference it would make, not merely in the financial aspects of our church work, but in our own spiritual life. God give us understanding hearts!

SATURDAY

2 Cor. 9:7-11. The old familiar "cheerful giver" verse. Yet who wouldn't give cheerfully when they know that by so doing they receive the love of God—at least, if they have first given themselves! And when we remember that it is he that hath dispersed abroad his bountiful gifts, and has given us all we have, why should we withhold anything from his work?

SUNDAY

2 Cor. 9:12-15. Our giving not merely supplies the needs of others, but turns their thoughts to God, for love of whom the gift was made. And how precious the fellowship we have with those for whom we have sacrificed, or who have sacrificed for us! This explains, in part, at least, the fellowship we have with God for his unspeakable gift.

The Calling of the Sunday School Teacher

By J. A. Clement

Are We Training Teachers

The pamphlet printed concerning the District Sunday school Secretary states that the members of the Board have empowered the secretary to superintend a Teachers' Training Department. This cannot be emphasized too strongly. Such a course will help us to get at the enlightening principles which are so necessary for any real progress in our work. Every one should seek to follow out such a course either alone or with a group, the latter always being preferable whenever possible. This will bring about both definiteness and constancy of preparation.

Every home and every Sunday school library ought to have some good books on Sunday school pedagogy. Surely we are all willing to keep pace with the agriculturists, and the scientists, and the business men of our day in our religious progress.

May You Become a Teacher?

Was there ever anybody that you have known who has never taught anybody anything anywhere at any time? No, everybody is likely to teach somebody something somewhere at some time, either consciously or unconsciously. Every one who attends Sunday school is already a teacher of some one or other whether he or she is chosen to stand before a class or not. But every one who is selected by the authorities ought to be the very best teacher he or she can be when placed before a class.

Did you ever hear of anyone who, at the beginning of the week, was very much puzzled to know just what could be said on the next lesson, but who, after spending several hours during the week and on Sunday morning, found herself or himself surprised at the wealth of thoughts and suggestions ready at hand?

Two hours' preparation each week will enable most people to conduct a successful recitation. A few hours spent in Bible study, week in, week out, for a period of ten or fifteen years will almost be equal to a full college course in Bible education. A little earnest daily study will always keep the soul-food fresh which we offer to our Sunday pupils and will therefore make it more palatable to them.

Perfection is not so essential in order to become a teacher as is continual striving toward perfection after we have decided to try to be one. There are very, very few people who are not capable of teaching a class providing they are willing to do a little systematic study of the Bible, and of other lesson helps, and of simple but valuable methods, and of the particular minds and souls that are to be instructed.

There are a very few very great teachers; there are a good many great teachers; there are very many average teachers; there are some rather poor teachers who are a little below the average; but there are a very few very poor teachers. Most of us come between the very poor and the very great ones. No two of us are quite alike in our abilities as there are persons who attempt to teach. Through such a curve of the distribution of the abilities of teachers as this, we may see that there never need be any great dearth of leaders in the Sunday school, if each one is willing to keep fresh his or her knowledge by means of a little daily preparation.

Of course the greatest leaders in Sunday school as elsewhere will be those who are willing to pay the price of thorough preparation, thirty years if need be. A few great teachers perhaps are born, but the most of them are largely made through training and education. It will not pay you and me to run the risk of going without this preparation until we are more sure that we were born in the class of the very great. And even then some training would likely do us no harm.

One of the best ways to learn how to build a house is to try to build one. One of the very best ways to learn how to study is just to begin to study. The art of study is gotten by degrees like all great arts. There is no greater art than teaching. But here as with the painter, and with the sculptor it is not the first stroke of the brush or the hammer that does the highest type of work. There need to be many practice strokes somewhere before the finer work is possible. This is true of the lawyer's practice. It is also true of the physician's practice. And so the teacher must expect that the first work that is attempted will not be as finished as the last that is done. One of the surest ways by which we may learn to teach is just to begin to teach with all the light and life that we can command.

What is Teaching?

Teaching is causing another to know what is found in books, and in nature, and in the minds of men and women. Teaching is successfully causing such facts and truths to stick in the mind of the pupil. It is bringing together in the Sunday school the learner and the lesson. It is always a guiding process of plastic minds and willing feet. In one way the Sunday school pedagogue guides the feet of learners like the Greek slave who used to take hold of the child and lead him. It is never a one-sided process. It is always a double, reciprocal process. It is give-and-take mainly through question and answer, or through a meaningful discussion. It is therefore a very social and interdependent affair. The pupils need us for their guidance but we need them and their questions for our guidance of them.

It is more than talking at them, or over and above them. It is working and living with them and among them. It is catching the child's interests and directing these into wholesome channels.

Are We Guided by Principles?

We are living in a day of trained experts.

Experts have lived in every age but numerous as now, nor in so many. The specialists in science, in agriculture, in business, in the industrial and the in literature and in history are trained and women who know what they are about.

Ought not the leaders in our schools be trained as highly as these? Yes, they should be trained in the imparting Biblical knowledge, at what they are about, if they would plish the largest amount of good in their generation.

Our boys and girls are coming into public schools with wider and wider knowledge of secular affairs, and are receiving instruction under better and better teachers. Such children need the training given to them by those who know the Scriptures as meaningfully as possible. They come into our classes with a broader knowledge of current events gathered from newspapers, books and magazines during the week. The instructor's classes will have a large advantage if they have a knowledge of Biblical facts as accurate and reliable as possible.

The facts may often be very simple, but not every simple fact is fundamental though the opposite is likely to be true. Many times real simplicity means getting out of nonessentials through a deal of effort.

What we want is intelligent guidance of our pupils through the practice of principles.

Adaptation

Large, fundamental principles have many different forms of expression in different years or grades of work in day schools throughout the church. Every one who is serious about the importance of the adaptation ought to grow clearer. Adaptation briefly stated is suiting knowledge to the age and the needs of the pupils. It means feeding a morsel to the younger children, and a meal to the older ones who are ready for it. It means preparing the right kind of the right persons at the right time and thus securing the best spiritual results possible.

With Jesus adaptation was a principle. Never has it been more fully used than in the numerous parables ever attractive, and so full of conclusions.

The same international lesson presented in many different forms. The content is not the same for the primary, the adolescent or the pupil in the family, for the parents, and the grandparent is impossible for their respective experiences have been so very different.

Boys and girls are never mere offshoots or miniature men and women. They see with different eyes, and hear with different ears, and work with different minds. To the adult it may be easy to talk through "Jesus Walking on the Water," but to the boy it may be easier to give a lesson on the exciting boat ride on the stormy Sea of Galilee. To the adult it may be wiser to talk of "The Clean and the Unclean;" to the boys and girls it may be more to begin the lesson by talking of washing, of hand-washing and of foot-washing. For the adult we may profit of "The Mission to the Gentiles;" to the child it may be clearer to talk of "Christianity for everybody. Allow

"The Sign of the Leaven;" let children by talking of the signs which show that some people believe in, the for example, which one of the Gospels mentions.

Every teacher's privilege to help care the tender lives that can blossom and

Teacher's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

The Spread of Christianity in Asia

Biblical Reading—Matt. 13-31-33.

Text—They rehearsed all things which he had done with them, and that he had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles 14:27b.

The Lesson in Brief

Came the birth of the Christian Church. In this quarter we have been studying the spread of Christianity, the development of the Christian church. I The in this development. How important are the stories of the life of Paul, with his early history; of Philip, of the African, of the officer Cornelius, of the governor, Paulus. How interesting the story of Paul, the generous Christian of Jerusalem, the missionary, of Dorcas, the woman, of Timothy, Paul's friend. This development was aided by many wonders. The miracle of Paul's conversion is one. The two visions of Peter and Paul form another. Aid sent by a prophecy and its fulfillment; cures healed; Dorcas raised to life; powerful answer to prayer in Peter's special gifts of the Spirit—these miracles in aid of the growing church. III. This development was in the opposition. Examples—the persecutions of Paul; the death of the imprisonment of Peter, etc. Much endurance was a help, turned out to be less of the church. IV. The entrance of the church through missionary work. Paul was a great foreign missionary—Barnabas, Peter and Philip. A church will always be a missionary church. Why? V. Results. It is now years since the church began. Note the results to which a knowledge of the Bible has been extended, the number of converts, the character of the converts. Ministers Manual.

An Illustration

A gentleman who had traveled widely, much away from the beaten path, one day with a party of Americans. For the first time he saw a foreign missionary enterprise in the flesh. Trotters' mission there. The man on the steamer he said to some of them, "I am frank to say that I have not been interested in foreign missions, but now I am different. I now believe in foreign missions because of what I have seen," and he hesitated to tell others from that day that that day had meant to him. "Are you blind that the rest of us? If we are in the blessings that have come to this neighborhood through the work of God, and through the lives of men and women, then you simply ought to believe in foreign missions. Now the need in your own life then you know just a little of the need in the lives of millions who have not yet known Christ, but whom he loves just as he does you.

The Mission Motive

Dr. Richards tells about a community of Congo Christians that became aroused about the heathen Africans on the other side of the river. "We are saved, and they know nothing about Jesus," they cried. "What shall we do?" At least fifty of them took some food and crossed the river and stayed among the villages there for days, preaching Jesus.

SELECTED REVIEW METHODS

Great Sentence Review

Write upon a large number of pieces of cardboard the great sentences of the Quarter's lessons, one sentence on a piece. You will use such sentences (or parts of sentences) as: "We also are men of like passions with you," "The hand of the Lord was with them," "Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Lay these cards on the table (or on a book), writing side downward, and have the pupils take them up one by one, read it aloud, and tell who said it and on what occasion. If the pupil is not able to tell, any other pupil may do so, thus obtaining the card. The pupil that holds the largest number of cards at the close of the exercise is the victor.

A Character Review

Each member of the class will write at home and read to the class on Sunday a brief character sketch of one of the characters of the Quarter's lessons: Peter, Dorcas, Cornelius, Rhoda, John, Mark, Ananias, Barnabas, Bar-Jesus, Silas, Timothy, Luke. As to Paul, you will suggest various topics, such as Paul the Persecutor, Paul the Missionary, Paul the Orator, Paul the Traveler, Paul the Organizer, Paul the Writer, Paul the Friend, Paul the Christian Hero. Limit the little essays to one minute each and assign two or more to each pupil if your class is not large enough to assign one pupil to each theme. The pupils may be allowed to select their own topics.

An Expanding-church Review

The plan of the Acts is in Christ's command and prophecy (Acts 1:8), "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." This Quarter shows the expansion of the church according to this program, and the review may be conducted along these lines. Taking a blackboard or a large sheet of paper, draw five concentric circles, with considerable space between them. The inner circle will be marked "Jerusalem," the next "Palestine," the next "Syria," the next "Asia Minor," and the next "Greece." These circles will be filled up, by the class, with brief statements of the events occurring in the geographical zones thus designated. Draw from the center four radii, thus dividing the entire diagram into quarters. One quarter will be for dates, one for events, one for persons, and one for places. The inner circle will hold two events,—the deliverance of Peter from prison and the Jerusalem council. Add in the other quarters of the circle the dates of these, the persons involved, and the places: the Castle of Antonia, the house of Mary, possibly the "upper room" for the council. In the same way the second circle will contain the healing of Aeneas, the raising of Dorcas, and the meeting of Peter and Cornelius. The third circle will contain the conversion of Saul, the choice of the first missionaries, and the report of the first missionary journey. The fourth circle will contain the visit to Cyprus, and the first and second visits to the various cities of Asia Minor. The fifth circle will contain the Macedonian call and the events at Philippi. The teacher will fill in the chart as the class dictates and the class will copy the chart, as it is filled up, on their own smaller charts.

C. E. at Canton, Ohio

The Endeavorers at Canton have had their regular meetings during the summer months in spite of the hot weather. Our members are regular attendants at the worship services so feel that they would rather come early and enjoy our programs, than to stay at home and endure the heat.

For some months we have been holding services at the Goodwill Union Mission one night each month. Sometimes the Endeavorers take charge of the entire program, music and preaching, while other times we have our good pastor, Dr. Beal, preach and we furnish the musical part of the service. This is very good experience in practical Christian service for our Endeavorers.

At a recent meeting, when the topic was about finding happiness, some of the young folks gave original "cook-book recipes" for Happiness, and so we are sharing them with you in this article.

Recipe No. 1—

- 1 Heart, made pure by the cleansing blood of the Lord Jesus.
- 1 Mind, full of pure, clean thoughts.
- 2 Eyes, determined to see only the good.
- 2 Ears, that hear only the truth.
- 2 Hands, that render acts of kindness.
- 2 Feet, that walk the straight and narrow path.
- 1 Tongue, willing to speak forth the gospel of good news.
- 1 Life, consecrated to God's service.

Mix these thoroughly with prayer and Bible Study.—(Beulah Guiley-McGinnis).

Recipe No. 2—

It makes a difference Young People, who writes this recipe,—one who enjoys the world, or one who enjoys the Christ Life. The two recipes would probably be quite different if we should compare them, so don't take any recipe,—analyze it yourself, bake your own cake, and then it will be founded on personal facts. Let me just mention that I do not believe that one has begun to find Happiness until he has learned to appreciate "appreciation." How much kinder and more thoughtful of each other we would be if we were to learn this art. The old world is hungry, the home is hungry, for just the small favors, and the little "thank you's" which cost not dollars nor cents, but a little thoughtfulness.

For this Happiness I would sift together a good physical body, an intellect and above all a keen spiritual understanding. The fountain of content must spring up in the mind, and he who seeks happiness by changing anything but his own disposition will waste his life in fruitless effort. We also must seek goodness around us, plus goodness inside. Add associates who are in your own circle, who love your Christ; who have given up worldly pleasures for spiritual happiness. Idleness and indifference, pride, temper and anger will spoil this recipe every time. The cake will fall unless backed by good influence, integrity, ambition. Beat good manners, and judgment with these and then frost with Cheerfulness.

Let me say again, that we ruin the happiness of life when we attempt to raise it too high. There is a real happiness on earth, but most people because they seek outward circumstances and external good, and neglect to seek it where it alone dwells,—within one's own heart,—fail to find it. My prayer for you is that you may seek the rich possessions for yourself from the Right Channel. The life in Christ will give you real happiness and your cup of joy will be pressed down and running over.—(Miss Edna Dean).

Recipe No. 3—

Utensils needed: 1 large bowl of Desire to be happy; one mixing spoon of Determination to like the things we have to do. Ingredients required: to every ounce of Energy in the maker's life, add the following: one cup of Thoughtfulness of others, two cups of love, two tablespoons of Patience, four tablespoons Courage,—season with a few choice bits of the Word of God. Mix well and drop in either small or large amounts (as the opportunity affords) in the pans called "other people's lives." Place in the oven of Prayer and allow the Master Baker to produce the results. Before mixing, be sure the bowl is cleansed of all specks of self-pride or self-pity, which always spoil the final product. This recipe is guaranteed to result in Happiness, for "the proof of the pudding is in the eating" you know.—(G. M. Spice).

One of our latest meetings was held as a campfire meeting, around an improvised fire in a darkened room. The program was very impressive as the topic was about Nature proclaiming God and his infinite wisdom. We should like to read more news on the Christian Endeavor page from other Christian Endeavorers. Won't you write and tell us what YOU are doing?

If permitted by the Editor, we want at this time to extend our heartfelt appreciation as a Mission, and our sympathy to the sorrowing wife and child who have shared the Doctor's mission zeal, and his devoted service.

Dr. Gardiner had looked forward with such joy to the publication of "Undaunted Hope." None would have read it with greater interest than he. He died the very eve of its publication—which has no doubt been greatly aided by his prayers.

Dr. Gribble Writes of the Death of a Missionary Friend

7648 Littlefield Blvd., Dearborn, Michigan.
September 7th, 1931.

Dear Dr. Baer:

Now that the manuscripts of "Undaunted Hope" are ready for the publishers, as far as my work is concerned, and only waiting for the typist's completion of the same, I may take a few moments to write you and Evangelist readers.

One of the many warm friends of the Mission Oubangui-Chari has gone to his reward.

On Saturday, August 29th, during the Foreign Mission Session, Dr. James C. Gardiner of 939 Wesley Avenue, Evanston, Illinois, passed to his reward. Twenty-eight years ago, when a struggling medical student in Chicago, I was first brought into contact with the Doctor and his devoted wife and daughter. Although never members of the same denomination, the family being members of the Methodist Church, and close associates of the Christian Missionary Alliance, the friendship has continued without interruption through the years.

Through the twenty-three years of my missionary career not a single month has elapsed without my receiving a letter from this devoted family, usually in the Doctor's hand-writing.

When with my husband I returned to America in 1915, their's was one of the many homes to welcome us as their own. When later in that year Marguerite made her advent at Hahnemann Hospital in Chicago, the Gardiner home in Evanston was the goal of the little one's first pilgrimage. There she spent her first Thanksgiving Day. Miss Myers, as a candidate for the work, and later as a furloughed missionary, has been warmly welcomed there. On both their furloughs Brother and Sister Jobson and their children have been honored guests in the Gardiner home. Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel were likewise entertained there.

Miss Tyson spent days of happy fellowship with them, and it was with great regret that Dr. Gardiner often referred to Miss Emmert's inability to visit them. And so on throughout the list of our missionaries—all were welcome. Too far advanced in age to throw their home open continually to a missionary family they yet considered it one of their chief privileges to entertain furloughed missionaries of the Oubangui-Chari Mission, and to correspond with them when on the field.

More than that, at the family altar the missionaries of the Oubangui-Chari Mission were remembered in prayer twice daily throughout the years.

Dr. Gardiner was an expert dentist, and he counted it a great joy to serve the furloughed missionaries in the very necessary capacity.

Argentina

Since returning to Argentina I have visited all of our branch missions, from two to eight days in each place, have now returned to Rio Cuarto to my writing and help as needed for work. With September spring weather and with the warmer weather will have evangelistic campaigns which will continue through the winter again.

My last tour was among our churches in the southern part of our district. In Realico I found the pastor's wife, Mrs. Zeche, rather seriously ill. She has been taken to Buenos Aires where, writing she is in a hospital being prepared for an operation. Their little daughter, months of age, is being cared for by a family of believers in Realico.

The meetings in Realico were attended in spite of the extreme weather. We always have extreme weather when you have extreme heat in the States, and vice versa. Brother Zeche won a large place for himself in the hearts of the people of Realico, and the mission people are very poor and the work was very severe in the pampa, the weather greatly blessing the work. There here has a very fine organ which Brother Zeche has provided.

Renanco we also had good at- and good interest. I preached spe- the members. Both in Huinca and here is a fine group of young peo- promises much for the church. Sickel has greatly improved the ue of the peso, however, continues on account of the uncertainty as vernment. The old regime, copied Tammany machine was put down lution a year ago and we are now dictator, who as a General of the very stern. He is cleaning up the morally to a commendable extent, and also bringing it out of its financial chaos, but is considered by many as a tyrant. The former government is accused of defrauding the country of more than fifty million dollars.

The problem here as everywhere, is to get public employes who are honest. Public institutions are mismanaged that private pockets may be filled. There is absolutely no hope for the world except the Gospel and that is the very thing that it is rejecting. The alternative is to reap what it is sowing, and the political, moral and religious skies are full of portents that indicate that the reaping time is near.

Our mission family is all well and we are rejoicing in seeing fruits of our labors. We greatly miss our son Robert who, as I am writing, should be disembarking in New Orleans from whence he will proceed at once to the conference at Winona Lake and then to the Ashland College Seminary. We have applicants for the work, but we feel that we must require a very high standard, as the mediocre workers will hardly be able to succeed in this tare-befilled field. Pray that we may succeed in fully evangelizing it before it be too late.

The Bible coach should leave again in a few days with Brethren Yett, Pisani and Sotola, and work the towns between Rio Cuarto and Rosario. There is no other denomination at work in this long line of prosperous towns. C. F. YODER.

ing to a man of seventy-four, is it not? By special arrangement the Sisterhood Girls will provide the music for the evening preaching service during the month of September.

The Altoona church, during the year, has sustained great loss in the death of some of its devoted members. Sister Burtnett, an aged lady, devout in her spiritual life, a real mother in Israel, an ardent supporter of the church both financially and in attendance. Her profound faith was an inspiration to all of us. Sister Shope, wife of Elder J. E. Shope, also passed away during the year. She too was a faithful and devout Christian, a Bible reading and praying woman. Within the last month the Senior Deacon of the church passed away, D. E. Furry. Many years did he serve faithfully in the office to which the church had called him. Very quietly and peacefully he passed away after an illness of but a single day, aged 74 years. He was a man of profound faith, devotional in spirit, a constant reader of the Bible and just as regular in his attendance at church and Sunday school. While the family misses him in and about the home, the whole church misses him in the sanctuary. He had a comprehensive knowledge of the Bible and was very rarely wrong when he gave an answer to a Bible question. Two daughters and three sons survive him,—all of them supremely devoted to their mother. His surviving companion is one of the sweetest and most devoted Christian women it has ever been the privilege of the writer to know. Her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Gerhart, are among the most faithful members of this congregation, always in their place whether a Sabbath or week-day service. Sister Gerhart is well known in Sisterhood circles. Lastly, Brother Sylvester Berkeybile also passed to his reward. A family of three, two brothers and a sister, a happy group, though neither of them married. Charley passed away a few years ago, Sylvester a few weeks ago, leaving Sister Clara alone. Their home is at Mifflin, Pennsylvania, eighty miles removed from Altoona, hence not within attendance distance of the church, but nevertheless faithful and regular in their contributions to the church. They are known throughout the brotherhood for the support they have given to Foreign Missions.

During the year we have had the privilege of having with us several missionaries and other prominent speakers, all of whom brought us living messages. Brother John Locke, Woodstock, Virginia, spent two days with us. On Sunday he brought to us two fine messages, the one on Christian education in which our young brother specializes. Monday evening he gave his lecture on a recent tour through Palestine. The lecture was accompanied by pictures thrown on the canvas which added greatly to the interest and helpfulness of the lecture. Our young brother has before him a glorious future. Brother C. F. Yoder, dean of South American Missions, came to us with a most inspiring illustrated lecture, truly illuminating. Sister Tyson also paid us a visit and all of us were helped and inspired by her message. Sister Helen Garber was here in the interests of the Sisterhood Girls. Her presence and her helpful and inspiring messages proved a benediction to us all. Early in the year we had with us Rev. Willis E. Ronk, pastor of the Meyersdale Brethren church. Brother Ronk is an effective speaker. He brought to us living messages, not in a financial way, the long con- pression has not interfered with shed our church activities. It is one of our people have become dis- e and we do not wonder. When ople have to fight poverty, unless ounded in the faith, there will be down of their spiritual ardor. Not our people are in financial dis- ee of the six Altoona banks have ir doors. One holds part of our hool money, another the Woman's y money, and all three keep be- id doors the hard earned savings al people. In one of these banks, a, are held the savings of seven school children. Under present it is impossible for us to main- ormer budget. The pastor shares people the financial burden, return- a double tithe.

ee one of the glorious things in on is the place it gives to a living ook forward hopefully. It will be ed that it was poverty and its ac- g distress that in olden time drove Israel back to God. Prosperity was to them, an unfailing sign of God's favor; adversity, on the other hand, was an unmistakable evidence of God's displeasure. If the present depression will serve to bring the American nation back to God it will not have been in vain. The unfortunate thing about it all is that in this case, as always the innocent suffer with the guilty. What the pastor is trying to do just now is to show his people that it is possible to turn our misfortune into a means of grace.

Notwithstanding the depression the church is moving forward, slowly, of course, but yet moving. Since our last report there have been some accessions to the church by baptism and several by letter. Except for the usual summer slump, the church has not slackened in its spiritual activities. All of the usual Sabbath and week-day services have been maintained. Special training for the children and young people has been provided for. On two different occasions the children have rendered very creditable programs, consisting principally in reciting simple Bible lessons in the form of questions and answers, a service to which the pastor has devotedly applied himself. One of the programs rendered by the children covered, briefly of course, the life of Jesus from the manger to the empty tomb. It was an impressive service, interspersed with appropriate music, and a most agreeable surprise to a well-filled house of people. While we do not now have a Christian Endeavor society, the young people are not being neglected. Indeed, most of my work is with the children and young people. Becom-

a dull moment in any of his sermons. He will be a welcome visitor here at any time. He is much loved by his people at Meyersdale, and we do not wonder at that, for he is the possessor of pleasing personality.

Among the disappointments of my life, few have been more keen than my inability to attend the recent National Conference. There are a number of very good reasons why this is so, known to many of my readers and therefore need not be mentioned here.

I gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a special message of sympathy from the Ministerial Association touching my physical disability; also messages from personal friends and brethren. For their information and others who may be concerned I wish to say that the trouble is periodical, and it would have been utmost folly even to have started for the conference. At this writing I am feeling fine and am looking forward to permanent relief. My people here are not accustomed to hear me talk about physical ailments. I have enjoyed unusually good health not having missed any services on account of illness during the eight years I have been with this people. For this I am profoundly grateful. If my reckoning is correct there is now but one brother minister who holds an even record with me in attending National Conferences,—Brother J. Allen Miller. Had I been permitted to attend the last one it looks as though even Brother Miller would be one behind.

We are entering upon the new church year with increased enthusiasm and with that spirit of hopefulness which is so characteristic of the religion of Jesus. We crave the prayers of the church in our behalf.

It is with genuine pleasure that we hear of the fine spirit which prevailed throughout the sessions of the Conference. Insofar as its work has the approval of the divine Master we pray God's blessing upon it.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

By the time these notes reach the readers, the College will have been in operation a week. At this writing, prospects are bright for a good enrollment.

Professors Puterbaugh, Haun, and Black have returned to Ashland.

The college recently enjoyed a visit from Mr. and Mrs. John Rishel of Pittsburgh, both former students and ardent supporters of the College.

Mr. J. P. Horlacher, who will soon take his doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania, recently paid the College a visit.

Dr. Bell and his family have left Ashland as a place of residence and have gone to Dayton, Ohio. The community and College will greatly miss them.

My visit to northern Canada was of great scientific interest to me. Especially was I interested in the Royal Seismograph, located far north in Canada. The keeper took me into the place and we spent some time examining the instruments and the records.

As is well known, the earth's crust shows many tremors and this instrument records them all. It recently recorded one and the exact time to the second, which reached it from Japan. The tremor lasted about three minutes but it took the earth about three hours to settle back to normal.

The station was located on a mountain-side in a cavity blasted into solid Archaean bed rock. One's pulse, if the hand rests upon the instrument, is very distinctly recorded. Cows walking above the station leave a record and "cow corrections" sometimes have to be made.

Also, I think, something could be learned from the way the Dominion government handles crime and liquor. Also about the gentility of the typical English "bobbie,"—the dominion police.

Dr. and Mrs. L. S. Bauman, of California, recently paid the College a welcome visit. Word was also received that their son, Paul, had recently received a fellowship in the department of Biology at the University of Southern California, where he will soon take his Master's degree.

Brother and Sister Jobson stopped off for a few minutes on their way to sail for Africa. It would have been a privilege if they could have stayed longer.

Since Brother Ankrum left here it seems that no one has taken it upon themselves to write of our work. It was the first of March that Brother Ankrum left us. Some thought the church would die, or at least do no good without a pastor. But we didn't see our way clear to hire a new pastor for a while, so we all put our shoulders to the wheel and pushed all we could and have kept the work going.

We had a very interesting Easter program. It was too lengthy for one night and we divided it up and gave it on two Sunday nights to large and appreciative audiences. The Christian Endeavor society was responsible for the program. We have two societies of young people, both of which are doing good work. We had our communion service last June. Brother B. F. Owen, of Nappanee, Indiana, came to us and preached and conducted the communion. We had the largest attendance we ever had at a communion service and the service was very much enjoyed by all. Brother Owen preached one sermon at the Salem church and one in the Oak Hill church while here. Mr. R. T. Huberd, a lawyer, kindly consented to give us a lecture one night and it was well attended and enjoyed. We also gave a Mother's Day program that was well attended. We have had two good Sunday schools and have prayer service Sunday nights and Bible study Wednesday nights. Quite often we have close to one hundred at prayer service. We have good music at our church and our singers are often upon to assist in the music at the churches of the town.

While we have been carrying on we could for six months, of course, not go on forever without a pastor. Our last business meeting we gave Brother Eppley to become our pastor the first. He accepted the call here on the field and on September 1st he preached two sermons, one at each church. We had good crowds and enjoyed the sermons very much.

I have just written these few lines and the brotherhood know we are still on the good work. We ask the prayer of God's people that we may be used to do a great work in his name and to fulfill our obligations.

J. A. DUBOIS

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

During the past few weeks our pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen, has made one of our young people from week to week responsible for the Wednesday evening prayer meeting. Each one chose his own topic and arranged the program. We were used to having them take charge of the Christian Endeavor meeting, but our number were doubtful of the ability to run a regular prayer meeting. Of us who attended had our eyes opened to the depths of sincerity and spirituality and the real desire to know the Spirit of God. We say, Praise the Lord, it worked.

Taking the admonition in 2 Timothy 2:15, they certainly studied to show themselves approved unto God, as workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth. It was inspiring to see the truths they searched out and brought forth. Also the prayers they uttered for guidance in all things. We were so glad to feel that the Holy Spirit had continued in each case we had a spiritual friend who would advise any pastor who is in need of the spiritual soundness of the people to try a similar plan, and assure that he and his people will be young people just as eager and just as earnest in seeking to know the Spirit of life as the older ones. We certainly appreciate their handling of our prayer meetings.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS AT ACCI-DENT

Last summer it was possible for the pastor of the Terra Alta, Grafton, West Virginia circuit to preach every Saturday evening at Accident, Maryland, but since it was impossible to repeat these services this summer, arrangements were made instead for a week of evangelistic meetings. There had been just two services held in this church previous to the time of the meeting, this summer, and the result was two converts to the Lord Jesus Christ. The meeting began on Tuesday evening, September 1, and closed Saturday evening, September 5, with a communion service, the first in this church for several years. On Saturday afternoon eleven persons, mostly young people, entered the waters of baptism, having confessed the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Savior. There were about thirty-five people surrounding the communion tables in the evening hour.

The time was ripe, and the Lord had prepared these people beforehand for the hearing of the Gospel, and this was merely the reaping of a harvest prepared before. Although these folks have had no regular preaching services they have been faithful in keeping up their Sunday school. The new converts were those who had been subject to the testimony for the Lord in the Sunday school which they had been attending there.
There are many more left in that community who have not taken the Lord as their Savior, and we are praying that there may be some way opened up that they too might be saved, and that these beginning the Christian life might have regular spiritual nourishment.

Yours in Christ,

LESLIE E. LINDOWER.

THE CALLING OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

ripen later into pure manhood and womanhood. There are no two of them exactly alike. There are a few very bright ones;
there are a good many bright ones; there are very many average ones; there are perhaps some rather dull ones who are little below the average; but there are very few dull ones. You are likely to have some of each kind of these groups to deal with in any one class. This is one reason why every teacher needs to be so many teachers to every class, and needs to be so wide-awake, versatile minded and original.

The principle of adaptation has been recognized long ago in the public school system. We are realizing to a greater and greater extent that it must be recognized in order to get the lesson and learner together in our religious teaching. There will be enough waste at best. The teacher should not expect the child to get very much of his presentation of truth at one sitting, or moving, or standing, whatever the child's posture may be. Every teacher ought to remember that the kingdom of heaven was presented to the people long ago in many different forms. Great is any teacher who can speak in parables as his disciples and his pupils are able to bear, in terms that are intelligible and suitable of the learner's experience.

To prepare a good outline of the lesson will help one to present the material of the lesson, but it will not do to become a slave to this outline. On Some Sunday morning you no doubt have found it necessary to begin in about the middle of your outline providing the pupil really wanted to know the answer to some important question. It may sometimes become necessary to rearrange your outline while on your feet before your class in order that you may keep their interest with you throughout the recitation.

Originality

Originality is involved in adaptation. It will convert any one fundamental principle into numerous devices, methods and plans.
It will make many applications of a single principle.

Sometimes the ear gate will be used for conveying truth to the child, sometimes the eye gate, sometimes the hand gate.

The parent can know best probably how much originality the teacher needs in order to deal with a class where no two learners are exactly alike. No two pupils will demand quite the same presentation. Nor will any two recitations be conducted in exactly the same manner from day to day, from Sunday to Sunday. Originality means ability to vary the method of presentation. This requires ability to handle the novel, to present the old truth in a new way. It means ability to plan carefully as well as prayer-fully.

Enthusiasm

A knowledge of the finest principles, or the use of the best lessons and methods will all fail in the end unless back of these there is an enthusiastic leader. To be able to inspire and set afire young souls is a great art. To be able to make them hungry and thirsty for the diviner things, for righteousness itself is a great joy.

He who loseth his life for his pupils' sake will enrich his own seahood and at the same time increase the soul-life of the learners who follow him. To become lost in, interested and absorbed in, and enthused about your work will attract, hypnotize, and fascinate every member of your class.

Principles in the main must be taught through the intellect. Enthusiasm for principles, a burning desire for the possession of truth, a passion and taste for the finer things of life must often be caught from those that are so full of uplifting visions that they tend to draw all individuals into them.

DON'T'S FOR SUNDAY STAY-AT-HOMES

Don't stay away because company came;

Don't stay away because it rains. That would not keep you from your business.

Don't stay away because you won't be

Don't stay away because it isn't your de-you out of Heaven.

Don't stay away because you have no influence; the churchgoer preaches a sermon as long as the way thither.

Don't stay away because you know more than the preacher; God may have something to say to you worth hearing.

Don't stay away because the church is imperfect; should you find and join the perfect church, its perfection would cease.

Don't stay away because you do not need the church; it isn't so. If you must look at the dirt six days, take one to examine the clouds.—Christian Age.

THE DUCK'S DILEMMA

Have you ever heard animals—beasts and birds and even tiny insects—talking to each other? If you watch them quietly and carefully, you will find they all do. Of course some of the big ones, like horses and cattle, speak quite loudly and call to each other a long way off. In a big flock of sheep, of thousands perhaps, where every mother ewe has a lamb and all are calling at the same time, every lamb knows its own mother's voice and can come straight to her.

Some animals and little insects which have no voice can speak by movements of their bodies. The little busy-body ants, which run about so quietly, can tell things by touching each other with their feelers; and if you listen carefully and watch what happens, you will soon be convinced that every creature you know can say all it needs to its own companions.

Now I am going to tell about some ducks talking to each other. They were so tame that I was able to stand close to them while I watched. If I had never before noticed that birds could talk to each other, I would have been quite sure of it after what I saw and heard that Saturday afternoon.

There were three black ducks concerned in this matter. The fat old Father Drake was asleep in his shed at the time and did not take any part in the curious thing that happened, and I have often wondered why.

The three had all been hatched on the same day; so they had known each other all their lives like sisters. In fact, they were so much alike that you could hardly tell one from the other. We shall christen them Mrs. Quackles, Mrs. Quoggles, and Mrs. Quaggles, so that I can tell you about them easily.

These ducks lived in a yard at one end of a big shed which had a wooden wall with a hole cut in it, so that they could go into the shed to sleep at night. In one corner of the yard beside the shed there was a big round tank in which the water could run off the roof of the shed. Mrs. Quackles had hollowed out a nice little nest on the ground in the corner between the shed and the tank. She had laid quite a lot of eggs and was sitting on them very happily.

Now, it happened that I was digging a hole in the middle of the yard, intending to plant a tree. I was in a hurry, because it looked as if it might rain soon. As I was working I noticed that the overflow from the tank would pour water straight down upon Mrs. Quackles if it rained and the tank overflowed. It seemed a shame to think that her nest and the eggs would all be spoiled.

What could I do to prevent the disaster? It was impossible to move the eggs to another place, because one of the rules—they have quite a lot—of the Muscovy duck tribe is that if their nest has been disturbed they will not sit on the eggs again. So I decided to try an experiment.

I knocked the side out of the box and then placed the box very carefully over the eggs. Of course Mrs. Quackles waddled off the nest while I was doing so and stood watching me from the middle of the yard. Then I put a small piece of tin on top of the box to make a good waterproof roof and put a couple of bricks upon it to make everything secure.

When I had finished making this nice little nest house, I went a short distance away to watch if Mrs. Quackles was satisfied with my arrangements for her comfort.

And this is what happened: Mrs. Quackles waddled toward the nest very carefully indeed, on tip-toe, as it were, with her neck stretched out as far as it could go; but when she saw the nice nest house that I had made for her, she was very doubtful about it. She evidently decided that it would be wrong for her to enter without the advice and comment of her friends. So what did she do but waddle off through the hole in the shed, in which Mrs. Quoggles and Mrs. Quaggles had just gone to bed!

"Quack! Quack!" said Mrs. Quackles. "Do wake up, Mrs. Quaggles and Mrs. Quoggles! I have something important to show you. You really are a pair of sleepy heads. You know it is only just after sundown!"

"Why, Mrs. Quackles," said Mrs. Quoggles crossly, "we're not asleep at all! We only come in here early because it is such a cold day. What is it you want to show us?"

"Well," said Mrs. Quackles, "the man from the big house has been doing such funny things to my nest. He has put a box over it and some iron and bricks on top. Come, and I'll show you!"

So all three ducks waddled quickly over to look at my beautiful nest house. At first Mrs. Quackles did most of the talking.

"Look," said she; "you can see why I don't know whether it's quite safe to go inside. It might fall over, or that iron might fall on my head, and those bricks might break my eggs, and after all the trouble I had laying them I don't want that to happen."

"I should think not indeed," agreed Mrs. Quoggles.

But here Mrs. Quaggles inter-
"Why," she said, "can't you see, sister, the man has done? He has made a for you just like his house. I heard the woman yesterday that he must their veranda roof with new iron, so could come through."

"I see," said Mrs. Quackles. "The the house and the iron is the roof the rain out. But what are the brick

"Why, look!" said Mrs. Quaggles ing to my veranda with her beak man has put bricks on that new iron on his own veranda. I heard the boy to get some nails in town ne and that he would have to leave th there to keep the iron down till t came. That's what your bricks are —to keep the rain roof on till the n nails."

"How nice of him!" said Mrs. Q "I'll hop in and see if my nest is So Mrs. Quackles waddled in to l and sat carefully down on the egg simply fine," she called out, "and much darker than outside! I feel sl ready. Good night, Mrs. Quaggles Quaggles."

"Good night, sister," quacked the and they too waddled off sleepily nests.—P. B. Prior, in Christian Age

CIRCUIT RIDER

By Rev. H. S. Tool

Love Itinerant, the footprints
Of thy steed we trace no more
Through the valleys,—o'er the highlands
To some lonely settler's door.

Paths that knew those weary journeys
To thy bowers of secret prayer,
Know the tired feet no longer,—
See no more a face of care.

We behold thy journeys wending
Through the prairies—o'er the height,
Far beyond the western ocean
To the lands of sin and night.

We, thy children, trail the prairies,
Climb the mountains, cross the sea,— Break the bands of human slavery
For a world that is to be.

THE Lord Alone

Today I have been reading in the second chapter of the prophet Isaiah that wonderful description of the Millennial Kingdom of our Lord Jesus, when he shall rule on David's throne, when his Word shall go forth from Jerusalem, when he shall decide the controversies between nations, and when the implements of war shall be turned into the useful implements of peace. (Isa. 2:1-4)

But because of the inherent wickedness and rebellion of man against his Maker, that blessed Kingdom cannot be established without a period of judgment. Hard as the saying may be to the proud and self-sufficient, it remains true that man must be taught a profound lesson before any Golden Age of humanity can be ushered in. He must be taught that all the resources of human genius and skill, wonderful as they are, cannot settle the problems of the world. He must be made to see his own spiritual bankruptcy and moral inability. The latter part of Isaiah's second chapter tells of the judgment through which God will teach man his lesson.

As I read the passage again today, one striking statement made a deep impression upon my mind. Twice it occurs in the chapter, verses 11 and 17, sounding the doom of God upon all that is high and lifted up. "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day."

"The Lord alone." In the dreadful chaos of that day, when the institutions of civilization break down utterly and no genius of man can be found sufficient to hold back the world from the pit of catastrophe, then the Lord will show himself to be the "blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," infinitely able to do that which man has failed to do. He alone shall be exalted in that day.

There is a strange paradox in all this. When man is exalted it results in his ultimate degradation, but when Christ is exalted man is lifted to a higher place. Our Lord declared that it would be so: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." (John 12:32). True this text refers to the Cross primarily, but its truth is externally valid. It will be for man's own good when "The Lord alone" shall be exalted.

If you are exalting him in your own life now, you need have no fear of that coming judgment upon human pride and rebellion.

THE Morning Newspapers

The news is rather gloomy this morning (Monday). Japan is ready to make war on China, and has already killed a respectable number of Chinese, while China appeals to the League of Nations to do something about it. The League, with plenty of troubles of its own, will probably be careful not to interfere too seriously. In the meantime Russia watches with interest, for the locality involved is highly important to the Soviet government. The "kings of the east" become more important every day.

An earthquake shook parts of Ohio and Indiana last night, making the dishes rattle and chimneys fall, and reminding people that the earth is still a precarious place not entirely safe for human life. People living in these sections should read Matthew 24:7, a prophecy of the last days. "There shall be famines and earthquakes in divers places." China is having the famines.

But to those who have money the most important news will be the action of the British government in suspending "temporarily" the "Gold Standard." Men are hoping for the best, but no one can predict the final outcome. The financial structure of the world, never too stable, seems to be tottering. Even the "Gold Standard," god of the international bankers, is losing its prestige and may be discarded if anything can be found to take its place. Perhaps Isaiah saw this too when he declared that in the Day of the Lord "Men shall cast away their idols of silver, and their idols of gold ... to the moles and to the bats." (Isa. 2:20)

MOTH and Rust

If you have money, do not regard it too highly nor hold it too tightly. It may not be worth much tomorrow. Any government of the world, with a stroke of the pen, can reduce its value to nothing. Remember what happened in Russia and Germany, and then read what our Lord said in Matthew 6:19, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, where moth and rust consume."

Put your money where it is safe, in sending the Gospel to the heathen lands, in preparing young men to preach the Gospel, in the winning of souls, in the building up of the Church of Christ. This is what our Lord called "treasures in heaven," invested in values which depend upon no human bankers or governments, values which never fluctuate, but are eternal.

THEATRICAL Dirt

William F. McDermott, theatrical editor and reviewer of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, writes that he is often asked why such men as himself do not denounce the vulgar and indecent shows which abound on the stage today. He answers that such denunciation only increases the public interest and attendance.

As a concrete example he cites the case of a New York stage production which was unmercifully scored by critics for its dirt and smut. One prominent theatrical critic spoke of it as an "idyll of Sodom and Gomorrah," said it was "an emetic rather than an entertainment," and suggested that although the new theater in which the show was presented was equipped with numerous conveniences, it lacked "a vomitorium."

And how did the theater-going public react to this plain indictment of a filthy entertainment? The first week's business reached the enormous total of $75,000.00. Then the police got busy and compelled the producers to eliminate the worst features, with the result that attendance immediately dropped.

Mr. McDermott's conclusion was that if the theatrical reviewer is interested in public morality, he had better leave the dirty play strictly alone, not even denounce it, lest he advertise and contribute to its success.

All of which proves that if you change the character of human industry you must first change the heart who produce and support them.

"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." There is way.

Alcohol and Mortality in Canada

Alcohol kills, sometimes directly and sometimes indirectly. It is an enemy writes Ben H. Spence, Canadian journalist for the World League Against Alcohol.

On the highways of Canada it is proven daily what a dangerous mixture of alcohol and gasoline are. Who can relate between the increase in highway accidents, accounts of which are daily in the newspapers, and the increase in the convictions for driving while intoxicated which went up from 202 in 1922, to 1,929 in 1929?

On Monday, August 17, the Toronto Globe contained accounts of no less than 10 motor accidents, in which four persons were killed and 42 injured. Ten of the victims were American tourists. Nine persons were arrested or held by the police on charges. Liquor is specifically mentioned in connection with many of these accidents. Here are some of the headings:

"Careening Truck Endangers Lives," "Accident Scene," "Motorcycle Operator Killed," "Two Men Killed in Motor Accident," "Hit-Run Victim," "Fatality Near Owe," "Fourth in Vicinity Within 10 Days," "Accidents Take Heavy Toll," "Nine Hurt in Crash at Charing Cross," "Dead States Tourists in Hamilton," "Mishaps on Many Highways," "Auto Victim in Balance at Cobalt."

On Tuesday, August 18, the Globe contained an inquest on the death of a tourist.

Entered as second class matter at Ashland, Ohio

Acceptance, special rate, section 1103, Act of Oct. 3, 1917
Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

Laymen's Day and an Emergency Call

Laymen's Day is one of the authorized special days of the Brethren church and the date set for it is the second day in October. The purpose of the day is two-fold. First, to give the laymen an opportunity to challenge their fellow members to get back of the work of the church more definitely and fully. It is the desire of the laymen to have charge of at least one of the church services on that day and thus to encourage them and to outline ways and means of becoming more active in service. The leaders of this movement say they hope to show the men of the church what the Women's Missionary Society is doing for the women.

Another part of their two-fold purpose is to aid by the taking of certain important projects in the church's task. By this they have started a fund to be used as a loan to aid them in their preparation for the Christian ministry. This offering is not to go to that purpose, however, but is devoted to be used by the Benevolence Board in meeting the deficit of the superannuated Ministers' Fund. The National Conference has approved the taking of an offering on Laymen's Day for this purpose and it constitutes an emergency call for funds to the amount with which to complete the year's payments to the aged and other beneficiaries of the Benevolence Board. There are very urgent reasons why this offering should be taken.

There is a deficit that must be made up or the aged ministers and their dependents will suffer want during this fall and winter. Many people are depending on their allowance to help them to meet the necessities of life. There will be rents to pay, and gas and light bills and water bills and coal bills and clothing bills—things that are essential to life and welfare—and these must be met somehow. The church has agreed to help them to the amount and they are counting on getting a check each month for that amount. If those checks are not received, who can wonder that hardships may be involved as a consequence! But the members of this Board cannot write the checks if the treasury is empty.

The Brethren people must meet this need or it will not be met. We cannot expect Methodists or Presbyterians or Baptists or Lutherans or members of any other group to make up this deficit and meet the needs of the superannuated leaders of the Brethren church. Neither can we expect any Community Chest nor the Red Cross to step in and make good our failure in this regard. There is truly no other source from which the money necessary can be obtained than from Brethren people. It is distinctly a Brethren responsibility.

Brethren people are morally obligated to answer this emergency call on behalf of our superannuated ministers. They served for many years, asking little and getting less. In fact, they were put absolutely no price on the preaching of the Word. They accepted whatever the churches were willing or able to pay. They went about proclaiming the Whole Gospel, defending the faith, establishing churches and enlarging and strengthening the already established. Wherever duty called they went without thought of monetary reward, but with large devotion and they espoused. Many of the churches whose blessings and joy are the fruits of their labors and much of the religious life we prize is the accumulation of their contributions. These (or some of them) who served us so well in earlier years need of financial help, and they look to us for it. They want us to do so, and we are under moral obligation to give what is needed. It is not "sweet charity" that we are asked to give, but the paying of a debt, the discharging of a duty. We cannot honorably stop short of the complete fulfillment of our obligation. We cannot be conscience free so long as the deficit

(4) We should make up this deficit and provide adequately for this fund because the New Testament places upon Christian people the responsibility of caring for their needy. From the very beginning of the church great care was given to the poor. In Acts 4:34 and following we read of the disciples selling their possessions and putting the proceeds into a common treasury and of distribution being made "unto every man according as he had need." While the community of goods policy was of short life and impracticable, yet it is important to remember that the poor were cared for so that "neither was there any among them that lacked." One of the first difficulties experienced in the functioning of the early church grew out of the care of the poor widows, the solution of which problem resulted in the selection of the first deacons (See Acts 6:1ff). Paul writes to the Romans (15:26) that it "pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints" which were at Jerusalem. And in reporting the result of the first council of Jerusalem he tells the Galatians (2:10) that it was not required that the Gentiles should keep the Jewish law, "only they should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do." And if there should be any doubt as to the necessity of such benevolences, we need only to recall the words of the great apostle to his son Timothy, "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5:8). And without doing violence to Scripture that can apply to one's household of faith as well as to those of his own family. It is not a matter of choice but of necessity that we have undertaken the care of our aged ministers and their dependents. The sorry part of it is that we are not able to go as far as the early church did in the care of the poor. But still more blameworthy would we be to neglect the care of the needy among the superannuated ministers, inasmuch as the Lord hath "ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:14). And Paul admonishes, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate (or share all the blessings of life) unto him that teacheth" (Gal. 6:6). If that is the gospel plan for those who are active in teaching and preaching the Word, how much more is it right and necessary for those who have spent their lives in the active ministry and have grown too old to engage any longer in such service to be supported by those to whom they have ministered! Therefore, neglect not to contribute to that fund which is set apart for the discharge of this highly important and bounden duty resting upon the church. If we had not before failed at this point, there would now be no deficit. We must make it up.

Being Deceived by Wet Propaganda

It seems strange how many of our good Prohibition friends are being deceived by wet propaganda. They do not realize how completely it is wet propaganda—all this newspaper ranting about the failure of Prohibition, the bootleggers it has created, the terrible crime wave it has brought upon us and the foolish gossip about how much better the liquor problem is being handled by other countries, particularly Canada, than by our own United States. The fact is, there is scarcely anything else in the way of Prohibition news that gets published in the average newspaper, and particularly in the great metropolitan dailies. There are a few papers that are fair, but they are few indeed. Most of the stories that are being broadcasted are given a decided wet bias, and those reading them must be very considerate and discriminating lest they be led to adopt the bias of the paper. Many find it very difficult to maintain their faith in Prohibition in the face of such constant criticism and seemingly damaging evidence.

A veritable campaign of deception is being financed by a small company of immensely rich wet men who are working for the repealing of the Eighteenth Amendment in the hope that they might be enabled to get relief of their income tax burden by shifting it to the shoulders of the people by means of the dram shop. This is no mere guess or suspicion, but was brought out by the testimony of the wets themselves before a subcommittee of the committee of the Judiciary of the United States Senate on May 1, 1930 (See pages 4164 to 4167 of the transcript of the testimony). Along with these wet financiers working for repeal or nullification are those who hope to profit largely by the return of the legalized liquor traffic and those who want to drink and do not like the difficult and dangerous means that must be resorted to under prohibition to get their liquor.

The wet propaganda is telling us how successful is the Canadian method of control of the liquor traffic, that it has largely eliminated law violation and bootlegging and that prohibition by comparison is inefficient and ineffective. But according to Ben H. Spence, Canadian journalist, such claims cannot be substantiated. On the contrary he says that illicit sale of liquor flourishes and bootleggers are increasing in number under the present system, and have increased very considerably during the first three years of "liquor control" over that of the last three years of prohibition in the provinces of Ontario and New Brunswick. Convictions have increased for violation of liquor laws during the years specified from a total of 16,029 to a total of 25,841. Whereas under Prohibition in the United States arrests have greatly decreased from the record of pre-prohibition days, and it is estimated that Prohibition is not less than 73 per cent efficient and very likely much more. There is no comparison of Prohibition results in the States with the "liquor control" of Canada except by contrast, with the advantage all in Prohibition's favor. While the per capita consumption of liquor in the States has been steadily decreasing to less than one-fourth of pre-prohibition consumption, the per capita consumption of alcohol in Canada has increased 84 per cent since 1922 and the percentage of deaths from alcoholism has increased 113 per cent.

It would seem, therefore, that the main thing we can learn from Canada as regards the liquor traffic is that "liquor control" is a failure. But we do not need to go there to learn that; we only need to review our own dealings with the traffic to be reminded of the fact that alcoholic beverages are a commodity that cannot be controlled, nor properly sold under any conditions.

Recently a very deceptive piece of wet propaganda was put out by August A. Busch, of the Anheuser-Busch, Inc., of St. Louis, Missouri, known to all beer loving individuals. Attempting to turn the depression to his advantage, he recently indited "An Open Letter to the American People," in which he made the claim that "nothing would contribute more to relieve the unemployment situation, restore business confidence and stability, and be more conducive to the public health, its morals and welfare, than to again make it possible for the great American nation to enjoy as its national beverage, pure and wholesome 4 per cent beer."

Of course no one really believes that the re-legalizing of beer would in any way benefit the public health, morals and welfare, and it can be demonstrated on a scientific basis that 4 per cent beer is neither "pure" nor "wholesome." But there are some who are being deceived by the claim that the restoring of the legality of beer would do wonders toward relieving "the unemployment situation" and restoring "business confidence and stability." Mr. Busch claims that the re-legalizing of 4 per cent beer would mean "1,250,000 additional jobs." Taking his figures as he gives them, yet we are reminded by the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation that the record of the liquor traffic during pre-prohibition days shows that for every man employed by the traffic, it displaced two or more from legitimate industries whose income was invaded and crippled by the diversion of millions spent for drink that would otherwise have gone for necessities and wholesome luxuries." Moreover, the brewing trade in pre-prohibition days showed itself to make a smaller return both to labor and producer than any legitimate industry, the proportionate remuneration to the farmer for raw material being nearly 60 per cent less than that received by the producer from all legitimate industries. So the farmer could not be profited much by the use of his produce in the making of beer.

Furthermore the claim was set forth that the return of legalized beer would mean the swelling of the federal government's by $400,000,000 in taxes, but this amount would be paid by the poor victims of the traffic rather than by the brewer for every dollar paid into the federal treasury the brewers would be profited by ten dollars. It appears, therefore by whatever angle the problem may be approached, the re of legalized beer is an economic wastage and makes for devastation socially, morally, physically and spiritually and possibly contribute anything of value to the relief of the situation in any way. Let us not be deceived by the fallacy and propaganda of the wets.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

LAYMEN'S DAY, THE SECOND SUNDAY IN OCTOBER—THE TIME TO LIFT THE EMERGENCY OFFERING IN SUPERANNUATED MINISTERS.

Ohio churches should bear in mind that district missionments are due to be paid quarterly to the secretary—Brother R. A. Hazen, Ashland, Ohio.

All district conference secretaries should prepare the list and the conference officer and mail to the National Conference Secretary, Rev. J. L. Gingrich, 186 Spring Street, J. Pennsylvania, and that should be done immediately following the close of conference. That sort of cooperation will help to the publication of the new Annual.

Brother C. D. Whitmer, Publicity Superintendent and the Senior Endeavor notes, asks for reports of society deans wants to keep his department fresh and interesting but have the cooperation of the correspondents from the various societies. Our Endeavorers can have much more space than if they will only occupy it.

A letter from Dr. Florence N. Gribble informs us that Lester Kennedy, one of our missionaries in French West Africa, is still in an uncertain, if not serious, condition. Sister Gribble thinks he may have been operated on. Pray that "God's healing hand may have been upon him to continue to be until he shall again be restored to strength and service."

Brother E. M. Riddle, president of the Brethren National Union, sends a message to the Endeavorers this week. The societies have responded well this last year to the call for support and that the chances are good for increase this year. He announces two new officials, Miss Mildred Berlin, Pennsylvania, the new Junior Superintendent, Floyd Sibert of Ellet, Ohio, Citizenship Superintendent. Upon societies to launch out upon their programs profitably and make it a successful year.

This is a week for conference programs and notices. L. G. Wood gives directions for getting to Fort Scott, Kansas, own church, where the Mid-west district conference is to be held October 6 to 8. The program is also to be found in this Indiana district conference is to be held at Mexico, October 10 to 12. The Mexico church and their pastor, Brother Mark B. Steffler, are eager for a large attendance. The program appears in the Brethren Evangelist. Also the program of the Pennsylvania district is published this week. It is to convene at Philadelphia in the Third church. Brother W. A. Steffler is pastor, and the date is October 10 to 12.

President E. E. Jacobs reports this week that the enrollment of the college is nearing the last year's high mark and is almost certain to fully reach it before the enrollment is closed. At his writing the enrollment was 290 and the final enrollment for the first semester was 295. He and his colleagues are encouraged over this holding up of enrollment, especially in view of the fact that a goodly number of students are experiencing a falling off. The new arrangement for the use of chapel is necessitated by the large enrollment and capacity of the chapel. It is evident that there is real interest in new chapel building, and if the loyalty, devotion and support of the past few years continue to prevail, it will certainly be possible in the near future.

The Church Which is His Body

By Florence N. Gribble, M.D.

have chosen the greatest subject which can present to the human mind, save the consideration of ourself. "The Church which is his body." To this church every saved sinner has had the same access as spoken of in John 7:37-39. "If any man thirst, come unto me and drink. This spake he of the Spirit which they that believed on him were to receive, Spirit was not yet given because JESUS was not glorified."

It is only necessary for a lost sinner to know of him to recognize his need of him in order to approach him, participating in him, to join that holy company "the church which is his body."

There is a moment when the lost sinner becomes a saved man when the unregenerate human being becomes a child. However weak, however frail, however tiny at the moment he is born of the Spirit of God, he becomes a member of Christ and enters into fellowship, as stated in 1 Cor. 1:12, "With all that call upon the name of the Lord Jesus in every place, their Lord and ours."

The Scriptural vision of the church is not fulfilled by any earthly glimpse thereof. The church of which we speak is not the Christian Church, the Baptist Church, the Methodist Church, the Episcopal Church, the Brethren Church, nor any other church, sect or assembly. It is even the indigenous church of Africa, India, or any land. The indigenous church is neither a unit nor a universal whole. The new-born convert and the misbeliever are both members, not only of the local church but have been formed in the tribe or district, but they are members, with all that call upon the name of the Lord Jesus in every place, their Lord and ours," whether Jew, Arab, Karre, Boufi, Chinese, Siamese, Burman, or any man, of that invisible "church, which is his body."

Eph. 2:18. For through him we both have our access to the Father. In other words, by access to the Son, and participation in the Spirit, the believer is enabled to say "Abba Father" unto God.—Eph. 2:18 says this text—both those that are afar off and those that were nigh, both the Jews and the Gentiles, the avowed sinner and the self-righteous, both the loved and the hated—both—all have access in one Spirit to the Father. How perfect is the privilege of salvation accorded to us—offered to all! For whosoever will believe, and entering through him who said "I am the door," have access unto the church, which is his body."

Eph. 2:13. But now in Christ Jesus ye that once were far off are made nigh in the blood of Christ. Yes, we were once the chief of sinners, we who were Gentiles, who were utterly lost and undone, eternally condemned. We have been accorded this access, have entered this church, have been washed in the blood of the Lamb. With Paul, with Tarsus, with John Newton, with others like them, we must humbly confess ourselves the chief sinners, saved by grace—afar off (yet made nigh). No one knew we were babes in Christ. We must grow up unto Christ who is the head, as we read in Col. 2:19, "... the church from whom all the body being supplied and knit together through the joints and bands, increaseth with the increase of God. The church must increase, not only in membership but in stature of its members.

Just as there was only one access, so there is only one Lord. Only through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and of the Church can we be supplied with strength and force to increase. Only through him the Head can we be knit together—with that wonderful system of joints and bands, which is his life. Again, just as we are saved as the apostles and prophets are saved, we must grow, we must increase in like manner. The Scripture employs another simile in Eph. 2:20. "Being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone."

Words fail to express the majesty of him who is the Church's head. Not alone the Head, but the life permeating the body:—He who was the head of his Church in the beginning the only door—is also the chief corner stone of the glorious building, the church. Throughout eternity we shall rejoice in one another as members of his body. We shall know and love Luther, Melancthon, Knox, Cranmer, Gordon, Chalmers, Spurgeon, Talmadge, Paton, William Burns and Hudson Taylor as well as those dear ones whom we have loved and lost awhile. Estella and Ethel Myers with their sainted father and mother, you and I with our dearest on earth—yet shall rejoice the more in Jesus himself, the Head, the chief corner-stone.

Col. 1:18. "And he is the Head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead—that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." From that time before times, the remotest eternity, he, who in the beginning—co-equal with the Father, was chosen to be the first-born from the dead. Why? That in all things he might have the pre-eminence. Had it been possible for the church which is his body to be formed without our Savior's death, the Lord Jesus would not have had, could not have had, the pre-eminence in the resurrection. But now, in death or in life, and in all that pertains to death and life, he has the pre-eminence. To this great rule our Lord's ascension is no exception. "When he ascended on high he led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men," Eph. 4:8. Why? We have the answer in Eph. 4:12—"For the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ."

There is a three fold purpose in his every gift to the church—in his every gift to every member thereof:—(1) Perfection of the recipient. (2) Ministry to others. (3) Upbuilding of the body. How many a gift of the Spirit has been supposed to be for the glory of the recipient, for ministry to self, for the upbuilding of some human plan or purpose! Yet those who are truly Spirit-filled in the church will overcome this dire danger. I knew a woman Spirit-filled, upon whom was bestowed the gift of healing. So marvellous was this gift that it brought her an astounding popularity. She was unable to support the homage of men. Realizing this, she humbly besought the Lord that the gift might be taken away. And it was! How different, however, has been the reaction of Dr. Dowie, Mrs. MacPherson and others!

Eph. 3:16. "The Gentiles are fellow-heirs, and fellow-members of the body, and fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the gospel." God found it necessary to teach the early Jewish church through Peter's vision, in order that the body of Christ, the church, might be complete. It is a wonderful thing to be a fellow heir. In England the eldest son inherits the property. In America all the children are fellow heirs. So it is in the church. But it is a greater thing to be a fellow-member of the same body. And can there be a greater, deeper fellowship than to be fellow-partakers of the same promise? Not when he who has given the promise is our immutable Lord! And all this oneness of Jew and Gentile and of every extremity which they typify has come to pass through the gospel. Let us not forget that unto us it has been given in behalf of Christ not only to believe upon him but also to suffer for his sake, even as Paul, who said, Col. 1:24. "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."

While the sufferings of our Lord Jesus alone were vicarious and expiatory, yet every member of the church, which is his body, has been given a great privilege, that of entering into the fellowship of his sufferings. There is a very real ministry of suffering. It is because of this that suffering, even the suffering of illness, is not always disciplinary to the individual member who suffers, but to the body. "If one member suffer, all the members suffer with it." In illness as in other suffering, let us obey the injunction "Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another that ye may be healed." And why? We find the answer to this and many other puzzling questions in Eph. 5:30. "Because we are members of his body Christ nourisheth and cherisheth the church." Why? Because we are members of his body. We should cherish one another. Why? Because we are members of his body. We should serve one another. Why? Because we are members of his body. We should be subject one to another. Why? Because we are members of his body. And let us remember that this tender cherishing, this humble service, this willing subjection is to be extended to all who are true members of his body, which is the church. Do we not as missionaries sometimes feel that toward the indigenous members of his church we must assume an air not of cherishing, but of severity, not of service, but of undue authority, an authority which absolutely excludes intersubjection?

Our love feasts and our communion should teach us otherwise, "seeing that we who are many are one bread, one body: for we all partake of the one bread"—1 Cor. 10:17—the one bread, which is never cut, but always broken; the one bread, which typifies his body alike for bishop, pastor and new-born babe in Christ; the one bread, the partaking of which shows forth his death until he come; the one bread, shared alike by the regenerate of every nation, every tribe and every tongue; the one bread, broken alike for the venerable saint and the prattling child, the one bread—one of the many infallible proofs of the inseparable unity of his body—which is the church, or to quote Eph. 1:23—"The church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all. There is in this verse an unfathomable mystery, a mystery which shall be revealed only in that day when we shall know as we are known. His body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." In humble adoration of divine wisdom, we can only bow and say: "What a glorious fulness shall the completed church possess, since it be indeed the fulness of him that filleth all in all."

To bring about this glorious fulfillment we cannot do better than to bear in mind the injunctions found in the Epistle to the Romans 12:4-5-6, so marvellously framed to reveal to the church the precious privilege and stewardship of gifts: Rom. 12:4. "For even as we have many members in one body, and all the members have not the same office: so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another. And having gifts differing according to the grace that was given unto us, whether prophecy, let us prophecy," etc.

Our gifts differ. They differ according to the grace given us. They differ in proportion to our faith. They differ by the Divine will and prerogatives which are questionable and unimpeachable. "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? By the law of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." Without boasting let us exercise our gifts for the perfection of the church which is his body. Let us seek the righteousness which cometh alone by faith, Romans 3:22, "Even the righteousness of God through faith in Christ Jesus unto all that believe," for "there is no distinction, for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God.

Just as in every study there are emphatic positives, in like manner there are emphatic negatives. Very possible that the church might be composed not of saved sinners, but also of angels or others who had sinned, then indeed there might be a distinction in its earthly constituency. Now the Word of God declares emphatically, THERE IS NONE, for all have sinned, not only have fallen short, but fall short of the glory of God. Only Christ the head of the church has the immaculate character of an eternal sinlessness. The rest of the church, which is his body, are all alike, saved sinners, is because of this that Paul emphatically says, Col. 3:10. "Where there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcised and uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, free, but Christ is all and in all. In the church Greek and Jew are alike, sinners saved by grace. He who was saved by circumcision shall not precede him who was saved by circumcision. The Scythian from the Euxine and the Greek from the seas ranks in the church exactly as does the regenerate barbarian. The slave is fellow-heir with the freeman, there is no difference, for Christ is all in all, and the life of Christ fills the church, which is his body."

And as though there could be any doubt of the emphatic there cannot be in Col. 3:11. Paul adds and Gal. 3:28. "There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. There can be neither male nor female. Men and women members of the church which is his body are alike called to preach the gospel. On his man-servants and his maid-servants the Spirit of power is out-poured. The Christian alone, following in the footsteps of Christ its founder, alone, following in the footsteps of Christ its founder, woman. Everywhere else, woman is an outcast, a Mohammedan, Brahman, Buddhist or pagan. The Church of Christ alone she takes her place as a sister, fellow-heir, fellow-member, and fellow-partaker of the promise. To all the apostle gives the same admonition concerning negative terms. 1 Cor. 10:32. "Give no occasion of stumbling, either to Jews or to Greeks, or to the glory of God." It is well for us to consider this negative command before we take up the positive ones which follow. Is that member of the church, who, holding the office of blameless in his walk, who is prepared to obey the commands of Christ. He who causes a Jew to stumble, who causes a Greek to err, he who provokes one of the members of any frail and backward church to fall, is not yet fully shod with the righteousness of the gospel of peace. And yet herein lie not all failed? Where shall we find the remedy? In the fulness of that very love which led Christ to give himself for the church. Let us, therefore, 1 Cor. 13:1. "Follow after love, desire earnestly spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."

The true prophet is the one who gives forth the message. He who preaches, prophesies. And the one who would hold this high office must have, as we have seen, certain qualifications—not of nationality, not of birth, not of special custom,—there can be none of these tions. Such an one must follow after love—not the the flesh, but that deep spiritual love which is of d which is so beautifully portrayed in 1 Corinthians us desire above all things to preach the gospel. a you must build, you may thus win your laborers ist; though you treat the sick, you may thus win atients; though you teach you may thus win your ts.

r. 14:39, "Wherefore, my brethren, desire earnest- rophecy." If you have been called only to preach essage, would have lacked vitality. It is in the ss labors of the mission field that we have the op- ty not to be ministered unto, but to minister, in vords, to follow after love. He who builds though family not his own, she who teaches long hours in e, he who has compassion upon the suffering, mean- preaching the gospel which his life exemplifies, he ho winneth souls—and "He that winneth souls is at hour of glad consummation when the church, s his body, becomes his bride—when the plan of es shall be completed and our Lord shall come— l realize our privilege of having helped to complete urch, which is his body.

REST

By J. L. Bowman

All plants and animals have at some period of their ex- istence a time for rest, a time when growth is less rapid than it is at other times, when nature slows down and seems to be off her guard. Man was so constituted that he must have a fractional part of the twenty-four hours in a day when he may relax and rest. When he resumes his usual activities he is much more able to attack his task with vim and vigor and accomplish more in a given time than if he had not rested. It is no secret that ma- chinery gives better service and lasts longer if given a period of rest. The student that does not take relaxation from the arduous grind of daily study sooner or later has a nervous breakdown which is nature's way of enforcing rest.

Our blessed Master shows the deepest interest and greatest sympathy in our weakness. He knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In his service there is perfect freedom. The rest that he gives is better than the rest for aching limbs and tired body. It is rest for a weary soul. The weary world is seeking for rest but alas is not seeking in the right place. The world is tired of turmoil and strife. It is tired of aching hearts and tear-dimmed eyes. It is tired of heavy burdens that gall bare shoulders. It is tired of rough roads that blister aching, feet tired of having the very foundations of faith in the living God torn from under us by the reckless hands of the destructive mod- ernists, who let us grope on in the darkness and fall in the chasms of unbelief without a ray of hope to cheer us.

Oh, the world is seeking for rest, for it is tired of the frivolity and shallowness of this age but it is not seeking at the right place. You will never find the promised rest at the card table, in the dance hall, or in the movies. Those of you who have tried it, know that this statement is true. "I will give you rest!" What sympathy, what feel- ing, what heart-yearning he shows to give us what we are unable to secure for ourselves! Rest for the soul, peace for mind, a contented lot, because with him we have everything and we have naught to distract. If you are too near the Niagara Falls you cannot hear ordinary conversation for the roar of the falls. If you are too near the world you cannot hear the gentle voice of the Master as he says "I will give you the rest for which you are seeking"—rest.

Old World, you have tried about everything there is to try without any degree of success. Will you listen to One whose heart yearns to still the tumult in your soul? "I WILL give you rest." He calmed the troubled feelings of the mariners. The turbulent waves sank back in si- lence to the whispered words, "Peace be still." The waves which so recently had been churned into mist and spray by the fury of the storm now rested calmly on the bosom of the deep because Jesus said, "Be still." Surely the shipwrecked sailor, tossed on the waves of his own passion, can safely trust in one whom the winds and waves obey. He whispers, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest," and he adds this post script, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out."

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

2. The Agape or love feast is prefigured in the Old Testament.

We will understand the agape better if we remember that the feasts of the law were types of Christ, and this of the Gospel is a memorial of Christ. As they represent the same thing there is a parallel between them. The Lord's supper is a memorial of Christ as the Passover was a type. We have seen that the purification before the passover prefigured the footwashing, and we now may note that the feast of unleavened bread prefigured the love feast. The entire Passover was a memorial of the exodus from slavery, a symbol of the fraternity under the old covenant and a type of the Messiah to come, whose love is expressed in the fraternity of the church of the new covenant.

Israel did not keep the law, but Christ kept it, and the "royal priesthood" which Israel lost by unbelief (Ex. 19:3-6; Heb. 4:6) is now the privilege of the church (1 Pet. 2:5, 9), whose righteousness is not its own works, but faith in the work of Christ (Rom. 9:30-33). As leaven was a symbol of sin (Mt. 16:6; Lk. 11:21) it was carefully removed from the houses, and the feast of unleavened bread represented fraternity based upon holiness.

Also in the holy place of the tabernacle, which was a type of Christ, there was the table of unleavened bread, with twelve loaves, which were changed every week, being eaten only by the priests, and that after having washed their hands and feet (Ex. 30; 19, 20; 25:29, 30; Lev. 24:5-9). The people by unbelief lost their priesthood and were then represented by an order of priests as mediators between the people and God. But Christ, as our High Priest, entered into the presence of God by his own blood (Heb. 9:7-28), and when he died the veil of the temple, a type of his body (Heb. 10:20), was rent in twain, signifying access to God by the new priesthood of Christ, the church (1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Rev. 1:6). The church therefore does not need an order of priests as mediators between the people and God (Heb. 10:12-20). The presence of these pretended mediators is a usurpation of the place of Christ.

In the institution of the Lord's Supper Jesus announced this privilege of believers to sit as kings and priests at his table (Lk. 22:29, 30), and the agape or love feast was established to represent the brotherly love or holy fraternity of this new and royal priesthood, the church.

We have prayed for ourselves that we may know how to meet life's hard blows. Do you realize that the way in which we face the difficult things of life may prove our best way of winning others? Christians are the only Bible the world reads today, and if we would win others to faith it must be, in large measure, because of what they see in our lives.—Bishop Fiske in Calvary Today.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEW

HONOR TO PARENTS AND CRIME

Yusuke Tasurumi, a Japanese author and political leader was in New York recently en route from the sessions of the Institute of Politics at Williamport, Mass., expressed the view that Japan did not have the widespread crime with which the United States is trying to grapple because of the powerful restraining influence of Japanese family life, with its traditional veneration of ancestors. Some of us may be a bit sensitive at such a suggestion considering the fact that honoring our parents is a fundamental principle of our religion. It is probable that the ingrained reverence for parents in Japan has had its influence in restraining crime and it has to be admitted that reverence for parents is not a standing characteristic of our present social life. It is a challenging suggestion. While it may be argued that the conditions which tend to foster crime which do not prevail in Japan, it still has to be acknowledged that a more careful observation of the Christian injunction to honor our parents would have a wholesome influence in America. It may be added that those boosting our crime record are of European stock.—The Presbyterian Advance.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE

Attendance upon church services and Sabbath observance are in direct relationship to each other. For that reason we were interested in the claim of Rev. M. Wayne Womer, of the Michigan Lord's Day Alliance. He says in a recent article: "Out of every 100 people attend church on Sunday morning, only 10 out of every 100 on Sunday night. In the 14 largest churches in the city of Detroit, with a membership of over 24,000, there are only 1,200 people present, including the visitors on a Sunday morning. There are more than 1,000 churches in the state which have regular Sunday night service at any time of the year. A denomination with 257 churches has 35 churches permanent and 15 without pastors, while many communities have only one church service and Sunday school, no prayer meeting, no day night service, no young people's meetings and a number of churches are closed entirely for one month to six weeks during the summer season. Detroit has 250,000 public school children, 180,000 of whom are not enrolled in any Sunday school. The Evangelical-Messenger.

WASHINGTON MOVES AGAINST THIRD DEGREE

In view of the scathing report of the president's commission on the prevalence of the third degree and a more recent paper in the current Atlantic on "The Lawless Arm of the Police" it is well to note that five Washington policemen were indicted recently for assault charged with resorting to third-degree. This action may have been stimulated by the request of J. Edgar Hoover that if the third degree existed in Washington it should be severely punished. A wide reading of the report to which attention is called is urged. There are millions of Americans who do not know that the United States Supreme Court recently held that "A confession is voluntary in law if, in fact, it was in fact voluntarily made." The facts are that for years confessions by police are daily occurrences in a majority of the large cities, and there is little doubt that this official lawlessness breeds individual lawlessness. As attorney General Mitchell said: "Nothing has a greater tendency to beget lawlessness than the methods of law enforcement."—The Presbyterian Advance.

The Pathfinder gives some interesting statistics of Jewish population and distribution. The total Jewish population of the United States is 15,630,000. Of this number, 7,500,000 are in Central Europe, 1,000,000 in Asia, 500,000 in Africa, and 4,228,000 in the United States. The present Jewish population of Palestine, the God-given homeland, is 161,000, with multitudes waiting as fast as local conditions will permit. There are 1,903 Jews in New York City. The Jews comprise 16.67 per cent of the population of New York State, 6.01 per cent of New Jersey, 1.5 per cent of Connecticut, 5.32 per cent of Massachusetts and 1.2 per cent of Illinois. They constitute 3.58 per cent of the total population in the United States. Always an industrious people, 85 per cent have sought the larger cities with New York as their Mecca. Throughout their long period of dispersion they have their racial identity in a fashion so astonishing as to indicate a very definite divine purpose for them. That purpose seems to be fulfilled.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN DAILY

preliminary work for the launching of the new National Christian Daily, under the editorship of Stanley High, is in progress.

The effort is being made to sign up as many subscribers as possible before October 1, no payment on subscriptions being asked. The first copy of the paper has been received, as the amount depends somewhat on the number of advance subscriptions. The paper will be published every morning except Sunday.

The paper has back of it a large and distinguished group, from many states, with the largest number from New York. The communication from this committee announcing the launching of the paper and soliciting of charter subscribers, bears the facsimile signatures of William F. McDowell, J. R. Mott, Daniel A. Poling, W. Sockman, A. W. Beaven, S. Parkes Cadman, William Hinkley and Stanley High. From this letter we take the following:

The paper, the need for which has been long apparent, will be, in all, a great newspaper. Back of it are a number of the country's most successful publishers and most progressive editors. The paper features, and news services the new paper, from the first through the sports and financial sections to the last page, rank journalistically with the best dailies now published.

The association with these journalists is a group of nationally prominent business and professional leaders who have been long and intimately related to every significant effort for political, economic and social righteousness. Their backing is certain insurance for the paper, on such vital issues as crime, corruption and social justice, on prohibition, on economic sanity and industrial justice, on rational understanding and world peace, will be intelligent, aggressive, and morally courageous. Its news columns will be clean of social filth and its advertising space will be open to unquestionable products.

As we think, a striking proof of the widespread demand for daily publication that this project has already received the endorsement and enthusiastic endorsement of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and the Northern Baptist Convention. Other significant groups including the World's Convention of the C. T. U. have also expressed their wholehearted approval. The much-more-than-local scope of this newspaper's news coverage, its authentic analysis of news events, its emphasis upon the elements which in the broadest sense are of significance to the people, and the quality of its editorial leadership will, we think, make it an indispensable part of the daily reading of every intelligent and right-thinking American. We cannot too strongly reiterate our conviction that here is an undertaking that should have the enthusiastic and active support of Christian people and of their ministers.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

AVERAGE SIZE OF SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES

In The Presbyterian of the South we quote the following summary compiled from the records of the year 1928 by The Dallas

No. of Churches	No. of Members	No. of Churches
24-49	664	400-599
50-74	790	600-799
75-99	551	800-1199
100-149	324	1200-1599
150-199	417	1600-1999
200-249	193	2000-2099
250-299	222	2100-2399
300-349		2400-2499

It will be noted in the figures that are given that there are more churches with a membership between 25 and 49 persons than any other size. One-fourth of the churches have 32 members or less. One-fourth have 137 members or less. Only one-eighth of the churches have a membership of 257 or more. These figures make it evident that the typical problems of the Southern Presbyterian Church are problems of the small church.—The Presby-

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

2 Cor. 6:8-10. In these verses we see something of the paradox of the true Christian of any age. In Paul's day Christians were more active than they are today; their beliefs seemed to grip them more, to be more real, and the opposition was accordingly more bitter. Yet even today if a man seriously tries to follow the teachings of Jesus he is honored by some, despised by others; some will consider him an ignorant fool, others a Christian gentleman; he may have every human cause for sorrow, yet be ever rejoicing. If we are true to him we may expect these things, but the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the joys that shall be hereafter.

TUESDAY

2 Cor. 6:11-18. Today we still hear the complaint that church leaders impose needless restraint upon us; yet Paul says it is not he that has hindered and restrained them, but they themselves. Perhaps that is still true.

What a privilege is ours: the temple of the living God; he will dwell in us, walk in us, and we shall be his people, his sons and daughters! In return for such rich and unmerited blessings should we not be more than willing to live a completely separated life, and to touch not the unclean things which he hates? Increase our faith, O Lord!

WEDNESDAY

2 Cor. 7:1-7. Paul's love for the Corinthians was so great that he did not hesitate to tell them that which he knew was for their good, even though it hurt. This is no excuse, however, for needlessly blunt and inconsiderate speech. May God save us all from the discouragements that come from too frankly "speaking one's mind" to no purpose! Yet if we become discouraged, we have a "God that comforteth those that are cast down." And praise God he also has followers, such as the Corinthians, who know how to comfort!

THURSDAY

2 Cor. 7:8-11. Paul's letter had made them sorry. How good it is for our spiritual welfare when, occasionally, some word or event gets through our reserve and we are made sorry. Sorrow often bears the richest fruits. One of the old hymns prays that we may have more sorrow for sin; perhaps we need more ministers like Paul, who will remind us of our sins and plead for a return to the ways of God!

FRIDAY

2 Cor. 7:12-16. Paul wasn't trying to "run" things; he was merely evidencing the loving care of a true minister for his people, trying to help them in their difficulties. And what richer reward could there be than to find that your labors have not been in vain, but have borne rich fruit in godly life and obedience! For hope of this reward every faithful servant of his will labor on.

SATURDAY

2 Cor. 8:1-4. Note the impossibilities in these verses: greatly afflicted yet greatly enjoying the grace of God; in deep poverty yet liberal toward the needs of others, even beyond their own power. But after all, it has never been greatly different: it is the common people, who are not able to do it, who suffer, fight battles, and win the wars of this world, not the rich or powerful. It is equally true in the church that the greatest gifts are from those who can least afford them. Let us praise God for the gifts of self, service, and substance from those who cannot afford it! And may we consider well the question: Are we doing what we should?

SUNDAY

2 Cor. 8:5-7. Giving for the needs of others is here defined as a Christian grace. Yet we do wrong to so frequently place such emphasis on giving: they first gave their own selves to the Lord! If we could only induce church members to do that today, what a difference it would make in our giving! May thy people give themselves more fully to thee this day than ever before! Amen.

The Calling of the Sunday School Teacher

Interest manifested on the part of the teacher is sure to beget interest on the part of the pupil. Sometimes the young or the inexperienced older teacher makes a success of the first attempt at teaching because of the enthusiasm manifested in the work. This is as true of Sunday teaching as it is of Monday teaching.

The vitalizing Sunday school teacher must have a deep love for her calling. For every person ought to be called in one way or another, as well as selected by the proper authorities.

Personality

We have almost worn this word personality out by our use of it especially in the field of pedagogy. But its power has been felt everywhere. It has been the possession of every great leader, man or woman. It is the teacher's largest tool for wielding a lasting influence. It is the largest factor in the development of character, in moral training. It is of equal importance in the life of a religious leader.

What a noble soul the teacher ought to be was the sentiment once expressed by an eighteenth century educator of wide repute. So often is it true that as is the teacher so is the class likely to be.

The most influential teachers possess usually a winning and sometimes a striking personality. The influence of such power is easier felt than defined. It irresistibly draws men and women. It quietly but steadily works.

There are no two people quite alike inside or outside of the Sunday school. There are as many individualities as there are human beings that live. You cannot be anybody else but yourself. Therefore be yourself when you try to teach.

The effective Sunday school teacher will be so magnetic, so broadly sympathetic, so simple, so kind, so forgiving, so self-controlled, so loving, and so patient that every class member will feel the presence, consciously or unconsciously, of a positively good man or woman.

To such a person love will be the fulfillment of the whole law, and of the whole life of those who are led. Everybody inclines toward such a master teacher.

What an embodiment of patience was the Teacher as he tried to get his small class of disciples to understand him and his mission! Even he had nine undergraduates at the foot of the mountain who had not yet prayed enough to perform the lowly service of the teacher.

It is the spirit of unlimited compassion which included the Syro-Phoenician woman and the believing centurion, that is needed today in our Sunday schools.

If this ideal of leadership be too high then let us remember the helpful service which the humbler ones may perform. For sometimes 'tis the power of the gentle hand that sways the world, and 'tis the quietness of a calm, sweet soul that wins our boys and girls to the holier life. 'Twas such as Socrates, and John, and Jesus that taught us this so long ago.

Love Without Ceasing

Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, and thy pupils, thy learners, as thyself. This is the first and great commandment to the Sunday school teacher.

Both the love for children and the love for truth are indispensable. Love for one's calling and for one's work will help greatly in imparting religious truth.

The long list of names that occur in the history of education, are there, many of them, because of the spirit of love manifested in their work in its varied forms. The ambitious search for enduring truth has been the occupation of many a one.

Socrates, with his disciples, searched vigorously for the profoundest principles governing the moral life, but he died after drinking the poisonous hemlock because he was misunderstood. Pestalozzi slept many a night on hard board beds in order that his children might have a place to rest in, and thus day after day be taught. The Great Teacher had scarcely time in which to eat, or place to rest his head. 'Tis such love as this that will pave the way for sweeter childhood, for nobler manhood, and purer womanhood.

Meditation

Effective religious life is made up neither wholly of contemplation nor wholly of action. These factors supplement each other. A life that is all meditation will stay on the mountain-tops away from the needy multitudes. It sometimes desires to build Peterian tabernacles in which only refined selfishness may dwell, and revel, and dream of celestial things. A life that is all action among the needy crowds without any quiet retreats will exhaust itself, and inefficiency will be the result. It will blind its own pathway with clouds of dust.

But he or she who will take time to go apart into the mountain, or into the desert alone, into the hills, the valleys or the plains, into the closet or study, into the kitchen or the living room and there pray like the one who sanctified his selfhood on the mountain top, can descend and perform a richer service for the boys and girls, for the men and women who sit in our classes each Sunday morning. The continuous application of lessons without this meditation in God's law day and night will always be but empty formalism. A sanctified selfhood through meditation prepares us for secular and sacred social service among our pupils.

Be a prayer, that is, one who prays. Meditation and prayer are a guarantee for right thinking. This is good modern psychology. Thinking leads to action. Ideas which we set going in the child's mind are seeking all their waking hours to express themselves in action of some sort or other.

It is a long and eternal principle—day school pedagogy that right thinking the part of the teacher will lead to action somewhere. Thinking up the taint of Transfiguration is likely to lead there. Thinking down the mountain into the field of service among our will sooner or later lead one there.

The main difference between the child and the adult in this principle is that the ideas are more likely to pass immediately into action. He can not hold on to an idea as long as the grown person, nor can we expect him to in the Sunday school. We must not expect the child mind to wait and pray and think as long at once as we expect the grown person to.

The Worth of a Child

In one sense the parent alone who has lost his only child can know the worth of it. In another sense only the parent teacher who has seriously studied the interesting ways of the child and its development can know him.

The Galilean Teacher loved and treasured childhood. But he also appreciated its nature. On almost the last day of his great school which he founded, he called attention to one of the main characteristics. No doubt he understood the other characteristics of childhood.

But on this occasion when he was to teach his apparently well-matured scholars a greatly needed principle then it was that he took up a child much like any of yours no doubt, and placed it in their hands. Here he placed a child like all normal children, simple, honest, trustful, teachable, humble, susceptible, openminded, unselfish, pure, unselfish, plastic, adaptable. It is just this sort of being that unfolds under the direction of school teachers. The Sunday school child like the public school child is a bundle of instincts and interests seeking expression. It is the same active, imaginative, inquisitive, acquisitive, sociable, constant, playful, and imitative child which is an ample of humility for those that are in the religious life.

This plasticity during the period of physical and educational infancy, this openness of the mind, soul and nervous system, offers opportunity of the primary Sunday teacher.

Such a child is like divine clay in the hands of a careful potter. It is the twing of many tendencies budding, in and developing into the tree of real life. It is a bundle of possibilities in the finest outlet.

The kindergarten has attempted to use common schools to direct these early impulses. Manual training department utilized the constructive aspect. Literature, debating, and musical organizations guided the social side. The Sunday teacher is seeing that we must use the whole child on Sunday as well as on days if we would build up the most interesting type of character.

The adolescent boys and girls are living their dreams and seeing their latent possibilities. The one who leads these early social minds may guide the dreams and visions of many a Joseph at seventeen of age. An intimate companionship friendship with a good teacher at that time will save many an adolescent boy or girl. Wholesome friendship will purify and steady the productive imagination.

The Adventure of Faith

It really seems that some people are so constituted that the essential business of life for them is just to maintain the good which they find in the world. There are others so constituted that life to them must constantly mean obtaining new good for themselves and for the world. Paul distinctly belonged to the second class. Dreams of unknown strangers calling from alien lands never come to the minds of some men. They are incapable of conceiving such things even in the fantastic visions of the night. The men

A Message from the President

Dear Endeavorers:

Another conference year is before us. Our reports for Christian Endeavor were very encouraging for the past year. Thirty-one societies had a part last year in taking care of the Krypton Missionary work, as against fourteen societies the previous year. These gifts ranged from $3.25 to $25.00. There were two societies which paid the last named sum. However, we already have the assurance that there will be others running in this twenty-five dollar class during the coming year. We have some newly organized societies in different parts of our brotherhood, who will likely share in this fine work for the new year.

A letter from Brother Albert Lantz at Spokane Washington under date of July 14th, says, "Since our coming here we have had the privilege of organizing a Junior, an Intermediate, and a Senior Christian Endeavor. At the first meeting there were forty present. The future looks promising."
Sounds good to your president.

New National Officers

We welcome the newly elected officers to our staff. Miss Mildred Dietz of Berlin, Pennsylvania and Rev. Floyd Sibert of Ellet, Ohio, are the two newly elected to our force. The former will take the duties of the Junior Superintendent, the latter will be Citizenship Superintendent. To each one who was re-elected we say, we believe you will share as formerly in the responsibilities of our work and be willing to do all in your power in your fields of labor to promote the interests of Christian Endeavor.

To Every Society

Your officers are urging that a very earnest effort be put forth this year, that no part of our work shall suffer. Your first task this fall is to build a program and organize your forces. Hold out-door events, a hike, corn-roast, field day, or an auto pilgrimage to a historical spot. Select leaders for three to six months in advance. Secure your pledge for Krypton, report it to our Secretary and work to the end that it may be paid by June 1st.

I must close by merely saying that the Annual C. E. Banquet held at the Brethren church in Warsaw in connection with the conference was a huge success.

Our C. E. Staff stands in readiness to help any society or group in whatever way we can.

Yours for C. E.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

ATTENTION! PLEASE

Dear Endeavorers:

As Your Editor of C. E. Notes and your Publicity Superintendent, beg to say that I would appreciate an article from any C. E. Society or individual relative to the progress in your own Society or C. E. Union.

Let me hear from you, Endeavorers, and I will have your report published in the Evangelist.

WHO WILL BE THE FIRST TO REPORT?

C. D. WHITMER,

Publicity, Superintendent.

South Bend, Indiana, 217 E. Dubail Ave.

FIVE SUGGESTIONS FOR THE PRAYER MEETING COMMITTEE

1. Plan. Select leaders well in advance. Meet monthly with leaders to plan coming meetings.

2. Pray. Enroll Comrades of the Quiet Hour to pray daily. Hold pre-prayer services before the meeting. Encourage public prayer.

3. Publish. Tell everybody about the meetings. Use posters, letters, telephone, and personal calls.

4. Present. Each meeting should be pre-
R-everently, E-nthusiastically, P-romptly,
A-ttractively, I-mpressively, D-ifferently.
You will be "repaid."

5. Participate. Encourage every member to "take some part aside from singing," through sentence prayers, brief testimonies, Scripture verses, debates, discussions, etc.—Selected.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR INDUCTION CEREMONY

For Receiving New Active Members

A form of induction for new active members into the Christian Endeavor society is recommended by Rev. J. W. Hoyt, Jr., of Placerville, California. A condensed form is given below, and pastors and societies may well use this as a guide in perfecting a ceremony particularly suited to their own needs.

Those participating in the ceremony are the president, the vice-president, the secretary, the treasurer, the social committee chairman, the lookout committee chairman, and the missionary committee chairman. In the Placerville society the vice-president also acts as prayer meeting committee chairman. The new members stand in two diagonal rows beside a table on which a circle of six small candles surrounds a larger central candle. All other members are seated.

The president in opening the ceremony explains that the candles represent seven major principles of Christian Endeavor membership, and that, as each principle is accepted in turn, a candle will be lighted. "As their light grows, so the church has been made to increase through their power in the hearts of men," he concludes. "Thus also your spiritual life will increase as greater light glows in you."

"I am the light of the world," which

Christ spoke concerning himself, is the theme of the president's explanation as he lights the central candle.

The vice-president speaks from the quotation, "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." At the acceptance of the obligation of prayer, as given in the Christian Endeavor pledge, the vice-president lights a candle.

The secretary speaks on the Bible, "a lamp unto my feet and light unto my path," concluding with the question, "Will you make it the rule of your life to read the Bible daily?" As the new members respond, the third candle is lighted.

The treasurer speaks about the church, recalling that the Christian Endeavor motto is, "For Christ and the church." "Christian Endeavor is a child of the church," he may say, in part. "To the church she owes her birth and her support. The church her best friend." On acceptance of the motto "to support my own church in any way," another candle is lighted.

The social chairman presents the motion "to take part in the meetings and activities of the society." The missionary chairman reminds the new member "your service may not be on the field or in the pulpit, but, whatever your occupation, you can use your money, and example to advance human progress." The lookout committee chairman reminds the members the promise to observe principles "unless hindered by some emergency which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master." All seven candles have been lighted, and the ceremony closes with a prayer of reconsecration, led by the president or some other officers.—C. E. V.

MR. KENNEDY'S CONDITION CONTINUES SERIOUS

September 15, 1931.

Editor George S. Baer, Brethren Evangelist, Ashland, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Baer:—

We know that since the receipt of the cablegram in August, many are anxious to hear more in detail concerning Mr. Kennedy's condition.

Three letters have been received since conference from Missionaries at Yaloke dated respectively June 28, July 12, and July 19. From them we quote as follows:

"Mr. Hathaway was called to Bassai because of the illness of Mr. Kennedy. After a week of no news we are relieved to hear that the Bossongoa doctor was called to see him and that his illness was not as serious as had been feared. He is extremely ill though, as it is (after-effects of the flu followed by dysentery upon arriving in Africa.)"

From another letter we quote:—"Mr. Hathaway was gone ten days from Yaloke and covered about five hundred miles. Miss Tyson had sent word that Mr. Kennedy wanted to go to Bangui to see the doctor, but when Mr. Hathaway arrived he was somewhat better, so Mr. Hathaway went after the doctor at Bossongoa who was not at home. Mr. Hathaway therefore, went on to Kouki for the doctor and of course, after the doctor's visit to Bassai returned him to Kouki. It seems to be the after-effects of dysentery with resulting swelling which the doctor thought to be a sack of water forming. The doctor put him on a strict diet and felt he would be O. K."

We are inclined to think however, that the swelling was not water but the pus of liver abscess and that Mr. Kennedy having become worse after the visit of the doctor from Bossongoa, that Mr. Kennedy was taken to Bangui possibly for operation. The date of the cablegram is fifteen days later than that of any letter yet received from the field. We can only continue to pray that whether the intervention of the Bangui doctor was medical or surgical, that God's healing hand may have been upon him and may continue to be until he shall be restored to strength and service.

Trusting that favorable news may be received.

Sincerely,
FLORENCE N. GRIFFIN

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The enrollment for this semester is a matter of some anxiety but at this time, it is very encouraging. The first semester last year was somewhat larger than any before, when we had 295. Now enrollment stands at 290 and before enrollment closes, I am confident that we will reach last year's figures.

Word received from several other colleges indicates that their enrollment fell many had expected it to do, due to the times. So we feel very much encouraged here. And what is best about the situation is the large number of upper classmen.

The second semester will doubtless reach the 300 mark as it is always larger than the first semester.

It seems good to have the second semester so strongly represented. The students of George Drushal are here. When he came to Ashland. Brother Drushal senior and his wife was also in college. Dorothy Whitted, daughter of Rev. W. H. former student, is now a senior. I have a son in the Junior class. Rev. Charman has three children in college now and there are others.

The Fall College reception was held Tuesday evening and was well attended.

The Annual Convocation was held as usual when the writer gave the opening address. From this on chapel will be held so that we can accommodate the new students we have. Certain days, the seminary students will meet by themselves. Other days the Freshmen will meet separately. Thus we can get all of our students to chapel as we have about 100 more in our chapel will hold. We need a new building.

Our first football game will be held Tuesday night when we play Marietta.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFER-ENCE

The District Conference of Southern California was held at Long Beach in the First Brethren Church, July 24th to August 2nd.
It was a splendid conference in every respect. There was a larger registration than at any conference in the past. The morning and afternoon sessions were better attended than in recent years. It was refreshing to be in every session, for there was something more than usual from every speaker. The music, in charge of Leo Polman and Iva Bauman, was a feature of the conference throughout.

The business sessions were most profitable. Splendid reports came from all the churches and organizations. Many expressions of gratitude were heard because of these unusual reports in these strenuous times. There were few items of great importance that came before the conference, consequently there is little for the secretary to report to the brotherhood. Several items were referred to the Executive Committee for consideration before they will be reported.

The election of officers for the coming year produced the following results:

Moderator, A. D. Cashman; Vice-Moderator, Dr. H. V. Wall; Secretary, Alan S.
Pearce; Assistant Secretary, A. L. Lynn;
Treasurer, C. W. Mayes; Member-at-Large,
E. L. Culp; Statistician, J. G. Lienhard.
College Trustee, L. S. Bauman; Executive

Committeeman for National Conference. A. J. McClain.

ARTHUR D. CASHMAN, Conference Secretary.

We append the following appreciations of our conference:

My Impressions

of the Annual Bible Conference of the Brethren Churches of Southern California.

Home again, after a wonderful conference. Most certainly an inestimable privilege to attend a conference of this calibre.

A very comprehensible program, duly emphasizing every phase of the church work. Our hearts were stirred and warmed. Our visions enlarged and clarified. Our devotion to the cause of Christ cleansed and deepened.

We received many impressions during the precious days of the conference. However, there are three that stand out.

First, we were deeply impressed with the spirit of unity which was continuously evident. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." We are all one in Christ Jesus. Wonderful grace! External estimates counted for little here. Eloquence, position, popularity, wealth, learning, are of little account. We are brethren, and it is our common privilege to show forth the praise of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light." Faith can do in an hour what nature can never do.

Secondly, another impression that brought joy to our hearts was the splendid report given by every church in the district. Every church in the district showed a substantial gain in membership. Every church reported much time and emphasis given to prayer and Bible study. And in spite of the world wide depression, the reports show that we gave our banner missionary offering this year. A notable achievement! "They that know the Lord, shall be strong and do exploits." I thank God that in these days of increasing apostasy, that the fire of evangelism is burning steadily in our midst, and that we are contributing money and life to evangelize the regions beyond.

Finally, we were thrilled and inspired with the strong messages during the conference. Every speaker rested on the word and drew from its treasures things new and old. There was nothing stale. Every message given found there fresh springs in the Word that liveth and abideth for ever.

The executive committee is to be congratulated and likewise thanked for preparing such a rich feast of good things. Unity, harmony, sweet fellowship dominated every session. A deeply spiritual atmosphere enveloped every gathering. It was a challenging conference, a mountain-top experience. And so back to our respective churches, better prepared we go for service in his name.

ARCHIE LYNN.

My Impressions of Conference

To begin with, I believe it has been one of the most practical conferences that it has ever been my privilege to attend. The Moderators address was very practical, so much that it was voted to have the same published in tract form. Such addresses as, "The National Need of the Hour," by Dr. Monroe; "Can a Christian Serve God and Napoleon?" a message on the question of war from the Brethren standpoint, delivered by Dr. Bauman; Another by Dr. Bauman, "The Deacon and His Job," was very practical;

The message on "The Threefold Nature of Man" by Dr. Talbot, was a very timely message; The Sunday School Department was well represented in this conference, directed in a practical, workable way, by Dr. Monroe; Personal Evangelism, Tithing, Missionary, the Bible, O. T. and N. T. confirmed by archaeology and early Papyrus writings, etc.; Brethren Seminary was shown to the conference practically; The History of the Brethren Church also was given by the LaVerne Brethren in a very practical way, even though some found that other important things might be added to this Historical Pageant. A Saturday night Testimony meeting was presented which proved very practical. Here we had the privilege of listening to Living Witnesses, the last word in Christian Evidences, as they were called. Some saved from the Guttermost to the Uttermost, while others were saved from not so low a position and yet from a lost state to the Uttermost nevertheless. Yes, the conference was practical in many ways, even to the respective churches of the district. I believe they enjoyed the exchange of speakers in their pulpits during this conference. Each Sunday found a new speaker other than their pastor bringing at least in part some of the conference to the local church. What else can we say, other than to recommend just such a program now and then to any dis-

My Impressions of the Conference

The Twenty-First Annual Bible Conference of Brethren Churches of Southern California is now a matter of history, and yet there are many things that will continue to live with us, we hope, for all time.

To me, one of the greatest values of these conferences is the spiritual fellowship of the Brethren—the intermingling of congregations and the mutual helpfulness that comes from such intercourse. During my acquaintance with the conference better fellowship has not prevailed. There was perfect unity and confidence throughout the conference.

The program was exceptionally strong this year. Every speaker is deserving of special mention. From the address of the moderator, C. W. Mayes, to the closing address by Brother Orville D. Jobson, the conference maintained a very high spiritual level. Every message was strong, timely, well developed and well delivered. There was no suggestion of doubt as to our doctrinal position; but always the note of genuineness, of things eternal and of first import. Brother Monroe and Brother Jobson added greatly to the high quality of our program. We feel that it was a real treat to have them with us, and we shall not soon forget their ministry.

As a whole it was a great conference. The emphasis was always Godward. Christ was exalted and we were admonished to be filled with the Spirit and to undertake every task in his strength.

One of the highest tributes ever paid to an earlier educator was that he had helped to regenerate Germany. MORE LIGHT, MORE TRUTH, MORE LIFE, could well be made THE WATCHWORD OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS DURING THIS CENTURY.

Life when multiplied by love will lead to regeneration. Let Sunday school and public school teachers inside and outside of the church houses love their calling, love their children, love their Christ who has been and always will be the Model Teacher of the model schools for all the ages.

Get the Right Habit

Habits are the outgrowths of repeated acts. They are ingrained into our nervous systems. The way for the teacher to form them in his or her life is to begin at once, and make no delay, be decided in the initiative, make no exceptions. In order to make it easier, try to create favorable surroundings, and substitute something new which you do like, for the old which you did not like to practice.

This is one way for the Sunday school teacher to get the habit of preparation, the habit of Bible study, the habit of originality, the habit of enthusiasm, the habit of meditation, the habit of love, the habit of prayer.

Keep Alive Your Be's

One of the best Bible teachers of New England once replied when asked the secret of his success in conversions, "I just keep shelling my pod of P's: Pray, Plan, Prepare, Pour out, Pull in." One might mean much the same thing by saying keep alive your hive of Be's. Be a Bible student, Be an expert, Be a thinker, Be a mediator, Be an enthusiast, Be a magnetizer, Be a lover, Be a regenerator, Be a prayer. Keep alive your hive of Be's and let the "lover" be your queen.—Selected Material.

EAGLE LEGENDS

By Beatrice M. Parker

If you were a bald-headed man, how would you like to have an eagle drop a turtle on your head? That seems ridiculous, yet, according to an old Greek legend, that is what an eagle did to the famous poet Æschylus. That eagle thought the poet's bald head was a rock; and as the bird wished to crush the turtle in order to eat it, what better way could be than by dropping it upon a smooth, round stone? This caused the ancient people of Greece to look with more respect upon this great bird, as Æschylus had declared that people should not hold the eagle in such high esteem. According to the legend, the eagle unwittingly punished the poet for discrediting him.

People of the early centuries of civilization considered the eagle a royal bird, perhaps because of its dignified flight and perhaps because of its fighting ability and strength. Many tales are told of the manner in which it has carried off lambs, calves, and even children, yet most of them seem to be of mythical origin. The eagle is a bird of pray and typifies power. Many of our forefathers objected when the eagle was chosen as the bird of the new nation, the United States, claiming that it was not proper for a republican nation.

There are a great many interesting legends of the eagle fully as good as that of dropping the turtle on the poet's bald head.

If you will look on a Mexican stamp, you will see an eagle in the center. According to an old legend, the City of Mexico was founded when the Aztecs, persecuted and driven from place to place, were told by Tenoch, their high priest, that when they found an eagle perched upon a cactus, holding a serpent in its mouth, there they should found a city that would not be destroyed. The Aztecs wandered for many years, but in the valley, now occupied by the present city, they did find an eagle as described by their chief. Because of this fact the city was founded, and the eagle was considered a bird of good luck, and laws were made to forbid the killing of any of these birds. Since that time the eagle has always been included in all national devices of emblems such as is found on the postage stamps.

At the time when the Christians and Moors were fighting for the control of Spain a very critical battle was being waged. Many knights were sacrificed, and finally when all but two were exhausted the others withdrew to have the conflict settled by these two. One was a knight noted for his swordsmanship, and the other was a gigantic Moor whose strength was greater than any of the Christians had ever seen before. The knight fought valiantly, holding his enemy back by his skill; but he tired, and just as it seemed as if the Moor would conquer him an eagle flew in the Moor's face and enabled the Christian knight to win the conflict.

Another legend tells us that an eagle caused Byzantium (now Constantinople) to be chosen as the capital of the Eastern Empire. Ancient Troy had been selected as the capital, and engineers were sent to survey this old city with a view to strengthening it. An eagle flew down and snatched the measuring tape in his beak, flew away with it, and dropped it at Byzantium. This was considered an omen, and the capital was instituted there instead of at ancient Troy.

The old Roman scepter had an eagle's head on it. The reason is said to be as follows: When Ancus Martius was ruler of Rome, a wealthy Etruscan, Tarquinius, visited the emperor. As he sat waiting in his chariot an eagle swooped down and snatched his cap away; then, flying up and around the city, this bird returned and dropped the cap on his head again. When a few years later Tarquinius became the Roman emperor, he adopted the eagle's head for his emblem as an omen of good luck.

Another legend tells of the rescue of a famous general of olden times from death by execution when an eagle perched on his shoulder when the executioner was ready to behead the general. There are several such legends and others of princesses being rescued from bands of robbers by rescuers learning of the whereabouts of these princesses because eagles hovered above them. So we find that the eagle has played a very important part in the history of many places, and there are at least a hundred States and nations that have the figure of this noble bird on their emblems.

In mythical times the eagle was named the "king of the air of heaven" and was supposed to be the interpreter of the deity, Jupiter. He was always pictured in ancient writings as bearing the thunderbolts of Jove.—Christian Advocate.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

A CORRECTION

Our attention has been called to the fact that a mistake was made in the report of the amount of money contributed to the Superannuated Fund by the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. The amount appearing in the printed report was $5.00. This should have been $50.00, and we are glad to make this correction.

CONFERENCE CALL

The Mid-West District Conference assembles at the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, on October 6, 7, 8 and the local congregation is looking for a full attendance. Highway 73 comes in from the north and 54 from the west, also three rail systems, therefore Fort Scott is not difficult to reach from any direction.

Those coming by rail drop a card to the writer, and those by motor come to the church at Fifth and National and there will be a committee to receive you.

We are pleased to have you come and will do all we can to make your stay pleasant and profitable.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Why Do I Go To Church?

By A. J. Moncrief in "The Christian Index"

1. To Pray. "Men ought always to pray." The need is constant, therefore we must "pray without ceasing." We ought to pray in the closet and on the street; in the office and on the highway; in the market-place and on the hustings. But no place is so fitting for prayer, so conducive to prayer and so assuring in prayer as the house of God. Jesus said that the Father's house is a house of prayer, and in the covenant of the temple the Father said: "Mine eyes shall be open and mine ears attent to the prayer that shall be made in this place."

2. To Worship. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God." Worship is of the spirit and we may worship God anywhere, and ought to worship him everywhere. At the fireside and in the open spaces; at the altar and in the mountain fastnesses, we may worship God "in spirit and in truth." But no place is so worshipful as the sanctuary of the Lord. It is designed for worship and dedicated to worship. Its services are arranged for worship and its atmosphere is inspiring to worship. The psalmist well understood this when he said: "I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple."

3. To Witness. "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." For the glory of our Lord and the good of our fellowmen we are to bear witness to the goodness of God and the saving grace of Christ. By word and deed, in season and out of season, anywhere and everywhere, we ought to be his witnesses. Example is more potent than words. Our presence in the church is a more effective witness than our professions apart from the church. For this cause we are admonished not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and to keep the ordinances in remembrance of him and for witness to him.

4. To Serve. "Serve the Lord with gladness." Indeed it is a glad privilege and a surpassing honor to be "workers together with God." He that would be worthy let him be a servant, and the measure of worth is the measure of service. There is no other way in which we may project our lives in so many helpful directions as through the ministries of the church. Every good cause seeks and finds support in the church.

5. To Keep Faith with God and Man. "Except a man abide in me he is withered." We cannot sustain vital spiritual life and neglect the means of grace—the provision for its sustenance. Neither can we rightly appraise moral values and human rights without spiritual vitality. Our souls are sensitized by contact with God and the impact of his Word upon them. The church is the place where this sensitization may be sought and found.

Signs of the Times

Alva J. McClain

NEW Members or New Folks?

"We should be more concerned about getting saved people into our churches and less concerned about adding to our church membership. When we add names to our church roll we ought to be adding souls to the kingdom of God. It is quite evident to the most casual observer that many of the names we write in our church books are never written in the Lamb's Book of life. Their connection with the church is of the vaguest, most tenuous character, and they are strangers to Christ. The day will come when Jesus will proclaim to their faces that they are strangers to him. A man may add the names of 100 people to his church roll and yet add no glory nor power to the church of Jesus. On the other hand he may add in a year only one name to his church roll and yet add a host to the redeemed of the Lord. Some one has said: "What we need is not more church members but a better brand of them." We talk about purging our church rolls, but if the Lord purged them they would look like a Kansas wheat field after the locusts had passed through. The cause of the almost mortal sickness among the churches, the lack of power to save a lost world, is found in large measure in a church filled in the main with unredeemed people. The world has come in and filled and swamped the church. We let down the bars lower and lower until at last there were no bars whatever. We made it easy for the worldly to come into the church just as they were, and we made it easy for them to stay just as they were. The church wanted crowds of people. They got the crowds for a while, but then they discovered that somehow or other in getting the crowds Jesus was left outside the door.

The church door and the strait gate are two entirely different things. They ought to be the same but in practice they become more and more unlike. We have changed the strait gate of Christ into a church door wide as the gate of the world and we have changed the narrow path of righteousness into the broad way of every sin and folly. How can we any longer distinguish between a church member and a worldling? We cannot any longer distinguish between them. Ordinarily they are as much alike as two peas. They seek the same things; they go to the same places; their speech is the same kind of speech; they walk together on the same level and share the same kind of companionship; they are of the earth earthy.

"Come in," we said, "and no embarrassing questions will be asked. Come in just as you are." And the world came into the church, and the world remained unchanged in the church, and the world was entirely comfortable in the church and the world at last made the church in large measure just like itself. Thus the church lost power to energize life and to transform life through the Spirit of God . . . Undoubtedly the first big task of the church today is to bring salvation to its unredeemed, unsanctified church members. It is easy to get new members into the church, but it is not so easy to get new folks."—H. H. Marlin in Bibliotheca Sacra, January, 1931.

WE Perish

Among those suffering from the implacable Communist persecution are numbers of Mennonites. Their horrible experiences are described by Dietrich Rempel, Field Representative of the Canadian Mennonite Board in an article published in the last issue of Serving and Waiting from which I quote:

"The rumor that several families will be exiled gives the villager many restless nights. Who will it be this time? Most of them are not taking an active part in the program of the communists for conscience sake. How can they? To be in sympathy with the activities of the Soviet Government would mean the denial of God, their Father. It would mean also to give up their religion, their family life, their morals, in fact, everything that is sacred to them. No, they can not do this willingly. They trust in God.

It is a cold, quiet, Russian winter night. The village is apparently peacefully asleep under its white and heavy blanket of snow. There are no lights in the windows. The almost deathly silence is broken only by an occasional lonely howl of a hungry dog. Suddenly the severe barking of the dog drives every one to sit up and listen. "They are here!"

There is a cursing and swearing at the beasts. A loud rapping at the door. Pale, and with trembling hands the door is opened. The intruders are scarcely human. Between profanity and threats they give orders to leave the house in thirty minutes. "But where must we go? I can't take the children into the cold night," pleads the mother!" "You'll see! You're to die like dogs," is the grim answer with a satanic grin!

The remainder of the night the prisoners spend on the street, arranging what little they are able to take with them. With dawn they are forced to walk fifteen miles to a railroad station. Mothers carry crying children. Old grandmothers are supported by their sons who are already bending low under their heavy loads. The train is a day late and the unfortunate must spend a whole night without a shelter. To keep warm they all huddle together on a coal-pile. There are now hundreds of prisoners at the station. They must board the train in such a hurry that some families are separated. Then the doors of the boxcars are closed and locked. Forty to fifty, and even more, men, women and children suddenly find themselves imprisoned in a single car. There are no toilet conveniences, and they receive water only once a day. The air becomes unbearable. Children cry for water. Before the transport reaches Moscow, there are deaths in nearly every car. But the train does not stop for them. Mothers see their own children tossed out of the train.

How is it possible that such crimes can be carried on openly in, what we call, a civilized world? Yet, the worst is still ahead of them.

In Moscow they are permitted to clean the cars. They receive some food and hot water. Even a radio is heard over a loud-speaker near by. The cars bear an inscription in large print. "Volunteers to Settle the North." Speakers greet them and tell the passing crowd that the people in this train have voluntarily decided to go to Siberia to do pioneering.

When they arrive at their destination in Siberia, many of them have already died. They are put into a large camp where thou-

urs good for the future of the church when the laymen bestir themselves with a desire for greater spirituality. And they are beginning to do that, as is evidenced in denominational groups by plans and programs for the inactivity of laymen. It is so in our own church. Laymen's desire of the emergence of a desire on the part of the men of to count more largely for Christ and the church. It is a good token. For the men of the church have not been as devoted to the interests of the kingdom as they might have as much as have the women, whose activities and achievements long been a challenge to the comparatively unused powers of the men. The largest latent force the church rests in the laymen, and if that could somehow be called transformed into active energy, and organized and directed to useful ends, it would mean a revival of the church's life such as has not been witnessed in generations. Doubtless expresses something of the real desire and hope in the the leaders of the laymen's movement in our church. Their plans and efforts to such an end they deserve the encouragement and cooperation of every minister and congregation. At the eve of Laymen's Day it may be interesting and helpful to know some other Dunker laymen are attempting to do a thing. The laymen of the Church of the Brethren have set a very comprehensive and constructive program, which seeking to put into operation in a most aggressive manner have a National Council of Men's Work with a layman as executive secretary, from whose office go out quarters of several pages containing the monthly programs, suggestions for men's activities, brief reports of what men are doing in various localities and words of encouragement and inspiration. From this office also go correspondence and a variety of materials for the organizing of a Council of Men's Work in every church and for the promotion of their programs.

Objectives and service suggestions are commendable, and they divide into five general phases of religious activity. The first is "personal and spiritual culture," under which are suggested three lines of activity—personal evangelism, church work and home record. The second is "missions," home and foreign, with suggestions for the promotion of missionary education and increased giving for missions. All too much of our missionary education is confined to the women of the church. It is good to see an organized effort to bring men also under the inspiring and quickening power of missionary information. The third is "Christian education," which finds expression in local churches, the Christian college and boys' work. The fourth is "service," encouraging cooperation in "community betterment, peace and moral welfare" and in "recreation." And the fifth is "stewardship," aiming to educate people in the responsibilities of Christian stewardship so as to encourage the right attitude toward life and property and to promote the financing of the entire program of the church.

In the various departments outlined there are some very good suggestions for laymen activities, some of which are so good that they deserve special mention. For example, it is suggested that the laymen be used to promote evangelism by being sent two-by-two on a personal work campaign; that they be organized into "Gospel Teams" to nearby towns; that they make com- munity surveys, and be allowed to take charge of a Sunday evening service occasionally. That last suggestion might help to stimulate interest in some of our sparsely attended Sunday evening services. Other suggestions are the conduct of an "every member canvass," solicit subscriptions for the church paper, cooperate in a "church-wide own church campaign," teach facts about narcotics and take an aggressive stand against the repeal of the 18th amendment, and many other ways it is suggested that laymen be trained and put to work for Christ and the church. And because of the practical nature of the plans and suggestions, there ought to be realized a great net profit to our sister church if its lay leadership succeeds in securing a wide cooperation in their program.

Few things are more important than putting the laymen to work, and it is most encouraging when the laymen begin to put themselves and their fellows to work. The ministers may well thank God for the growing interest on the part of the men of the church and for their desire to do a larger share in the great work of bringing in the kingdom of God. If we are wise we will give them the opportunity and the encouragement to demonstrate that larger loyalty and service of which they are capable and which many of them really crave.

The Emotional and Intellectual in Religion

The tendency of the present is to over-emphasize the intellectual in religion and to under-emphasize the emotional. There are some erratic groups who go to extremes in their emphasis of a certain type of emotional religion. But it is not emotionalism that we plead for. It is not religious thrills that we need, not that bubbling and sputtering of religious feelings that flourishes where there is a lack of intelligence. That could add nothing of value to our modern life. What we need is the enrichment and strengthening of our emotional life, the development of that side of life that gives control and leads to right conduct and moves to unselfishness and service. We need to emphasize the cultivation of the qualities of the soul rather than the power of the mind. Not that a good mind is not important, but that over and above the worth of a good mind is the quality and attitude of the life or soul. We have fallen into the way of appraising the individual according to the intelligence he manifests and have almost lost sight of the more important factor of emotional control. We have not concerned ourselves much with the individual's attachments, his loves and loyalties, his reactions toward standards of conduct, his sense of the rightness and wrongness of things. We have thought we were doing a good job of our training when we gave instruction to the mind and passed on an accumulation of information concerning standards of conduct and religious beliefs, and failed to give proper care to noting the emotional reaction to a particular problem or temptation and seeking to influence the right attitude of heart. But such a one-sided emphasis means failure, and has meant failure, because it neglects that which most determines character.

This tendency to over-emphasize the intellectual shows itself in every phase of life's interests. We grade pupils in our public schools almost wholly by their intellectual keenness or dullness, and by what they are able to store away in their minds, and by the speed and accuracy with which they are able to think. The intellectual qualities are necessarily important in educational standards, but they do not tell the whole story, either as to intellectual worth and probable achievements or as to moral dependability and vision. We must come back to the placing of more emphasis on the emotional development, and grade a person's ability to take a proper attitude toward standards of conduct and to exercise a sympathetic understanding of life problems, as well as the purely intellectual training, and when we learn this lesson better, our schools will place more emphasis on those things that make for character than they do at present.

In our dealing with delinquents and criminally disposed people we have placed and are placing an exaggerated emphasis on the quality of the intellect. This fact was brought out in a clear-cut manner by an editorial published in the Akron Sunday Times (August 16, 1931), and its words are worth quoting:

Trying to figure out the degree of mental responsibility possessed by men accused of crime is always a tough job. We have made it a good deal tougher by tackling it wrong end to.

A psychiatrist, addressing the bar association of a large American city the other day, pointed out that the courts, in common with most of the rest of us, have a faulty idea of what insanity really is.

"America," he said, "has put intelligence on a pedestal and has neglected to recognize that the greater part of life is emotional control. It is a misconception to base a knowledge of right or wrong on intelligence. Academically trained persons may be subnormal in emotional control."

When we look for signs of insanity in a criminal, then we look in the wrong place. We ignore the man's emotional processes, and inquire only into his intellectual side. If he seems to have a normal intelligence we at once decide that he is fully accountable for his actions—entirely forgetting that an emotional whirlwind can break down the barriers and turn a highly intelligent man into something very like an out and out lunatic.

Who has not witnessed or read of a criminal trial in which the prosecutor, attempting to prove that the defendant was mentally sound, pointed out that the crime itself was so complicated, so carefully planned, that a man of defective mentality could not possibly have committed it? That plea is a commonplace of the criminal courtroom; and yet, as the psychiatrist reminds us, how little it means! A man's mental processes may be faultless—but some quirk on the emotional side can transform him into what we call a maniac.

In other words, we are basing our criminal court practices on scientific theories that are a good half century out of date. It is high time that we overhauled the whole system in the light of modern knowledge.

It all grows out of our over-emphasis of the intellectual and we must begin the recasting of our criminal court practices as well as many other difficulties in our modern life by balancing up the emphasis of the intellectual and the emotional. And we must lead the way in our religious instruction and training. We must not forget that out of the heart, and not the intellect, proceed the things that really defile a man and also that out of the heart come the things that give character and eternal worth.

Don't jump at the conclusion that because some one refuses longer to argue with you that you have gotten the better of them in the argument, or that you have converted them to your views. It may be that you have simply convinced them of the folly and the hazard of arguing, in which case there is no reason for your taking credit to yourself.

Word from Brother Freeman Ankrum informs us that the evangelistic meetings in which he is doing the preaching at Flora, Indiana, are being well attended and that six accessions have been received thus far. The Flora church has joined the increasing number of those who are improving their service by the publishing of a weekly bulletin. The Flora bulletin is being launched with the support of advertisers.

We learn from their weekly calendar that among the important dates just ahead for the church at Washington, D. C., where Brother Homer A. Kent is the able pastor, there is to be Building Campaign Day on Sunday, October 18th, when Brother A. V. Kimmell of Philadelphia will be the special speaker. The Washington Brethren are still struggling forward in a noble way toward the goal of a completed church building in our Capital City.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Shomber of Fellsmere, Florida and members of the Ashland, Ohio, Brethren church, recently paid a visit to the Publishing House. They also attended worship on Sunday, September 27th, when Brother Shomber, who is an Elder as well as a practicing physician and surgeon, shared the pulpit, with the pastor, Brother Dyoll Belote. Dr. G. C. Carpenter also was present and assisted in the morning service.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble has brought to completion a tremendous task, that of the writing of the life of Elder James S. Gribble and incidentally the history of the Brethren mission work in French Equatorial Africa, a book containing about 180,000 words after it was abridged. Sister Gribble has splendid natural ability as a writer, and besides she delights in writing and puts her soul into it. We are looking forward to the receipt of our copy of "Undaunted Hope" with keen delight, and we anticipate for it an enthusiastic reception on the part of all those interested in African missionary endeavors. Already the releases in a widely circulated

French missionary magazine have been read with avidity and quickened spiritual pulses. Members of the Brethren church desire to take advantage of the pre-publication price of price limited to the first 1,000 copies, should write immediately to Dr. Louis S. Bauman, Long Beach, California, and place the order.

Brother Grant McDonald has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Ellet, Ohio, from which Brother Floyd Siderer has resigned sometime ago after nearly four years of devoted service which resulted in the launching of a new time pastorate and the erection of a new church building. McDonald has resigned the Smithville-Sterling church and will take charge at Ellet the second Sunday in October. The Ellet church has its problems but it also has a field that is big with possibilities, and some noble, self-sacrificing people, whom we believe God can use to build up a strong church for himself in the community.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Ashland Seminary, gives us the first installment of "Seminary Notes" for the new school year. The growth of the seminary in number of students seems to be satisfactory, there being at present ten regular students in the graduate school and ten doing special work in the graduate school. Graduate and pre-seminary students number thirty-seven men and two ladies. The new Seminary building, equipped with all necessary furnishings, is conveniently located and is occupied rent free by sixteen men, who enjoy the good fortune of having as their house mother and cook Sister Siderer, mother of Brother Ernest Pine, one of the Seminary boys. The theological library of the college is being re-arranged for the advantage of the seminary students and effort will be continued to improve the library as rapidly as funds may allow. Such a mark a great advance in the encouragement of the church's young men preparing for the ministry.

Brother Raymond E. Gingrich, pastor of the Fairhaven church near West Salem, Ohio, reports progress in his part of the vineyard. He was assisted in an evangelistic campaign in August by his brother, Rev. J. L. Gingrich of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Fourteen souls were added to the church by baptism. One awaits the rite. Another evidence of growth is that the church has undertaken full time pastoral work, the preaching services continue as before on alternate Sunday. Brother and Sister Raymond Gingrich are to continue their labors for another year at this place. The various auxiliaries are functioning well and prayer and music are being emphasized. Effort is being put forth to care for the social as well as the needs of the young people, and through them in part a friendly spirit is being built up with the neighboring Church Brethren.

President E. E. Jacobs announces that the enrollment of students at Ashland College continues to increase and has gone beyond the last year's high record of 295 for this time of year. Enrollment now stands at 300, which is a banner record for this semester. Dr. Jacobs gives public recognition to the motherhood of Mary and Martha for gifts that made possible the chasing of new and attractive furniture for the Girls' Institute. Also the college recently received a bequest from an individual in Falls City, Nebraska, and the president is encouraged by that that this sort of remembrance of the college is increasing. It is right that it should. If Brethren people had begun to do this sort of thing many years ago, Ashland College might have the grade of standard school long before she did, and it might be much more strongly fortified to meet all the demands in that class than she is at present. That Brethren are beginning to do this is an indication that they are becoming more responsible in the discharge of their stewardship. And such fidelity ought to continue to increase. Christian stewardship is as surely a part of the Gospel as baptism or footwashing, and it seems more difficult for Brethren people to practice, but it is no less binding upon those professing to be a "Whole Gospel" church. Faithfulness in stewardship involves the proper distribution of what we have behind as well as the use we make of our substance while we live. There are many more people throughout the brotherhood who ought to be seeking the will of the Lord in regard to the disposal of their material possessions either by will or by testament.

The Pastor's Relation to the General Interests of the Church

By R. D. Barnard

not at all sure why I should be chosen to deal with interesting and important subject. I am a pastor, to know of, and am interested in the general interest of the church. But, as I look over my short ministry often been negligent in the presentation of these things in my churches. Perhaps that is why I am

I am sure of one thing—in thinking of this subject throughout the last few months I have seen a new light in, and feel a new responsibility to, the interest of the church. That shows that something has already been accomplished. Perhaps it would have much more effect upon you, if perchance any of you might have had a tendency to be half-hearted with respect to interest of the church.

I acknowledge in the very first what you all know, I am not an expert in this field and am not writing one. I am not writing as the most experienced in the denomination, I am far from that. I stand in the presence of the many here this morning who have had many, many more years of experience than I in many different fields. I am writing only as a member of a church in the Brethren denomination. I am not at all that I do not have a panacea for, or a perfect solution to the problem at hand. I do desire to make some suggestions, raise some problems, offer some suggestions, and leave plenty of time in this session for general discussion of the subject at hand.

The pastor should be interested in his local congregation, more than a bread furnishing institution for him and his family. It is his passion, if he be a true pastor. Its joys are his successes, its joys are his joys, its victories are his victories, its problems are his problems. He never holds in his mind that he is giving of his life to grow the Bride of Christ. I say all this to prepare the way to say another thing. The pastor's interest should extend far beyond the borders of his local congregation. It should encompass every part and department of his denomination. If there were no denomination there would probably be no local congregation. The rise and fall of the denomination is the certain yardstick by which its own congregation is to be measured in the eyes of the world, and of other Christian people.

A denomination cannot long exist, and cannot be maintained without the INTERESTS to which the discussion of this paper is dedicated. Whatever fails to grow and prosper. Even if one part of our body fails to function properly the body is sick. Likewise, if a single one of our church interests fails to receive proper support it will die and the whole denomination thus afflicted soon be ill.

There must be educational interests. I am thinking of Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, Publishing, and all educational interests under this head. The problem that is in America today educates. Unless the Christian forces educate, and educate uncompromisingly, orthodoxly Christian we are the terrible losers. If we do not put the Christian connotation into the words of Carnegie are very meaningful for us, "Truly a thinking man's worst enemy the Prince of Darkness can be overcome by the education of our own youth just cannot be done to our satisfaction in other denominations. We must have our own denominational inter-

We must have the missionary interests. Christ enjoins it. The victories of the mission field vindicate it. The reflex benefits in our own local congregations prove it unquestionably necessary. A great preacher of the last generation when asked what he would do first if he were given a call to become the pastor of a weak struggling church said, "I would preach a missionary sermon, and lift a missionary offering." Mission interests are intensely personal. Those from among us—our dear friends go into the near or distant parts of the earth—into the hard places to represent us. We should be less than the heathen if we should let them fall. We must have the missionary interests, and they should be at their best.

We must have evangelistic interests. Much that has been said with respect to the two former interests is applicable here. The Christian message is primarily evangelistic. Any general interest which promotes evangelism, or the study of the Word of God is worthy of our support. There should surely be some general working program of national proportions as well as those of district proportions promoting this very thing. It is probably not an interest, as are most of the others mentioned, but is of such importance as an underlying power that we dare not slight it.

We must have extension interests in our denomination. I differentiate here from missions. I am thinking of such efforts as that authorized with respect to the Washington, D. C. work a year or so ago. Certainly such efforts are both noble and necessary. The failure to respond to this and similar opportunities more gloriously than we have reveals at least one sad fact. Neither our leaders or our congregations have been educated to consider such as an important interest of the church. I consider it as one of the MOST important.

We must have the benevolent interests of the denomination. Nothing is more definitely given as divine injunction than that we shall care for the sick, the widows, the aged, and the orphans. We are seeking to do this in a certain weak fashion. We should be doing it enthusiastically, lovingly. Probably our plans as a denomination are not perfect here as they are not in other interests. They couldn't be while they are in the hands of such imperfect people as we are. But the interest is worthy, and should have our best support, seeking thereby to bring it to greater perfection. Only denominational ingratitude can cause us to fail to support this most noble interest of the church.

Now, I am not writing a treatise on the interests of the church, although the foregoing may seem like it. I only mention them, and include any others that I may not have mentioned, that we may be clear in our definition of terms. Without them, or with them, but in such hampered conditions we cannot look courageously into the future, we cannot anticipate any great victories. Our definite consideration, therefore, is how the pastor may best be related to these interests as to better support them in his local congregation.

We cannot be fair in this discussion without considering the manifold challenge for the pastor in his local church, to say nothing of the challenge from the larger field, the denominational interests. He is a busy man. There is the possibility that he become so engrossed in his daily work that the special interests which should be discussed with the congregation and presented for support get a second and inferior place. In his inner thought the honest pastor would not have it so. I do not believe the average pastor is naturally neglectful, (although this concentration on the local work sometimes makes it seem so.

One thing is sure, if for any reason the pastor fails to present some of the less conspicuous interests of the church, his congregation will seldom urge it. "Like priest, like people" always has and always will be true. A neglectful pastor makes a neglectful congregation.

This same influence works out another way with the pastor and his congregation. Almost every pastor has a natural bias. I confess that my bias has always been the foreign mission appeal. I have tried to counteract it by the slogan in my thinking and preaching, "For every dollar for foreign missions, a dollar for home missions as well." It is usually true that if a pastor remains a few years in one field, the bias of the pastor will become the bias of the congregation. There is some good in such concentration of interest, but there is also much of danger. As a pastor I should remember that other INTERESTS are probably just as important in the all-seeing Eye of God as the one for which I show a special bias. All interests should be fairly and fully presented.

The frequency of appeals for the support of the general interests, is probably the theme that first comes into your mind when the theme of this paper is mentioned. It is important to—something will need be said upon. One thing is well to note however. It is not how often the appeal is made, but how often we give liberally that counts. The pastor is probably the most conscious of this frequency of appeal—of anyone, although his congregation may sometimes mention it. But he is always there, always planning some new and novel way of presenting it, and he becomes most conscious of the frequency of the calls. It is especially noticeable in a congregation hard-pressed financially, or in one where there is some big local project claiming the attention, or in a congregation where the people have not been taught to give and seem naturally selfish.

With respect to financial depressions, it should be remembered that these are the very times when the interests need support most, and the money given can accomplish the most for the Lord. With respect to this general consideration we will probably have some suggestions later.

Pastors sometimes face the difficulty of having members in the local congregation who are antagonistic to having any money leave the local congregation, in plain words, the problem of selfish members. This is a difficult problem. But, one can never meet antagonism with antagonism. First, it is not Christian; second, it never can accomplish, it only causes church quarrels. In such cases I would never force anyone to give, or place them in an embarrassing situation if they didn't, however I would give the willing ones an opportunity. If the giving of that opportunity publicly would cause antagonism, I would see the willing ones individually and receive their gifts.

The pastor may sometimes feel justified in concentrating on some local project for a year or period of years to the exclusion of all outside interests. This may sometimes be justified. There are some grave dangers, however. The special interests of the church are jeopardized, and this is not the finest of sacrificial Christian love. The greatest danger is for the pastor. Sooner or later he will desire to turn the thoughts of the congregation back to the interests again, and he will find they are not easily changed. They will have become congregationally and hide-bound. Years of teaching and training necessary to give the congregation the greater again, and then sometimes it is not fully given. It is a better policy to support all interests, but probably with undue emphasis during the peculiar congregational condition.

A pastor may feel that certain interests of the church are not planned and managed as he would do it, that he is disinterested, if not antagonistic to that special interest. I can even see how a pastor in whom Satan sowed just a little of unrighteous ambition could decide, that, because he was not named of such and such a board, he will not do much for the interest. I can see how subtle Satan could sow such seed in the pastor's mind without his even being conscious of it. However true. Every board of the denomination is anxious and anxious that God shall lead it to do its best for the sake of all concerned. I believe this with all my heart. Every board of every interest is anxious to give information, and to receive suggestions. We must always remember that when we look on from the outside we see much differently than if we were on the inside of the board looking out. There are many little details in the management of every board which are not fitting as publicity—many times such was revealed in confidence. Some of us have some family secrets which would probably be harmful if known to the public, but they are not fitting for the public. There is always a chance that a pastor who might be persuaded to criticize me am wrong, and the people representing the interest with vast information might be right. It should be remembered, too, that failing to support an interest in a cause will never correct the wrong. The innocent suffer, the work will be hindered, and the pastor and congregation will be even the greatest losers.

There is one other consideration that should be mentioned, yet I believe it is very seldom, if ever, true in the Brethren denomination. It is a sad possibility: A pastor may be selfish. He may not be personally committal to any plan of systematic giving, and thus will not tell his congregation any plan.

He may have the view that the church owes him nothing, and thus be seeing not what he may joyously give to the Lord's service, but what the Lord is duty-bound to give to him. If this be his view he will in most cases be friendly to any money going from his congregation to the general interests of the denominational. We must see this as a possibility which is not probable.

Studies in the Types

By R. I. Humberd

Remember Lot's Wife

In our last study we considered the incident of the woman who looked back, and saw that Christ made the truth of the record to foreshadow the truth of his own resurrection.

The Scripture reveals a great departure from the world before the second coming of our Lord. It will be a time when "the faith" (Luke 18:8 R. V.) will be very strong and like in the days of Noah, people will have the same on banqueting, suppers and things of pleasure on earth (Luke 17:27). It will be a time of great tribulation, the home and children will be "disobedient to parents" (Tim. 3:2). But the judgment of God is sure.

Next day the best dancing master in Sodom was emplayed to teach the Lot girls the latest and most graceful steps. He was an expert, as could be seen a few weeks later, when Mother Lot gave a dance party in honor of the birthday of her eldest daughter. Their life was then one merry round of pleasure. It pierced her heart now as she remembered how it leaped for joy then to see her daughter in the arms of the mayor's son as they swung around the floor in time with the music. All the "exclusive" society was there.

It made her a little uncomfortable at first, to see her daughters keeping late hours, playing cards, dancing, going to the theatres, sipping wine, bobbing their hair (1 Cor. 11) and wearing men's clothing (Deut. 22:5—"A woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man . for all that do so are an abomination to the Lord thy God.") But she must not be too harsh with them. Young people must have their fun. Her daughters must be included in the social set, so everything must be done to assure their invitation to all the social doings. Now the time has come when she is to reap what she has sown.

As she sat alone waiting for Father Lot's return she shuddered as she exclaimed, "O foolish woman that I Was! My innocent girls were placed in godless society, and all because I forgot God. For years I have never mentioned the name of God to them."

At this moment she was startled by the sound of approaching footsteps, and hastened to the door to meet Father Lot. Where are the girls? No answer was necessary. The ghastly look on Father Lot's face told the tale. They had no time to talk, for a heavy hand pushed them to the door, and into the street, and a stern voice commanded them to hasten. The two younger daughters helped make up the sad procession. When they came to the gate of the city, they were given thier orders—"Escape for thy life, look not behind thee."

Mother Lot's heart ached as she trudged on. Oh, her poor daughters! Only a few moments and their flesh would sizzle in the terrible fire from heaven. Well did she know that the burden of blame rested on her shoulders. She should have kept her girls closer at home. But she had been so anxious for their "social advancement." Of course, Father Lot should have been more firm, for he was vexed daily with the unlawful deeds that he saw and heard (2 et. 2:8). But Mother Lot was so determined. She was the stronger party. Why had she been so foolish as to forget God? Why had she allowed the frivolities of the world to claim her attention and ruin her offspring?

Just now they were passing a large shade tree. It brought back the memory of a few years ago as they were moving into Sodom. They had stopped to rest in the shade of this tree. She remembered the beautiful scene as her daughters played in the shade that day. There was the spring where they quenched their thirst. There was the big root on which a chubby foot was bruised. There was the rock on which she was sitting when the little wound was healed by a mother's kiss. Oh, those innocent children! They were soon to be destroyed, because mother had forgotten God!

She could stand it no longer. It may be they are coming. She will look.

What is that? It stands so still. Is it Mother Lot? No, it is a pillar of salt!"

What a monument erected on those plains! What a warning to parents from that time to this! How the words of Christ ring through the centuries, "Remember Lot's wife" (Luke 17:32). What a story that short verse conveys! What a warning to fathers and mothers who are

"easing up" on son or daughter! "Remember Lot's wife." Ask yourselves, father, mother, "Shall I ever suffer the remorse that Father and Mother Lot suffered? Am I bringing up my children for Christ or the best (?) society?" Parents, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John 2:15). Children, "Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth" (Eccles. 12:1).

Seventy-five percent of the crimes and burglaries today are committed by youth under twenty-five years of age. The children of America will rise up in the judgment and condemn those parents who were at "ease in Zion" while they were slipping away from God.

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

3. The Symbolic meaning of the love feast is proof of its sacramental nature.

Since ancient times to eat together has been a pledge of friendship. With Israel God formed a new fraternity, based on holiness. The participants of the feasts of the law were members of the covenant. The idea of fraternity, or the communion of holy people was taught in the feast of unleavened bread and by the unleavened bread in the tabernacle. It is taught in the new covenant by the love feast, participation in which is a pledge to maintain the relation of brotherly love, the practise of the love of Christ.

Like the feetwashing, the love feast has a triple meaning. It looks to the past, the present and the ufture. It is a memorial of the love of Christ in his life, a symbol of the love of Christ manifested in his body, the church, and a type of the love of Christ in the marriage supper of the Lamb, in his coming.

(1) It is a memorial of the love of Christ. The feetwashing represents the love of Christ in his humiliation or incarnation. The love feast represents his love in his life. In this dispensation Christ is forming "a people for his name" (Acts 15:16), and this people, chosen from among all nations, he is organizing into one body, his bride (Eph. 5:25-27) whom he loves with infinite love. For her he gave his life. To her he has given rich spiritual gifts, and he is adorning her for the wedding feast. And to help her to remember his great love in all that he has done and is doing for her, he has given the agape, the feast of love, as a memorial of the faithful bridegroom who will soon return to claim his own.

(2) The love feast is a symbol of the love of Christ manifested in his body, the church. This is not the sensual love of which the world commonly speaks. No evolution without Christ can ever produce it. Only as the Holy Spirit inspires it in the heart (Rom. 5:5) can we love one another as Jesus loved us. In the love feast the church learns and feels this love and pledges itself to be true to it.

The sin of Judas was doubly black because he rose from the first love feast, having pledged himself to loyal love, and went to betray the Lord, thus fulfilling the prophecy. "He that hath eaten bread with me hath lifted up the heel against me" (Ps. 41:9). Then he took the kiss, another emblem of love, as a sign to the enemies. No that he found no place for repentance. Thus brethren who in the leave feast pledge themselves to holy love and then in actual life defraud and mislead one another, or bring reproach by vices and unholiness, are "spots and blemishes" and not true. They have eaten and drunk to damnation, and have not tasted the true banquet whose menu we have in 1 Cor. 13.

But those who participate with the spirit and understanding are not apt to fall into hypocrisy. In them is a continual love feast, and they in turn are witnesses of his love. Some false brethren there were and are, and will even try to enter the marriage feast, but, having not the wedding garment of righteousness, they will be cast out (Matt. 22:13).

Of the early church it was often said, "Behold the love one another," and the historian Gibbon, though an atheist, names the love feasts as a cause of the rapid growth of the church.

(3) The love feast is also a type of the "marriage supper of the Lamb" (Rev. 19:7, 8). The love which the Lord from "the ivory palaces" to taste the aloes of his humiliation (Ps. 45:8), which bore him to the cross to redeem his humble bride, as his great price (Mt. 13:45), which makes him not ashamed of her even in his glory in Heaven (Heb. 2:17), he has gone to prepare a place for her, will be back again to receive her unto himself (Jn. 14:23). She may be to all worlds and all ages a witness to the love of Jesus (Eph. 2:4-7). Well does the Scripture say, "Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." And how much more blessed is the church herself! What a theme for meditation! How meaningful is this feast which Jesus gave to the church to cause us to look forward to its fulfillment in the marriage supper. Who would not wish to partake of it? (To be continued)

Use your gifts faithfully, and they shall be multiplied. Practice what you know, and you shall attain knowledge.—Arnold.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

GOSPEL TRANSLATED FOR ABORIGINES

The first translation of any kind into the language of the Australian aborigines was recently completed when Rev. J. J. Love finished his translation of St. Mark's Gospel. The translation was made into the language of the Worrora, a tribe in the north of Western Australia having about 1,000 members. Mr. Love spent three years at a lonely station with this tribe, with his wife and children and two or three other members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Love picked three helpers from the tribesmen to assist in the translation. The nouns were picked up objects and the verbs by actions. The translation took the full three years. There were some 350 aborigines at the Munya Presbyterian mission station, which has an area of 250,000 acres. A church building, holding about 250 people, has been built at the mission.—The Presbyterian.

MARRYING SCHOOL CHILDREN

A most disturbing revelation among the school children of New York City came through a recent report of the superintendent of schools in New York City, William J. O'Shea. His report reveals that in the last academic year five hundred and thirty pupils only four of whom were boys, were expelled from school because of marriage. This number is an increase of about 100 over the number that were expelled for marriage in the

An analysis of the figures reveals that of the five hundred twenty-two only four were boys; one girl was only twelve years and in the first grade; three were thirteen years old; forty were fourteen; one hundred and thirty-five were fifteen, and hundred and forty-four of the girls who married were sixteen. A further analysis showed that sixty-seven percent of these marriages were contracted by students in the compulsory continuation schools, where, in many cases, the brilliant boys and girls are attending, but where the students prefer work to study. It is said, that most of those who turn down the opportunity of attending high school do so not out of necessity. The high school showed virtually no increase in student marriages last year. In New York City, what would the facts reveal as to the situation in the rest of the country. These are very disturbing facts that cast reflection on the situation involving the youth of America. At this age certainly they know little of the problems of life and the baffling intricacies in the adventure of marriage. This, however, is the question of citizenship. How can they prepare for that important share in life's responsibilities and how prepare their children for the highest citizenship? Doubtless the schools of New York City will be taking important steps for the overcoming of this serious situation. Religious Telescope.

MOVIES AND MORONS

Have heard much in recent years of intelligence tests. Some ultra-clever intelligentsia have gone so far as to tell us based on these tests, most Americans are in a class of morons, only one step above the imbeciles. Psychology charts out by Sandiford, we are informed, however, tell us that in this country there are really about 75,000,000 people above the morons. Of these there are 200,000 idiots and imbeciles, morons (lowest grade intelligence) number just 600,000. These are the border-line class of 4,600,000; then 10,000,000 are dull, and 22,000,000 of "low average" intelligence. Going up the mental ladder, we have next 22,000,000 people of "high average" intelligence; 10,000,000 of "superior" intelligence; 5,400,000 of "superior" ability; and at the top, 200,000 of the genius or genius type.

These are interesting and encouraging figures; if approximately where do they place the so-called "intelligentsia," with their cynical estimate of the American people? And what do these figures reveal as to the business judgment and common sense of our moving picture producers? Few students of the figures doubt that the producers consider it necessary to appeal to the lowest level of intelligence, in order to be successful at the box office, which seems to be their own criterion of success.

Eric M. Knight, cinema expert of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, does not hesitate to voice his condemnation of the producers' poor business men, because he says unequivocally that "making pictures for low-grade folks, who are in the majority, is a matter of fact he is sure there are larger audiences willing to pay cash for films of much higher standard than those which they attend regularly the present miserable and unintelligent picture. If you talk to the brusque, stolid, cocksure producers of the present advancement that will get the scenarios above junior high school intelligence, says Mr. Knight, you get only one answer, 'audiences wouldn't watch stuff like that.' Their credo is: 'Dumb is Dumb; and We Must Be Dumb, Too.' And so by the way, the Hollywood industry, ranked by some as the best of the nation is, according to this well-informed critic, linked in unbreakable embrace with the lowest common denominator of intelligence; the Movie and the Moron are to be remembered together irrevocably in memory as are Jonathan and David, Andy, sulphur and molasses, corned beef and cabbage."

Religious leader were to make such a charge, the paid advertisement of the movie trust would probably ascribe it to prejudice. But if, as the psychology charts show, there are at least as many intelligent people as morons, why should we produce more pictures of high standard that are not shown to the 37,000,000 men and women who are "above the average" intelligence? Should the producers who think so ill of the capacities of our citizenry be encouraged by our patronage to persist in their delusion?—Reformed Church Messenger.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

2 Cor. 10:1-6. We still need Paul's reminder of the meekness and gentleness of Christ; arrogance and egotism only serve to bring reproach upon his name. We also need to be reminded that though we live in the midst of fleshly things our warfare is spiritual, against spiritual forces. The Christian has a real weapon in his vote and citizenship, but he has a stronger weapon in prayer and in his spiritual strength. Let us not neglect the power that the forces of government have placed in our hands, but let us remember that all the power of God is ours for the asking.

TUESDAY

2 Cor. 10:7-11. Man's thoughts are among his most precious powers, and they are also a source of danger. In the days before the flood we read that man's thoughts were only evil continually; such is the natural tendency of fallen man, but in verse 5 we are reminded that every thought may be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Verse 7 also urges us to get right in our thinking: let us not think that we alone are called of God; he has called others also, and may have revealed himself more fully to them than to us. God keep us humble and of an open mind!

WEDNESDAY

2 Cor. 10:12-13. Measuring and comparing ourselves among ourselves—how we love to do it! "I give more than she does," and "He does more than George does!" What has that to do with it? Do I do what I could do by God's grace? Does he do what God would have him do? The little that the other fellow seems to do may be like the widow's mite—all that he has, and we may be endowed with the ability to do far beyond anything we have ever done. Let's stop comparing ourselves among ourselves, and try to measure up to God's rule. Read Eph. 4:13.

THURSDAY

2 Cor. 10:14-18. It is not enough merely to belong to a church that is eagerly active in missionary endeavor, or to associate with those who are striving to relieve the world's distress. There is nothing to be gained by boasting of the labors of others: it should be our desire to be instrumental in taking or sending the gospel to those who have not yet heard it. And even then, we have nothing to glory in except the grace of God which has led us to this high purpose. Give him the glory!

FRIDAY

2 Cor. 11:1-4. Just as a father or mother is jealously watchful over the welfare of his child, so is the believer solicitous for the spiritual welfare of those whom he has led to Christ and newness of life. There is only one Jesus, only one Spirit whom we may receive, and Paul was quite safe in telling them to follow anyone who could bring them such gifts. Let us praise God for the gift of his Son, and for his blessed holy Spirit!

SATURDAY

2 Cor. 11:5-10. There were those among the Corinthians who said, as many do today: "He's in it for what he gets out of it," and Paul states that he robbed other churches, taking wages from them while he labored for the Corinthians, rather than accept money from them and give any occasion for stumbling. Would that we might have more of this spirit, being unwilling to give any occasion for stumbling to our weaker brethren!

SUNDAY

2 Cor. 11:33. Paul implies that we may recognize Satan and his ministers by their boasting. We may well remember this test today! If Paul desires to boast he might have boasted that he was born an heir of Abraham, and held a more special commission from Christ than the others; that for his faith in Christ he had suffered more abundantly than they all. Yet he is weak, and he gives God the glory. How it should sober us to consider the things Paul was willing to suffer for his Lord!

The Convention Call

On behalf of the children of the world and in the interests of Christian Education, we issue this call to the Eleventh Convention of the World's Sunday School Association, to assemble in the city of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from the twenty-fifth to the thirty-first day of July, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and thirty-two.

Conventions since 1889 in London, St. Louis, Jerusalem, Rome, Washington, Zurich, Tokyo, Glasgow, Los Angeles,—have led the way to a rich world fellowship in Christian Education.

This Eleventh Convention is the first to be held south of the Equator. It is, moreover, the first representative gathering of a Christian nature from around the world ever called to meet in South America. Coming as it does at a time of marked transition in the thought life of a hundred million Latin Americans, this Convention has a unique opportunity to make a vital contribution to the ongoing of Evangelical Christianity.

The theme chosen for the Convention is O CHRISTO VIVO—The Living Christ. It is stated in Portuguese, the language of Brazil. It challenges all Christians throughout the world.

Never has it been more needful than now to stress in every land the Christian Education of Childhood and Youth. Here is to be found the Christian answer to the secularism of our time. The quiet, simple processes of Christian Education are the most potent which the Church of Christ has at its disposal to insure a redeemed world.

Only inasmuch as we seek through the processes of Christian Education to lead young people to faith in The Living Christ can we ever hope to win the world for Christ and the Kingdom of God.

CLASS BIRTHDAY PARTY

Had you ever thought of celebrating your class' birthday? Such a party would be not only interesting, but inspirational as well.

In planning your party it would be well to prepare a class history, relating important events and developments which have taken place since the organization of your class. You may increase the interest of this report by adding a humorous incident now and then.

After the report has been read, pass slips of paper to the members, asking each one to write a resolution or aim to be reached by the next class birthday.

If possible, you might prepare a birthday cake, decorating it with candles corresponding to the number of years during which the class has been in progress.

You may encourage other young folks to join your class, by asking each member to bring a friend.

THE LOYAL IDEA

The very name makes strong appeal. This name does not have to be explained. No time is lost in trying to analyze it syllable by syllable, or to give a history of its origin. From the beginning of this organization great inspiration has come to the Loyal Movement through its name. The word "Loyal" is simple, expressive and strongly emphasizes the principles of Loyalty to Christ.

Loyalty to the Book.

Loyalty to the church.

Loyalty to the Bible school.

Loyalty to the superintendent.

Loyalty to the class.

Loyalty to the teacher.

Loyalty to each other.

Loyalty to "others."

Loyalty to self.

Poems for Your Temperance Feature

Recitation—"With Apologies to Hamlet"

To drink or not to drink: that is the question:

Whether 'tis nobler in the man to slake

His thirst according to the provisions of nature,

Or to swallow the stuff the bootlegger brings,

And take a chance at living. To sleep: to wake

No more; or, if he wakes, to wish to end The splitting headache and the thousand natural shocks

His outraged flesh is heir to; 'tis a consumption

Sure as death to follow. To sleep, to wake;

To wake: perchance to think: aye, there's the rub;

For in those hours what sober thoughts may come

When he has slept away the deadening draught,

Must give him pause; there's the last hope That makes probability of longer life.

Recitation—"Give Us Men"

God gives us men; a time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands.

Men whom the lust of office cannot kill;

Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;

Men who possess opinions and a will;

Men who have honor; men who will not lie;

Men who can stand before a demagogue,

And brave his treacherous flatteries without winking;

Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above fog,

In public duty and in private think For while the rabble, with its thum creeds,

Its long professions, and its little Mingle in selfish strife—lo! Freedom Wrong rules the land, and waiting sleeps.

Is Youth Wild and Wicked

By W. G. Calderwood

The New York Evening Post recently a report of an address delivered J. S. Russell before the Institute of Hygiene, in which the eminent neurologist in part,

"Girls not out of school are to be drinking cocktails, champagne, and ... It has become a serious national problem that young women should be kept from excitement and keeping themselves free from drugs and alcohol."

Is that not a terrific indictment of prohibition and its murderous results exactly. The quotation is from a cable, reporting a speech made in London by a famous London nerve specialist refers to English schoolgirls. It is a dictum, not of prohibition, but of liquor control.

Conditions among school children in America under prohibition differ from those described in England. See J. W. Crabtree, of the National Education Association, whose official position gives weight and authority to his words, said:

"Conditions in the high schools are better than before prohibition, with respect to drinking and general behavior. Doubtless significant in view of the fact that high-school enrollment has grown since 1910 from two million to more than five million students—an achievement unparalleled in the history of any country in all history ... Undoubtedly the Eighteenth Amendment has benefited the schools beyond measure."

That this opinion is shared by the general public is evidenced by the fact that in February, 1931, the Superintendent of the National Education Association in convention in Detroit, adopted the following resolution:

"We reaffirm our faith in the Eighteenth Amendment and pledge ourselves to a national campaign for law enforcement habits of living in line with the Eighteenth Amendment."

The Associated Press in reporting the action stated that it was adopted "with one voice in opposition" out of 4,100 delegates!—From Prohibition Service, Minneapolis.

at hand. Whether in his expected return, or his constant presence with us. In nothing be anxious. Do not worry—take all your difficulties to God. Prayer and supplication with thanksgiving. Ask what you will, but be sure to mingle with the asking grateful thanks for what you have already received. The peace of God that passeth understanding. No human heart can fully understand God's peace. Only those who have it in their hearts can believe in it. But faith and love bring this peace.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Contrasting Men

This incident of presenting Christ to the slave-girl and the resentment aroused, resulted in Paul and Silas being thrown into jail. They form part of that long line of Bunyans, Garrisons, Pussyfoot Johnsons and multitudes of others who suffered persecution in the interest of a worthy cause.
What queer prisoners they were! Their clothing had been torn from them. They had been beaten with many stripes. Their feet were made fast in stocks. Yet at midnight they broke out in song and praise while the other prisoners listened. (This is not unlikely the first of our prison testimony services.)

Contrast with these the jailer. Perhaps we ought not to sit in judgment upon him, for at best we can but conjecture. At any rate, if he were the average public official who served in that capacity in that day, the contrast would be obvious. The matter of importance is that the same Christ who came to Paul in the lightning stroke on the way to Damascus now comes in the earthquake to a depraved jailer. Who are we to say that our Christ is for our Pauls and not for our jailers, for our Tagores and Gandhis and not for the outcaste criminal tribes

What the Lookout Committee Can Do

Duties

Find new members.

Welcome new members.

Suggest work for new members.

Reclaim old members from indifference.

Welcome sojourners (temporary workers in the community, and the like).

1. Prospects. Make a list of all young people who should be interested in the society.

2. Invitations. Invite each "prospect" personally, frequently, and systematically to visit and join the society. The lookout committee will cooperate with other committees and members in assigning the names of "prospects" to those most likely to reach them successfully. Every member of the society is, in effect, a member of the lookout committee.

3. High Standards. In winning members, emphasize obligations as well as opportunities. Explain the meaning of the pledge or covenant. Display a wall-pledge in the society's meeting-room.

4. Assign Work. Hold a reception service for new members. Give the new member the "Endeavor Greeting" and a Christian Endeavor pin. Assign each member immediately to a definite task (in cooperation with the president or executive committee).

5. Follow up. Promote members from easy tasks to harder ones. Look up the absent members. Give frequent words of appreciation to the newer members who are regular in attendance and faithful to their duties. Seek to win non-Christians for Christ.

Two types of members, active and associate. The associate member has not publicly accepted Christ as his personal Savior.
Associate members are the special field of the lookout committee. They should be tact-fully and painstakingly guided toward active membership in the society and in the church. The committee will work with the pastor and Sunday school teachers to that end.—C. E. World.

REQUEST OF JUNIOR SUPERIN- TENDENT

Will all superintendents of Junior Christian Endeavor Societies please send their name and address to Miss Mildred Deitz, 312 Cumberland Street, Berlin, Pennsylvania, as soon as possible. Miss Deitz is the newly elected Junior Superintendent of the Brethren National Union and desires this information to enable her to carry on her work.

DUTIES OF THE PUBLICITY COMMIT- TEE

1. They should be capable of writing up-to-the-minute news.
2. Arouse Christian Endeavor societies into doing things worth writing about.
3. Convince the general public that Christian Endeavor news should have space in the newspapers, as well as any other topic that concerns a large group of persons.

4. Be prepared to face the fact that many people do not think of Christian Endeavor as news, and must be educated that way.

5. Know that one must depend on the regular Sunday evening (or other weekly) prayer meeting for much of the news, therefore these meetings should be of worthwhile type.

6. Know that Christian Endeavor news must include other things besides social committee work if the society is to live and grow.

7. Understand that some persons who can collect news in a clever way are not able to write it in the same way. Pool your abilities, or train the inexperienced worker in publicity methods.

8. Have certain rules and definite goals, and strive to follow and reach them.

9. Enter publicity contests, and lead them, if possible. You will find helpers in the work more readily when a contest is involved.

10. Remember that prayer changes things, publicity work as well as all other activities engaged in for Christian ends.—Olive R. Gage, in C. E. World.

LaCygne, Kansas.

friends and relatives outside the Church are taking advantage of the advanced subscription price, our own shall not be too late to avail of its privileges.

The sending of the name and a Miss Longaker at the earliest possible moment (the reduced price $2.50 to only when the list is closed) is the necessary for you to take.

We ask that you will earnestly God's glory, humbly sought, may be attained in the publication of this God's faithfulness.

Since some have asked, we may say that the author receives no profit whatever from the sale or publication of this book. The first 1,000 to be sold at cost. On subsequent the author's royalty of 10% will be expended, it is to be hoped, for the furtherance of the gospel in the automobile-dispensary for the author is praying.

The manuscripts now complete days will be spent with old and new in Chicago and Evanston, then in Ashland, before we commence westward, which in spite of a few appointments, we hope will bring us by the last of October. We hope to spend the winter together and I, to be followed by in Central and Southern California we shall once more separate that return again to Africa.

In all our labors for our Master, a continued interest in your prayers.

Faithfully yours in his service

THE LITTLE RED BIBLE

By Elizabeth S. Webb, Missionary. Mariam Hanum Koondakjian is a few women still living who know of the early days of missionary work in Turkey.

She was born and grew up in a village of Hassan Beyli and was a member of the first class to graduate from the Central Turkey Missionary Seminary. Later she and her husband gave their lives to the people of the village,—he being one of the first of the Central Turkey Missionaries.

Pastor Koondakjian and two others were killed in the massacres. Mariam, however, now nearly seventy years of age, is still strong and active, and is a public meetings whenever needed.

Recently she told friends some of the old days. This is one.

Mariam's uncle was a gunmaker. One day, when Mariam was a little girl, she received an order from a man to make a gun. When the gun was ready, he brought it to him in his mountain retreat, and claimed to have no money with which to pay for it, but offered to give instead a red book. There being no alternative, the uncle finally accepted the book in payment for the gun. It proved to be a Bible. Mariam grew up, she partly learned from this book, and it had a great influence in the development of her life.

Years passed by, and the little book was in constant use in the family.

An Unexpected Sequel

One day, by chance, Mrs. Coffin, a missionary of fame, visited their village.

Manuscript of "Undaunted Hope" Ready

939 Wesley Avenue, Evanston, Illinois.
September 26, 1931.

My dear Evangelist Readers:

Just two years ago the original manuscripts of "Undaunted Hope" were completed, the intention being to publish them in two volumes. As this was deemed inadvisable by the Publishers (Revell & Co., Chicago) an abridgment has now been effected, reducing the manuscripts from 290,000 to 180,000 words and making possible their publication in a single volume. These manuscripts have been re-typed and are now ready for the Publishers.

In July, 1931, an abridgment made especially for French readers, began to be issued by "La Bonne Revue," a French religious family magazine which finds its way into numerous Christian homes not only in France, but also in Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Algeria and other lands. From an Algerian reader comes the following: "A second comfort has come to me, also through you, by the columns of 'La Bonne Revue' ... I have read this evening a continuation of the Biography of M. Gribble and I have wept ... But how I have been comforted by his faith, his invincible faith! ... To pray for a typewriter when one has not even money for stamps ... 'tis extraordinary! I have been the more comforted—because I am passing as it were through a fetid marsh, in which even while sinking therein, suddenly through this new incentive to faith, I have found solid earth suddenly under my feet, and a breath of pure air has come to me just as I was at the point of asphyxiation.

"Then this love and this humility! To be willing to have only a lowly seat near Heaven's gate in order that he might the better see the redeemed of the Lord come in from Central Africa! ...

"And then all those experiences of Divine deliverance ...

"I trust, my friend that multitudes of Christians shall be encouraged by 'L'Invincible Esperance'—('Undaunted Hope.') In any case I find myself altogether re-animated by the grace of God, and to you, my sister, I say: 'Thank you, my friend, for having written 'L'Invincible Esperance.'

That God should thus have condescended to use the book even in the beginnings of its circulation is a source of humble gratitude—

The story of the writing of the book is a simple one—To give the story of simple faith as exemplified in the life of one of God's humble servants was the object. The busy life on the mission field, and the constant struggle against poor health, for some years made it impossible to accomplish this task. Then in the year ensuing between November, 1928 and September, 1929—it became a possibility partly through the partial curtailing of mission work at Yaloke through the native uprising.

Not only this but every member of the then Yaloke staff cooperated in making it possible for the book to be written by lifting every possible burden. Miss Tyson typed the original manuscripts, Miss Emmert was the first to read the manuscripts, reading each chapter as it was finished during the evening relaxation from her heavy school duties. The manuscripts were finished on the last evening before the arrival of Brother and Sister Hathaway in September, 1929, and eight days later were consigned to Professor McClain by Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson as they departed for their furlough.

Had they not been finished then, it is doubtful if they could have been finished on the field. The increased duties at the hospital without a nurse, and the necessity of teaching first at Yaloke, then at Bassai, would have rendered such work an impossibility.

We praise God that he enabled us to take advantage of the accepted time in doing this work on the original manuscripts.

No less precious has been God's blessing on the abridgment.

The presence of Mr. Gribble's only surviving brother at our National Conference, his naturally keen interest in the work, his insistence that the manuscripts should be completed in his home, my return with him to Dearborn, the favorable conditions for the work,—all these things are but links in the chain of God's own preparing—a chain which has made possible the completion of the manuscript abridgment in so short a time.

We hope that while others in our circle of received for the seminary house rent and furnishings. Others have indicated their desire to aid. The house is given rent free to the students and they care for the incidental running expenses including their table.

We appreciate very much the interest members of the brotherhood have taken in our graduate school of theology and in our seminary house. The gifts received are appreciated by the faculty and by the students who live in the house.

For the housing of our theological books the college has kindly given us a separate library room. The books are arranged according to subjects. The graduate students have access to them at all times and can study close to the stacks. This makes their research work a great deal easier and we hope many more books will be used than heretofore.

We are still trying to build up our library so that the students will find adequate material on any subject concerning which they may desire information. You who have given us valuable theological books from your library can be assured they are well taken care of and used often.

Please remember our work in your pray-

THE FAIRHAVEN CHURCH, WEST SALEM, OHIO

Once again we wish to voice the activities and progress of this church. Not often do we write reports to the Evangelist concerning our work. However, we are busily engaged in the work of serving our Lord.
Since our last article appeared in the Evangelist a very interesting and fruitful evangelistic campaign has been conducted here.
Reverend J. L. Gingrich, the brother of the pastor, was the evangelist. Over a period of two and a half weeks the interest continually increased until on the final night the house was crowded. Fourteen souls were baptized and united with the Brethren church at this place. One other young man made a confession and baptism is pending.
We feel that the work has an excellent future here for the Brethren church.

The church has taken a forward step in that it has asked the present pastor and his wife to stay on the field full time. Although preaching will be continued every two weeks only, yet full time pastoral work will now be possible.

Our auxiliary organizations are functioning well. With a Senior C. E. Society, a W. M. S., a prayer meeting of from 25 to 30, a male chorus, and a male quartette,

we are real busy from one week to another.
Recently the young people of our church have had several joint socials, or parties, with the young people of the Church of the Brethren, which is located just across the fence from us. A very friendly feeling has grown up between the groups. Now a hallowe'en social is being planned by the two groups. In this way we feel that the work of the Master will be made easier by cooperation between God's people.

We wish to announce our fall communion service which will be conducted here on the evening of October 4th. We invite the Brethren of our adjoining churches to unite with us in this service. We furthermore solicit the prayers of the brotherhood in our behalf, that the work of Jesus Christ, our Savior, may progress steadily and that the Holy Spirit may guide both the pastor and congregation continually.

R. E. GINGRICH, Pastor.

THAT REMINDS ME

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter

A young preacher and pastor served a congregation seven years in Knoxville, Tennessee. His was a thriving, hustling, bustling, young and healthy little congregation.
A new brick church had been built. He was a smiling, confident, tactful, loving, trusting and accomplishing servant of the Lord. Not such a wonderful preacher but always on call for service day or night. He had a fine Bible, bound in Morocco, with gold edges, and he preached the Word, but he had another book. 'Twas himself, that sort of Gospel that comes in shoe leather. His footprints are all around the town, where he carried assistance, spiritual and temporal, to all sorts and conditions of men.

The preacher took unto himself a good Christian helpmate, so very essential to the highest success of any minister of the Gospel, and two children gladdened their home.
Joy and happiness reigned, but clouds appeared. His faithful wife went home to glory and two motherless youngsters, one a mere infant, were left with the bereaved father. In a few weeks the preacher's father died.

Yet this man of God never resisted or flinched the least in the midst of discouragements which would have overwhelmed most of us. The day of adversity for him was always transmuted into opportunity for God and needful men.

He was led to accept a pastorate in Texas, nearer the home folks, and while he was preaching his farewell sermon in Knoxville to a large and deeply sympathetic congregation a message came saying that the very church house in Texas to which he had been called was being burned to the ground.

He did not turn back but on arrival sent back this message: "Yes, found plenty pile of ashes at Kilgore, but these folks with me are optimistic and we are already on the way to bring order out of chaos and beauty for ashes right soon." "Just like him," says the editor of a Knoxville daily,
"for he never was afraid of bad news. O, it hurts him but never stops him. Watch him work and bring a temple into being on top of that pile of ashes, just like he took hole-in-the-ground characters here in town and made temples of the Living God to stand as testimonies to the power of salvation."

That reminds me

"Sweet are the uses of adversity,

Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head."

And the Psalmist testifies: "Thou hast known my soul in adversities."

And the Apostle Paul says: "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

The Knoxville writer closes his eulogy by saying: "Kilgore is just one more opportunity for God and his trusting, faithful servant."

Every minister of the Gospel has abundant opportunity for like faith and like loyal sacrificing service. God is calling for more preachers and pastors with the Pauline spirit of "faith, hope and love."

Ashland, Ohio.

THE EDITOR'S EASY JOB

To the uninitiated the editor's task is a very easy one. In fact, some seem to think that the editor is a superfluous piece of furniture in the creation of a paper. There is no measuring rod to be applied to his work because the major part of it never appears before the public eye. Therefore much misapprehension exists concerning the kind of work an editor does, just as a misconception prevails among many as to the flexibility of the chase in which the type is locked. Many think of it as being composed of rubber with a limitless stretching capacity, so that every request, "Print this in your next issue, please," should be promptly obeyed by the editor and the article appear forthwith. But neither the editor nor the chase should be thought of as being quite so flexible as that. The chase is a steel rectangular frame and will admit of only an infinitesimal stretching. The editor is not quite so bad as that, since he is compelled to consider many phases in his decisions, chief among them being the subscription list, so that his stretching capacity is finitesimal.

Our brother editor of the Presbyterian Advance has evidently had occasion to be slightly inflexible (or flexible, as the case may be), and has set forth very impressively the results that would follow a critic's suggestion that the paper could get along without an editor. Under the caption, An Editorless Paper, Dr. Clarke, an experienced editor of many years practice, writes as follows:

"A friend of the Presbyterian Advance (that is, a critic, but all critics are counted as friends unless they prove themselves otherwise) practically suggests that the ideal kind of a paper would be an editorless journal—one without editorial opinions, which would mean, of course, without editorial supervision, for the aim and attitude of an editor is determined, as a rule, more by what he admits or rejects from others than from expressions of his own.

"Of course, one without experience in the whole long and rather trying process which issues in what finally appears in any journal is apt to think that everything of which he does not approve is due to editorial perversity, overlooking the fact that, while the editor must bear the responsibility of choosing—in which choosing he is sure to make mistakes—he is in virtually the same position as that of a moderator or presiding officer of a large assemblage. Limited by rules of procedure and by time (space, rather than time in the editor's case) such a presiding officer must do one of two things—either stand firmly by the established rules imposed upon him by the whole assembly, or else permit order to become chaos. Imagine our General Assembly with no moderator in a time of heated debate, with every commissioner at full liberty to say what he pleased, when he pleased, and at any length! That situation would resemble an editorless paper.

"Just for the fun of it, if only somebody would foot the bills, the editor of this paper would like to see it appear one week as an editorless sheet, into the pages of which would go every article and item sent for publication within seven days in just the words in which they reached the office and in the order of their arrival. Such a publication might make such a "hit" that the venture would be the best kind of advertising—the paper becoming famous overnight. Indeed, we have half a notion to try—if only some millionaire will guarantee against bankruptcy. Why be so wary of the cost? The answer is easy. It is because there arrives every week from ten to twenty times the amount of original matter (articles and news) which can be crowded into thirty-two pages, without counting a much larger amount of propagandist publicity matter sent in by all sorts of agencies. Excepting the summer season, it would not be far wrong to say that to allow the whole of one week's "grist" to go to the printer and into the paper would call for an issue of about 1,000 pages.

"And what would the paper be like—if

PATIENCE

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

*"Ye have need of patience."
Yes, Lord, this I know.
Daily do I feel the need
In this world of woe.
Oft injustice flays me;
Oft vile slanders mar;
Often persecution Leaves its cruel scar.*

*Aye, but "tribulation Worketh patience" too,
And patience is more precious
Than aught that's lost to you.
The joy it gives is sweeter;
Its peace is more profound.
Your other jewels are safer
When patience doth abound.*

*Be patient that your "patience
May have her perfect work,"
All selfishness may perish
That in your heart may lurk.
"Possess your souls in patience,"
It is the only way,
For he who loses patience
Has lost tranquility.*

*Praise God, "The Lord is patient."
He knows that we are weak,
And grants to all his patience,
If we will only seek.
Through all the troubled waters
Our patient Lord goes too,
And says when we are fearful,
"My peace I give to you."*

*"Be ye also patient."
"Be patient with all men."
"Companion in the patience"
Of him who comes again.
The "God of patience" grant you
One spirit in one Lord.
He says, "I know thy patience.
I will be thy reward."*

Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

the reader had the patience to read, estimate would be that about 80 would be filled with printed matter meet the approval of the average terian, while there would be 200 material most objectionable to the critic who does not want to see a which everybody could not agree—thing could be. The friendly critic gested these paragraphs complain editorial paragraphs taking up about a quarter of a page; but if had been editorless that week it would have contained ten or fifteen pages on subject. The chances are that just issue would convince the most critic even a very poor editor is much better none at all. The greater part of the time is consumed not with the things he puts in, but with the things he puts out."

Perhaps a part of Dr. Clarke's tence is the real measuring rod of the editor: "Not the things he puts in, but the things he leaves out." Though the editor does not see the process, this recorder is sure to see the result. —Methodist Recorder.

BARGAINS IN MINISTERS

The minister has never been so cheap as he is now. Oftentimes he has been sadly underpaid, but he has been compelled to make sacrifices for his other profession is called upon to do. Added to a poor salary, he is expected to take the lead in most charitable work in the community in which he lives. He is right so, but his remuneration is so small that he could do this gracefully without having to deny himself and his family the needed things of life. There may be some men of the clergy who are drawing salaries and living more than comfortably, but they are not plentiful in the land. The average minister gets less than the average man among his parishioners. Only when we consider the time spent in preparation for his life-work, and yet he is the first to suffer a cut when it comes. There is always some who are in the church treasury who guard their money as their life, and who find no delight in barking at the share that the minister receives. And sometimes the minister, little realizing the conditions, which a general officer of the church is compelled to work, barks at what he considers the too liberal allowance for a general officer regardless of the fact that he is paying his own house rent and has the expenses of his family supplementing his salary.

The editor of the Christian Advocate (Western Edition, Cincinnati) has written a new kind of minister who seems to be the product of this so-called era of cheapness. He says,—

"Yes, the cut-rate minister has come. Along with cut-rate drugs and cut-rate grocery stores and cut-rate novelty stores, there appears the cut-rate church. This kind of church goes out to hunt a minister on a reduced salary. The laymen may say the same practically assert, 'You are our pulpit on a cut-rate price.' It is in the form of a one-cent sale. Any one can buy in and purchase. What loss to the church! What a shame upon the church! The laymen mean by throwing their money into the class of the cut rate? Do you put God into account when they do? They no fear they will betray their interests?"

at-rate ministry means a broken-spirited ministry. Those who propose this will receive their judgment. Our Conference last year registered over $75,000 cut in pastor's salary. Another one this spring registered a cut in salary. The laymen were going round seeking ministers who would accept their church on a cut-rate basis. A blindness has fallen upon us! Laymen are lowering the standards of their ministry. They are fouling their own ministry by are wounding their own brethren by are ripping the garments of the church of God. They are marring the cloak of Christ, who stands before them pleading for the laymen of his church shall preserve his ministry from the evil effects of financial changes and financial depressions.

Can men threatened by financial changes refuse to stand by the church of God when they expect him to maintain his spirit during a period of depression? Can they bring them through triumphantly? Can a man turn his back upon Jesus in an hour of trial, how can he expect his prayers to be answered for relief and escape?"—Methodist Protestant-Review.

NG FOLKS TO ATTEND CHURCH

Roger W. Babson is a devoted minister as well as an eminent statistical and financial advisor. As the Chairman of the Commission on Church Attendance appointed in his communion, he reports in The Congregationalist that many ministers have come to him as to what is to increase Church attendance. Dismissing any purpose to speak officially for the Commission, Mr. Babson gives his perceptions in these words:

A minister who sees his congregation may be quite sure it is due to one of these three reasons: (a) To services which are uninteresting, unintelligent and unhelpful to the average man and woman; (b) To the fact that the people attending his Church are no more honest, nor better employers or employees, than those who do not attend. (c) To the lack of spiritual influence in the home and the bad example as to 'Church' set by a few key people in the community. This means that to increase Church attendance, a minister should systematically try to correct the above three defects. The first—that of using illustrations and language which the average man can understand and receive practical benefit from—is up to the minister; the second—that of living the Christian life—is up to the laymen; while the third—that of training teachers, etc., in Church work—rests with the matter of organization and fervent Babson believes that, by a carefully planned campaign along the three above mentioned lines, over a period of five years, Church attendance, Church additions by confession, and Church benevolences could "easily be increased." At any rate, such a campaign is well worth trying. The reasons for non-attendance given in Mr. Babson's list are all general in that the list is obviously incomplete. Ministers and people alike can learn much by the persistent effort to overcome the obstacles named by this thoughtful layman. It is well to emphasize the fact that getting people to Church is not the task of the minister alone, but of pulpit and pew workers together.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Do not refuse responsibility and then look for reward.

DECIDING

H. A. Gossard

(Picture of a boy or girl having a desire for righteousness, and, with some knowledge of how it should behave, looking for demonstrations. Many go to the rocks for lack of right example.—H. A. G.)

*I watched the crowd—
Its ways, its whims, its lure;
I heard it cry aloud:
"Join us and be secure!
We constitute the world;
Our banner stands unfurled."*

*"And what's your creed?"
Said I,—“and your intent?
Contend you for a need
With arms of battlement?
Drift you before a storm?
Are you cold,—hot,—lukewarm?"*

*"Your plan,—I'd know,— Your mission,—and for whom?
Your mission's vision, show,—
Reflects it light, or gloom?
Your work,—is it below
The line of right? I'd know.*

*I stand aloof;—
Your trend,—who understands?—
If emptiness is proof, Withheld, uncalled hands,
You're beating naught but air;
Your shining lacks the glare.*

*I stayed,—to wait
For some accomplishment,
Or evidence, till late.
Then turned me 'bout, and went To see from whence they came:— Confusion!—all aflame.*

*I stepped aside,
As they returned to me
In dust and smoke,—astride
A hearse, wherein I see Their leader. Was aimless.
Now,—why they failed,—you guess.*

*The question is:
If I should stand between The Right and Wrong in his Presence, and there be seen
To choose the way of wrong,—
Should he bless?—or the throng?*

Importance of Europe

(1- You will be noticing that Luke now begins to tell his story at much greater length. Incident after incident is described with care and detail. Why? The answer is Europe. As already suggested, Europe was to be for centuries the arena of a developing, extending Christianity. Beyond her was an as yet unknown continent of even greater promise. Therefore these beginnings are of vast importance. Luke, guided by the Holy Spirit, makes them very clear. (2) Paradoxically, perhaps, the whole process began to be accelerated from the time

Paul reached Philippi. Why? (a) Christianity was accumulating momentum by this time. But this does not explain all. (b) It had entered a new and vital atmosphere: that of the future. Of progress. "Activity" again.—Adult Leader.

Importance of Philippi

A city that stands out with unique clearness in Luke's narrative. (1) It was a city of beginnings. Origins are always significant. Here was the first city to be evangelized on European soil. Here was the first convert. Here the first European church had its inception. Here the first baptisms were recorded. The first great conflict with, and triumph over, heathenism and superstition, is here described. (2) It was a Roman colony. "As such it was a model of the mother government. Victory here is a pledge of final triumph" (Stiffler). (3) It was Paul's greatest love. Read his letter to the Philippians. The epistle of intimacy. Of love, satisfaction, personal confidence. (4) Great principles were set forth and defended in this new environment so typically Gentile: (a) baptism, (b) hospitality, (c) relation to government, (d) rights and dignity of citizenship, (e) hatred of heathenism, and (f) love of the heathen. It is like Luke to emphasize the story of the fortunetelling slave-girl. And the conversion of the rough jailer, so unlike the generous Cornelius and worthy Lydia! He still pictures a gospel for all, particularly for the downcast and the outcast.—Ibid.

VISITING BUTTONVILLE

By June Douglass, in Christian Standard

"Button! Button! Button! Where did you come from?" chanted Peggy Jane, as she neatly sewed the buttons upon her dainty garments.

"From many lands and under seas; we are even made from wood of trees!" sang mother, a merry twinkle in her soft, brown eyes.

"Oh, mother, they don't really!" gasped Peggy Jane.

"But they do, and are," chuckled mother. "How would you like to visit Buttonville for a short time and see for yourself just how they originated?"

"Oh, I should love it," cried Peggy Jane.

Mother drew her chair closer to Peggy Jane, and, opening wide her huge button-box, said gaily:

"Toot! Toot! Here we are in Buttonville," and she held up a generous handful, letting them sift gently through her fingers.

"Buttons began to be made only about five hundred years ago, and even then they were mostly used for trimmings.

"Now, here is a button that is very commonly used," and mother held up a pearl button—really mother-of-pearl. "This was once a part of an oyster shell, and is made of the same material as real pearls are made of. Once upon a time it lay on the bed of the ocean; fish swam back and forth over it, and dainty seaweed floated above.

"One day a brown-skinned pearl-diver dived through the water, dug up the oyster still in its great shell, and placed it in his basket along with many of its relations; then up he came, and the oyster was shipped off to a button factory where, after much work, it became a button.

"This shiny fellow has traveled many miles; it was on Uncle Jim's navy coat. It is called a brass button, and brass is made of copper and zinc, and copper and zinc are—"

"Dug out of the ground!" cried Peggy Jane.

Mother nodded.

"Here is a button made of ivory. It came from the tusk of a great elephant. This kind is very expensive, and very few are used, but this, although of ivory, too, and red, comes from the vegetable kingdom in South America. In the great forest there it grew on a tree in a hurr as big as your head; in this hurr, were twelve more shiny nuts, each nut half the size of my fist. These burrs were picked and shipped to some button factory, where they were ripped from the shells, the hard kernels inside split into halves and shaped into buttons.

"Next they were dyed into many bright colors and polished, and this is a sample.

"Now, this button was once the hoof of an animal, probably a steer. The hoofs are boiled soft and cut in strips; next they are cut, shaped, dyed, and, lastly, smoked and polished.

"Some buttons are made from the horns of animals, some of leather, some of bone, of tin, of paper and glass, to say nothing of the cloth-covered ones, the china ones and those fashioned of porcelain.

"But the strangest to me are these; they are made from our own Irish potato. It is treated with some kind of acid, which makes it as hard as brick."

Peggy Jane stared in amazement. "Potatoes!" she gasped at last.

"Potatoes," laughed mother. "But here comes daddy for lunch; we will have to visit Buttonville some other time."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

SAUNDERS-MACLENNAN—On Friday night, September 18th at eight o'clock, Mr. Richard Theodore Saunders and Miss Zella Estelle MacLennan were united by the writer in holy matrimony. Both the bride and groom are active members of the Washington Brethren church and possess a host of friends. The church was filled with friends for the wedding and beautifully decorated. The happy couple will make their home in Washington where Mr. Saunders is employed by the Jewell Tea Company. Their friends all wish them a happy journey through life together and may the home that they shall establish be a blessing to the many who shall come in contact with it.

HOMER A. KENT.

LORAH-HADDEN—On Wednesday morning, September 16, at the home of the undersigned, Lost Creek, Kentucky, there were united in the sacred bonds of matrimony, Rev. Paul Lorah of Middlebranch, Ohio, and Miss Thetis Hadden of Haddix, Kentucky, in the presence of a few close friends. This wedding makes a most estimable couple for life's work. The bride completed the work at Riverside Institute, then that of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, California, and this next spring, with the groom, will graduate from Ashland College in the Arts College. The writer has not known the groom so intimately, but is well enough acquainted with him to know that he is a splendid Christian man, and together this new home starts out with happy prospects. And as their wedding occurred in the early morning hour as the sun was beginning to shoot his rays over the land, so may their wedded life grow brighter day by day, year by year, until it shall set in the home of a well rounded-out life in the realm of the blessed.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

KING-NIELSEN—At the Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian church in Washington, D. C. on the evening of September 2, took place the wedding of Mr. Bertram King of Philadelphia, and Miss Edith Nielsen of Washington. The groom is a member of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, and has graduated from Ashland College and Louisville Baptist Theological Seminary. The bride is a member of the Washington Brethren church, where she has served as a capable teacher in the Bible school worker in the Christian Endeavor Society. The wedding was beautiful in all respects. The happy couple will year in Louisville, Ky., where the groom will study for his Master of Theology degree in the Seminary. A host of friends wish them a happy through life together. Ceremony by the undersigned.

HOMER A.

GARDNER-TAYLOR—At the First Brethren church in Washington, D. C., on the evening of September 4 the beautiful wedding of Mr. Frank Gardner of V and Miss Beatrice Taylor also of Washington. Both young people are consecrated Christians. The groom is a member of the Metropolitan Baptist church of while the bride is a member of the First Brethren church. The happy couple will make their home in Washington. The groom is employed in a furniture establishment and are admired by a host of friends who wish them the best in their life together. Ceremony by the undersigned.

IN THE SHADOW

CLINE—Hobart A. Cline, son of Clifford H. Cline, was born February 24th, 1916, and departed this life in the vicinity of Ankenytown, Ohio, August 7th, 1931, 15 years, 5 months and 13 days.

He leaves a loving and devoted father and mother, Herman and Howard, both at home; a sister, Mrs. Samuel Cline, and a host of other relatives and friends. His kind and genial disposition won for him the love and admiration of all who learned to know him. He accepted the call of his Master during the Holy Team Services of 1928, and was received into fellowship with the Ankenytown Brethren church by Christian baptism administered by Rev. D. B. Flora, on January 6th, 1930. He was faithful and devoted to the church and Sunday school, and will be greatly missed by all.

Funeral services at the home, August 9th, 1931, at 2:00 p.m., by Rev. Zigler of the Church of the Brethren.

C. A.

HALL—Lorinda Hall, daughter of Geo. and Mary Hall, was born near Monga, Indiana, November 1st, 1915, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Geo. On Sturgis, Michigan, May 23rd, 1931.

She was married to Joseph Horner of Brighton on July 4th, 1930. Together they bought and lived on a home farm until his death, 5 years ago. They were born to this union—Adella, Florence (deceased), Cecil O. Horner. Three grandchildren survive—Ma James Gibbons and Rachael Wolfe, also one sister—Grubash and three brothers—McKinnon, Henry and William.

"That life is long, which answers life's greatest need, is true in this instance. She gave her strength, so long as health permitted, to doing good, and suffering in her neighborhood. She was a helpful hand in the families of her brothers and sisters, and whenever there was a need of her care it was given. In her early life she became a member of the Brethren church at Brighton, Indiana, and engaged in doing her part as long as the encroaching years permitted. Her life was beautiful, her character true and noble, her disposition sweet and gentle, and her trust in her Heavenly Father strong and enduring. Peace of Eternity is hers. Funeral in charge of G. W. W."

FINDLEY—Joseph D. Findley, son of Abel and Mary Findley, was born in Johnstown, Pa., July 30, 1880, and died at his home near Hampton, Va., on September 1, 1931, at the age of 50 years, 1 month and 17 days.

In 1899 he married Miss Elizabeth Stutzman, with whom he lived until his death. Three years later he married Mrs. Annie E. Myers. For nearly 25 years he was in the retail mercantile business in Johnstown, Ohio, during which time he was an active member of the Brethren church and served as a member of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College for 15 years he has resided in Virginia.

Besides the widow, Mr. Findley is survived by six children: Winifred V. Findley of Roanoke, Va.; Johnson, Ruth M. and Donald Findley of Hampton, Va.; Carl Hoover of Thurston, Ohio. He is also survived by grandchildren and two sisters, Mrs. Catherine Mrs. Sue Hunt, both of Johnstown, Pa., and several relatives and scores of friends.

Last January Mr. Findley suffered a serious attack of pneumonia. This greatly aggravated a case of asthma, which had been bothering him for the past several years. About the first of September he had a severe attack from which he never recovered. Just a moment before he apparently realized the end was near, for he had been on an excursion. So he slipped and fell, and he had always lived it—peacefully. Funeral services were conducted from the residence of the Rev. J. W. Greenlaw of the Methodist church of Hampton. Burial was in Greenlaw Cemetery at Newport News, Va.

POWELL—Genevra Arnott Powell, daughter of Ella Arnott, was born near Greenville, Monroe Co. Virginia, October 14, 1870. She was united in marriage to Henry Powell, August 11, 1900, and passed away at Vincent's Hospital, Indianapolis, Indiana, September 28, 1931, aged 60 years, 11 months and 28 days. Besides her mother and stepfather she is survived by her four children. She had been a member of the First Brethren church for something like 20 years, but had been afflicted for over thirteen years and was present at many years from attending its services. Services were held at her home before a large concourse of friends gathered out of respect to one whom they knew and loved. Burial was in beautiful Maple Lawn Cemetery. Charge of the writer, her pastor.

A COMMUNION THOUGHT--Frances R. Havergal

"O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things thou dost impart:
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

"O use me, Lord, use even me
Just as thou wilt, and when, and where;

Fasting and Clear Thinking

Editorial in "The Evangelical Messenger"

Why did Jesus command men to fast? It is conceivable that the reason is not clear in many minds, except as they may see in it the purpose of discipline. Beyond that they may not be able to recognize any reason for denying the craving of the body for food. But it has a value far beyond that, and may become the minister of great blessings to him who gives himself to its observance. Have you ever thought of it as a clarifier of thought and a quickener of the mental process? This view has been forcefully brought to our own attention in a newspaper article by Dr. Frank McCoy, who writes syndicated material, appearing daily in a chain of newspapers, upon the subject of health and foods, in which he is an outstanding specialist, helping many back to health by instructing them in proper food combinations. He is a great advocate of fasting, particularly what he designates fruit juice fasting, in which no food is eaten for specified periods, but during which the juice of citrous, or certain other fruits, is taken at regular intervals. We note this here simply to give a setting for what this distinguished authority said in a recent article upon the general subject of fasting. What he has written is so illuminating of at least one of the benefits of fasting, commanded by the Word and our Lord himself, we are placing it at the disposal of our readers.

He first calls attention to the place fasting has had in the history of the world, and particularly among religious leaders by saying:

It is unknown at just what period in man's progress there originated the idea of fasting for spiritual and mental clarity. It is, however, known through records that fasting was quite common among philosophers and religious teachers 6,150 years ago, about the time the pyramids of Egypt were built. I believe that it will be conceded by all students of history that practically all of the sages and philosophers up to modern times have undergone periods of fasting just prior to their greatest life work. Possibly some of these men understood the physiological benefits which resulted from an abstinence of food for a time, but I am convinced that their principal object was either to learn to control the physical appetites or because of their belief that a great mental or spiritual change would take place because of this practice.

From Biblical history we learn that Moses fasted for forty days before he was inspired to write the Ten Commandments. Christ's forty-day fast was taken at about thirty years of age, apparently to prepare him for his great ministry when he was returning to his own people to teach the precepts which have gone ringing down the pages of history and have had such an important influence in the lives of mankind. Almost all of the early Christian prophets, such as Daniel, Elijah and St. Paul, practiced fasting.

In other religions we find Buddha, Mohammed, Zoroaster and other great teachers, who exercised vast influence upon their followers, had received their visions or inspirations after a period of fasting.

While the doctor prescribes primarily for the relief of physical distress he has had delightful experiences along other lines. Says he:

My principal reason for advocating fasts of various kinds among my patients is to produce a physical benefit, but I have been constantly surprised by the great mental changes which have taken place with those who often did not have the slightest interest in spiritual or mental phenomena. Often the members of a family have commented to me on the changes in the mental state of a patient who had just finished a fast, during which a disposition which was grouchy, irritable and unlovely became changed into a kind and generous personality. I have frequently observed spoiled and pouting children undergo a change in personality within a few days, becoming more wholesome and playful with an entirely new viewpoint on life.

There is no doubt that in these cases the fasting has produced some physical benefit which indirectly relieves mental strain, but I feel sure that there is also some definite mental change which takes place at the same time. Perhaps the body by getting rid of its physical impurities is able to devote a greater amount of energy to the mental processes. Whether the one who is fasting appreciates such a mental change or not, there seems to be some improvement, but this is undoubtedly greater when one anticipates an improvement in the mental as well as the physical condition.

Then the doctor turns into a preacher and comes with the suggestion that we give fasting a chance upon ourselves. We think his advice is good. So we include it with the rest:

The next time you are fretful, pessimistic or feel that the world is an unpleasant place to live in, try a few days' fast from regular food, drinking only a large quantity of water and cleansing the body both inside and out with plenty of internal and external bathing. Fix your mind on thoughts of health and encourage pleasing visions of a vigorous, clean, efficient mind and body. You may be astonished at the change which takes place in your temperament.

We have only one suggestion to add, and that comes not from our own mind, but from the mind of the Master. Join prayer to fasting. With the clarified mind and the stimulated mental faculties, prayer will become more intelligent, the lift of the soul will be much greater, the sense of God will become vastly keener. There are some attainments not possible except through "fasting and prayer."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

Our fellow editor is on biblical grounds when he suggests the joining of prayer with fasting, and we wish to voice our approval of the suggestion. Prayer and fasting must be kept together if spiritual good is to result. Doubtless much physical and mental benefit could be realized from mere fasting, according to the doctor's recommendation, but if it is to be engaged in as a spiritual act, it must be accompanied by prayer. That is according to the instructions of our Lord. And why should we not more frequently claim the blessing that comes from prayer and fasting?

Good bargains won by craftiness are likely to be bad bargains for those who obtain them.

WILL LAYMEN STAND THE

Every preacher who accomplishes his work must bear burdens, endure toil faithfully and meet sharp criticisms from those who would hinder the work he is doing. It soon becomes clear in such a preacher's mind that he must stand the gaff, if he would succeed. He realizes that promoting religion is a warfare in which the immortal and unmoral will strike every way they can. A good man who is what the New Testament calls "fearful," choose the line of least resistance and forfeit victories which might come to them.

Laymen are more timid than preachers. They feel that they have to fight to succeed with their business professions, without taking on a religious opposition which might hurt them in a business way. It takes courage in a layman engaged in business to brook unreasoning public opinion and to stand forward in the service of his Master. He knows that such aggressive service will be costly to him. For this reason the Lord's work often tries to bulldoze and frighten laymen from the performance of their duty. They do not succeed with some laymen, as they do with some preachers; but, thank God, there are other preachers and laymen with brave hearts who love Jesus Christ more than they love their own success, and they do their duty in the face of persecution or criticism. Such are the salt of the earth. They are the truest Christians what the strong timbers of the ship. In the day when Christ calls for his regards to his people, they will quietly but bravely go on doing their duty as laymen will receive a large reward. First Church (Chattanooga) Bulletin, J. H. Hughes, Pastor.

Merely to make a living is a low ambition. We are here for something higher than that. We are here for a life that is immortal, to gain treasure that will carry with us into the world eternal.

Conviction Regarding the Communion Service

Three-fold communion service is one of the pillars sustaining of the Brethren church to separate existence as a denomination. It is important, therefore, that conviction regarding it be kept clear and strong. To allow our minds to become foggy and uncertain at this point is to jeopardize the future of our church and the perpetuation of the gospel message in the world in which it was received and practiced by the Apostolic Church. And just there—the perpetuation of the whole gospel—is the reason and ground for our existence as a separate people. This we should not be timid in declaring, and we be fearful or apologetic about pointing out and proclaiming the generally neglected items of gospel truths and practices. When this note begins to drop out of our preaching, or when we lose our boldness and positiveness in presenting it, the power of conviction begins to weaken in the hearts of our people. There creeps in a spirit of neglect of the communion service, and wonder as to whether it is really worth while.

It is important first of all that we grow weary of proclaiming or of hearing the Gospel for the three-fold communion service. We must iterate the scriptural bases for feet washing and the love feast as well as for the eucharist, and never slacken in our zeal to proclaim the blessed truths thus set forth in beautiful simplicity. We may have presented the gospel teachings on these things a hundred times to a single church, but we must continue to preach over and over with all the conviction and freshness that our richly enriching experience can make possible. There is no reason to give way to a fear that because the truth has been so often, all are perfectly familiar with it and many are becoming disinterested in, and even impatient at, hearing it over and over again. Such fear usually has very much less foundation than we suppose. Seldom indeed is it that there are no present desiring further light on some phase of these practices, or needing their faith strengthened in some particular, and even among those who are well informed and fully convinced we dare say it is uncommon to meet with disinterest or indifference toward frequent distinctly Brethren doctrinal sermons. Many have been spent much thought and prayer. It is the frequent repetition of such gospel truths that keeps interest alive and conviction strong.

In the second place, we must guard against the formal, thoughtless observance of these ordinances. To that end we must be continually reminded of their richness of meaning, their many implications of their great worth as means of growth in grace. The ordinances of communion service are not mere forms; they are divinely appointed vehicles for the conveyance of great religious truths, and as communicants must be urged to have eyes to see and to receive the truths they bear. Nothing is more important for the maintenance of strong conviction in the ordinances than to keep them meaningful. If they are full of meaning for us, if they are vital to our spiritual welfare, if they are freighted with the truths of eternal significance to us, we will cling to their observance with the face of all influences to the contrary and they will be of inestimable worth to our lives. But if they are empty, if they are empty and meaningless, if we can wash our feet and eat the love feast together without dropping our prejudices and class prejudices and without separating ourselves from our sins, then do they count for nothing and we practice our own hurt, and we can have little or no conviction. Strongly must it be urged, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat," and further, that unless Christ truly lives in the individual engages in the washing of feet, he has no part with Christ and he can but eat and drink to himself."

In the third place, let us not fear to be building upon a superficial foundation if we go forth with a message that has the three-fold communion service as one of its outstanding and distinguishing elements. That was one of the last lessons that the Great Teacher and Savior taught his disciples, and it was set forth under most significant circumstances. No words of the Master, none in the entire Bible, were spoken under more deeply moving and more significant circumstances than were those with which he ordained feet washing, the love feast and the eucharist. That which follows such arresting statements as, "When Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world," and "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God,"—that which follows such statements cannot be a superficial foundation on which to build a church. Let us not fear to preach it and to make it one of the outstanding points in our message. In that hour Jesus was planning for the church's future through all the centuries to come, and what he ordained there was vital. We can afford not only to accept it with unwavering faith and implicit obedience, but to proclaim it with strong conviction as bearing the foundation truths of the gospel. In it are involved the deity of Christ, his Saviorhood and Lordship, and all the other cardinal doctrines of Christianity. Such an ordinance is not to be lightly considered, but may well be set forth with courage and confidence.

Is the Church Ignorant of God?

A distinguished English divine declares it is. And he refers not to head knowledge, but to heart knowledge. It was Dr. J. Stuart Holden, of St. Paul's church, London, guest preacher at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, who took the church to task for its ignorance of God, according to the statement of our contemporary, The Evangelical-Messenger.

"There is a vast difference between knowing the precepts of God, his work, and knowing him," Dr. Holden said. "The objective of his influence, of his precepts, of his teachings, were all meant to be directed towards arousing the consciousness of man."

"Those who merely know about God, who are willing and content with other things more profitable than a spiritual communion with him, who are more satisfied with the noble art of making money—their lives are chaotic, they find that their ends have failed, and their lives lacking in essential harmony. They shrug their shoulders at God, not knowing the difference between glitter and gold, bread and stone."

"In the last analysis, belief matters most in life. Those who play the old game of making one's creed match one's conduct, and one's conduct match one's creed will lose. Adaptation has dulled man's sensibility and vision. Men and preachers tolerate the world's evil until they become polluted with it."

The scientific experiment that proved that light loses its powers in low temperature, Dr. Holden declared, is applicable to the dimming of the light of God, in the absence of love for him. It is impossible for man to know God, he held, without loving him.

"The people here and in London don't believe in God in any way that counts. They are too like the world to impress it. They yield to its charms and its spell, selling their souls, learning the ways of the world, but not its waywardness—that is paganism. The world knows not God, because it knows us too well."

How much of truth is there in his accusation? Is the church really ignorant of God in a practical way? Does the world fail to see any convincing testimony in the church's life? Are not men impressed by the lives of church members and made to say, as were the Jews of old, "they took knowledge that they had been with Jesus"? Or has not the Gospel made any real difference in the lives of those who have accepted its precepts? The editor of the Methodist Protestant-Recorder seems to question it. He asks:

Is the life of the Christian much different from the life of the man of the world? Does he carry over into his life his so-called beliefs in things spiritual? Do conferences, classes, synods, assemblies, conventions, and other gatherings of the church conduct themselves on a higher plane than political assemblies of various kinds, except in the subject matter they deal with? The quarrels between brethren and between church organizations and between units of a denomination are not very inspiring examples to the world of what the power of Christ can accomplish for a man when it lays hold of him. What is our real knowledge of God and how far does the love of Christ constrain us in our dealings with each other as Christians?

It does not seem fitting for us to hurl any accusations at one another, but we do think it is well for us to consider within our own hearts how much real knowledge we have of God. And in judging our own hearts, it will help us to keep in mind the words of the aged apostle John who said: "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4:8).

All In the Same Boat

It is said that "misery loves company." Well, we have plenty of it in the misery we are experiencing over the decreasing circulation of the Evangelist. They are all telling their story. All church papers are going through a depression much deeper than that experienced by any other interest or institution in the land. It is due to the two-fold fact that people generally are hard pressed for money and that the church paper is about the first thing that most families think they can get along without in such a situation. All church papers are in the same boat; all are feeling the pinch terribly.

Magazines in general are being hard hit these days. Periodicals and journals of all kinds are suffering a decreasing circulation. Subscribers are falling off all along the line and the sale of magazines at the news stands is decreasing. As another has said, "The publishing world in general has felt the effects of the depression." Some of the most popular are whistling to keep up courage, but all are finding the going much more difficult now than formerly.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

If the Lord has blessed your church, write about it for the encouragement of the rest.

If your church has not already made plans to lift the emergency offering for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund on October 11, you will doubtless want to do so at your first convenient date thereafter. And remember that Rev. G. L. Maus, Roann, Indiana, is the secretary of the Benevolence Board and will receive your offering.

In a news note from Brother C. C. Grisso we learn that the work at Lanark, Illinois, is moving forward in splendid fashion in all its departments. He says, "We had 323 in Bible school today at our annual Rally Day with an offering of $250.00. Our school has gone well over the 200 mark since Conference. One came for membership today."

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, gives an additional Educational Day offering report of $66.10, the total to date being $664.82. It is evident that Brother Shively is disappointed at the smallness of the offering, as one would naturally expect him to be, but he does not allow that to shake his faith in the brotherhood's loyalty. He graciously takes into account the financial situation and thanks the churches for what they have done and would do if they could. We believe he is right, that the brotherhood will rally to the support of its educational interests as well as to other general interests of the church when they are really presented to them.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, editor of the Sunday School lesson publications, shares with us this week a splendid testimonial from the pen of the late Dr. S. Z. Sharp, whom many will remember from his appearance on the Golden Jubilee program of Ashland College in 1928. Our lamented brother was not only a minister and educator, but had had experience in editing Sunday school publications, and that makes his kind words all the more appreciated by our co-laborer, Dr. Bame. It is not an uncommon experience for us to hear kind words spoken of the lesson publications that Bame and his staff are preparing. We sincerely hope they to find their way into more and more Brethren schools and where we are sure they will be appreciated and will be found satisfactory than those put out by any other publishing house.

The people of the Winchester, Virginia church, have enjoyed a season of refreshing under the evangelistic leadership of Brother Leo Polman of South Gate, California. Brother Polman, the pastor, reports a very inspiring meeting, with encouragement and uplift having been received by the young people. Three adults and twenty boys and girls made the good confession, two were received by baptism and many expressed to reconsecrate their lives to Christ. Twenty had been at the time of the report. Brother Polman will be remembered as the song leader at our recent National Conference. Brother Polman says a Bible reading contest was launched during the campaign and resulted in some unusual records for Bible reading. The campaign received encouragement by delegations from some Brethren churches. Both pastor and evangelist were mentioned in this issue.

Beaver City, Nebraska, has recently experienced a real revival according to word from both evangelist and pastor. This has been very much discouraged and the future did not seem bright, but the Holy Spirit has been working among them and their spiritual state has been greatly improved. The revival was a calling of the church and community to prayer under the leadership of the pastor, Brother Raymond Blood. Revivals begin with prayer; perhaps we should say they always begin with prayer. Then came the evangelist, Brother R. Paul Miller, who preached the word and called for a revival of consecration and confession to Christ. Twelve made the good confession, six reconsecrated themselves to Christ and nine young people pledged themselves to Christian service. The pastor tells us that he feels encouraged over the outlook because of this revival.

We are pleased to have a letter this week from Miss Nielsen, one of our missionaries in Argentina. She reports that the recent Workers' Conference was one of much interest, two of the workers—Adolfo Zeche and Federico Sotola, were permitted to be present on account of illness. We are pleased to learn, however, that Sister Clarence Sickel is gaining strength even though slowly. Incidentally Sister Nielsen lets us know that time flies rapidly there as it does here and that there is much time to get everything done. We wonder, however, if we are always as profitably busy as our missionaries are; spending our time on things as much worth while as Sister Truly, as she suggests, in the midst of the many things for our attention, we do well to keep in mind the "one thing," to concentrate upon those things that count for the glory of God. Our time is too often spent aimlessly and our energies are scattered on many things that are good in themselves but not contribute to the one really important thing in life. If we strengthen our churches in the homeland would be and if we move more rapidly we might extend the gospel into foreign lands. The interest and efforts of all of us were but more completely centered in the cause of Christ.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother Hill Maconaghy, the new pastor of the church at Stone, Tennessee, writes: "The Brethren church requests that the members of the brotherhood for evangelistic services to be held by Brother William Steffler from October 11 to November 1 for the salvation of many souls and the building up of the church in this place."

Pray for the coming campaign for the increased circulation of the Brethren Evangelist. We propose to put before the brotherhood early date a challenging offer that we believe will mean the successful operation of the brotherhood. We are anxious for the large response which your church paper ought to be rendering. Will you make it a matter of prayer, of frequent prayer? But especially calling upon all churches to set apart a portion of the service of October 25th for very definite prayer to the Lord that God may bless the Evangelist to his larger service and may prosper the coming campaign for increased circulation.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Martin Shively, D.D.

XXXII. Elder Christian Forney

I recall the men and scenes of years ago, as they relate to Brethren Church and its activities, as before me a group of men, all now, who had placed their all upon the altar, who had given, and were still giving themselves without reserve for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and expression in the church. A few of them had already served years, almost entirely if not altogether, without financial compensation. Most of them were farmers, who were living for themselves and their families from the soil, but whose business was the preaching of the Word. They found time to read or to prepare sermons, I can only guess, but even with the little training they had—much of training which the schools did not—and the exceedingly small margin of time allowed to them for the preparation for their tasks, not a few of them were really great preachers. And theirs was a ministry devoted to the saving of many souls and the organization of groups of believers into congregations. Of course there were men of brains, not a few of them having spent years as teachers in the public schools, even in connection with their farming and preaching. In this group were such men as Wampler, Brown, Swihart, Jacobs, and most of those about whom I have already written sketches. And in this group too, was the subject of this sketch, Brother Forney. They could accumulate nothing in the way of this world's goods, but like the men of old, they looked for a city with foundations, the builder and maker is God.

Brother Forney was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, October 10, 1838, that section of country which produced an exceptionally large number of the Brethren Church in the period in which they lived and labored. He was of a long line of Tunker preachers, both his father and grandfather having been elders in the church. The father must have gone west when he was a young man. In 1858 he united with the church at Milledgeville, Illinois. Ten years later he took his wife and family to a new home, at Falls City, Nebraska, where he was called to the ministry and from that time until his death, in 1908, he gave himself without reserve to the preaching of the Word. He continued his farming however, in both Kansas and Nebraska, preaching each evening for weeks, giving his daylight hours to such tasks as his farm required. He did the preaching because he loved to do it, because the urge of it was upon him, but he farmed also, for himself and his family. In spite of the load which he thus carried,—a load which few men could think at all possible, he lived to be almost 83 years of age, dying beloved of all who knew him, leaving a name decidedly better for his having lived in it.

When the painful division came to the Tunker fraternal assembly, he cast his lot with the so-called "Progressive" group, and it was thus that I met him, early in my own ministry, at one of my earliest general conferences of the Brethren Church. And I continued to meet him at these gatherings, until his infirmities of age denied him strength to attend them. He was not a big man physically, but he had a face which could not escape attention. His smile was one which love prompted and this made his face like the face of an angel, radiating sunshine wherever he was. There was nothing sluggish about him, but on the contrary, his mind, his step, and his smile were alert, showing plainly that he was a man of action. This no doubt accounts for the fact that he did a prodigious amount of work in his lifetime, finding the strength to do it in the living faith which motivated him.

I have almost finished these sketches so far as they have to do with the so-called older men of the church, and when the last shall have been written, I shall hope and pray that it may not have been in vain. I rejoice in the fact that I knew them, and wish all of my readers might have had that privilege too. Younger folks are too often inclined to believe that their own generation is producing all the really worthwhile souls, whether they live in the ministry, or business, or as intellectual leaders. I am having the happy privilege of knowing something about the great folks of this day too, but as I contrast those who live and achieve today with those who lived and wrought yesterday, I am convinced that worthwhileness is not confined to the immediate present, and that the men of yesterday would compare very favorably with those of today. In one thing they seem to have outshone those who are succeeding them,—commercialism appealed in a far lesser degree to them and so far as the ministry was concerned, most of them seemed to feel as did St. Paul, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel," and at any cost, they gave themselves to it. They may have left little or nothing to their children, in the way of houses and lands, money or stocks, but one thing they did leave to them,—a good name, and the record of a service to man and God, of which their children will never need to be ashamed, and for which they shall never feel led to apologize. Measured by financial achievement, they have little if any claim to greatness, but if to live for others, to seek their present and eternal good, is the highest duty of man, then they have not lived in vain.

The Pastor's Relation to the General Interests of the Church

We proceed now to offer some constructive suggestions for a possible solution of our problem. We make the assumption that all our denominational interests are worthy—we earnestly believe this. Being worthy they merit, yes, even demand our support. We shall be seeking, then, the best ways of leading our congregations into more generous and willing support.

Our first consideration is concerning our present plan of special days, with special offerings. This has much of merit, I am not prepared to say, but, that this is the best way. It calls the mind of the laity to the consideration of the interest, it directs prayer for it, it has produced the funds by which the work has been done. If any other plan may ever be suggested and used, it must do these same things, and should do them much better. There are at least three things that are necessary for the making of any plan successful. They are information, opportunity, and opportune season. I have been pleased as a pastor at the supply of informative material put at my disposal, especially with respect to the mission and College interests. It is much easier for the pastor to make his appeal to his people if, either by letter or word of mouth, he can say, "Here is a leaflet, take it, read it for yourself, pray about it, and then give as the Lord directs you. These pieces of informative matter should be put up in the most attractive way. Some I have received during the last few years have not been sufficiently attractive. I am certain my people have not read them as willingly or been moved as favorably by them as they might have been, had better paper been used, more attractive designs employed, and a less cramped style been used. Part of them have made me feel about like I feel when I cram a sermon into a sermonette. Opportunity is also important to the success of any plan. The congregation must have opportunity to give. I do not believe the pastor should preach a special day sermon on the special interest every time it is presented. If sufficient informative material has been used he will not need to. Only a prayerful offering of an opportunity to the congregation will suffice in many cases. A pastor should surely not do what I heard a pastor do about a year ago (not a Brethren). He presented the special plea, and then reminded people that they should not give so much as to cripple such and such an offering that was coming in two weeks. Apparently he was not interested in the cause he was then presenting, and was interested in the cause he would present in two weeks. The opportune season is also important. Many offerings for special interests have been ruined because they have been sandwiched into inopportune seasons. Many a congregation has been disgusted with special days for the same reason. I believe every pastor should use his best judgment as to the opportune season for his own congregation, using the opportune time nearest to the suggested one.

There are some just objections to our present special day plan of carrying church interests. Whether a plan can be found that will have less objections or not remains to be seen. Congregations do tire of the oft repeated appeals of the interests of the denomination. Years seem so short, that the return appeal comes before they can realize it. There are so many of our special interests that granting each a day, leaves almost no season of the year when our own local church plans may be promoted without at least some inconvenience. We might as well face this fact. This condition is not best, either for the local congregation or for the general interest to be presented.

As a pastor I have believed for a number of years that some combining or merging of the many appeals would be beneficial. As yet I have not been brave enough to undertake it. I think in the not far distant time, I will. Any such plan would need to give fair and sufficient presentation and support to each interest. It would not dare to yield less results than the present plan.

I have thought that the National Conference might instruct all the interests of the church to form such a merger. It do not believe the boards back of all the interests should be merged, but their presentation to the local church might be in some combined way.

Similar interests might even have their boards with profit. Such a merger would need to form budget, so that each interest would receive not less at present, possibly some of the less fortunate one and then offer this budget to the denomination on a capita goal basis. If more than the goal, or less than the goal should be received, not one interest would profit; another lose; all would profit or lose proportionately their apportionment from the general fund. By carrying such a plan denominationally the best minds of the church would work out the details, if the local congregation should attempt it, it might be limited in its ability to accomplish.

But how would this per capita goal be applied to the local congregation, you say? It might be done in many ways, either combine with the general budget of the church, or be presented at a different time and come apart from the regular budget of the local church. Different churches different definite applications of the general plan would be necessary.

If it should not be desirable to merge all the interests of the denomination in their presentation to the local congregation, those of similar nature might be merged. This would not seem so gigantic, and might be more acceptable. All mission interests might be presented at one time in the budget within the interest being proportionately apportioned for home and foreign work. I have believed for a number of years that it is not right to make a division between home missions and foreign missions. All educational and publication interests might be combined in one presentation to the local congregation, having the proportionate arrangement within the interest. Benevolent interests might be combined, and all other interests might come under one head. With this plan we would have just four presentations of the interests of the church during the year. I believe sufficient opportunities could be easily found to care for them.

One challenge would face such a plan—probably many others—but this one that is worthy of consideration. How educate the people to the new plan, and how instruct them with respect to the general interests of the church. With respect to the first matter, I believe any two year plan of publicity, and instruction to bring our congregations to a consciousness of the interests, I believe they would welcome the change. With respect to the second, I am not sure that the spasmodic presentation of missions or benevolences, or education, or building is to be commended. Sufficient general presentation, specific and definite, would accomplish the objective part, and I believe do it better than under our present plan.

Whatever plan is used, the interests must be presented and promoted. As pastors we dare not do less, we must do more. Much time should be spent in prayer before the pastor for the progress of our denomination. Congregations should be taught and encouraged to do their part. Autocracy should never be resorted to in the accomplishment of our purpose. No selfish interests should be allowed to enter. Whatever we do, we should do with a will. The Lord comes shortly, or if he tarry, there are so many in the world to be saved and taught. We must be faithful to the Master's Service.

God Calls Busy Men Into His Service

By Thomas Gibson

Following are a few Bible facts, showing when God called men into his service, he always calls busy men. Men who are full of great possibilities for good, possibilities for great success. He never calls men who are idlers, who are inactive, energetic men. When David was chosen to be the king of the heavens which God had ordained, he was a busy man and exclaimed, "What is man that thou art mindful of?" Man has within himself wonderful possibilities, but only he will exercise himself in the right way.

God made him pure, and upright, but he has sought after vain inventions." Many useful inventions, but also many inventions that have corrupted, and demoralized his people. Moses was a busy man with his flocks at Horeb. God found him, and saw in him great possibilities for leadership. God called him into his service, and Moses responded to the call. After years of training and discipline, God used him as the emancipator of his people from Egyptian bondage. Gideon, that brave and fearless man, who subdued the Midianites (See Judges 7). God found him, and called him into his service, he responded to the call. He was not only a busy man, but he was doing strenuous labor, as it was no easy task to defeat them in those days.

David was a busy man searching for his father's lost sheep. When God found him, and saw in him possibilities for a ruler of his people. However, Saul, like many other men of his day who had within them possibilities of success, received a miserable failure, because he would not exercise his talent in the proper channel. David was a busy man, caring for his father's sheep when "the eye of the Lord, which is running to and fro, seeking out all whose hearts are perfect towards him, and desiring to best himself strong towards all such," discovered him. He saw in him "a man after his own heart," and the possibilities of becoming a good king to govern his people. We are all familiar with the circumstances under which he was chosen king, how all his brethren were rejected, because they failed to measure up to the divine requirements. God called him, and he responded to the call.

Who was among the herdsmen of Tekoa, was a busy man, following the flock, when God found him, and saw in him a man of remarkable prophetic vision. The first thing that came about him, is a pronouncement of God's judgment against Syria, and the Philistines, and he said "The Lord will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall be laid waste, and the top of Carmel shall wither." (Amos 1-2). God called him, and he responded to the call. Elisha, who was under the mantle of Elijah fell, the mantle which was a symbol of the "Holy Spirit", by which Elisha performed wonderful miracles,—he too was a busy man. He was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen, when the Lord found him. It takes a pretty good man to handle twelve yoke of oxen. The Lord saw in him a worthy successor to Elijah the prophet. He called him, and he responded to the call. Nehemiah, Hebrew statesman and leader, was a busy man, when God found him down in the city. He was not only busy, but he held a very responsible position as "cupbearer to the King. He was a trusted servant, it was with great reluctance that he permitted him to leave his presence, to go to the king's father's sepulchres, which were laid waste, and the city thereof consumed with fire.

And in Nehemiah, a man of unflinching courage and implicit faith who maintained unwavering confidence in the God of his fathers, under the most adverse circumstances. He saw in him a man who would, with his fellow laborers, endanger his life to secure the rebuilding of the walls of Zion. With tool in one hand, and weapon in the other, he and his followers prosecuted the work. God called him into his service, and he responded to the call. Daniel, while a captive in Babylon, was a busy man, upholding the true worship of the living God. The Lord saw in him wonderful possibilities for the promotion of truth and righteousness. He called him into his service, inspiring him with prophetic vision.

Malachi was a busy man, complaining of Israel's ungodliness, and profanity, when God found him. God called him to his service, he responded to the call, God endowing him with marvelous prophetic vision. Peter and Andrew were busy men, casting their net into the sea, expecting to get a haul of fish, when Jesus came along and found them. Although illiterate, Jesus saw in them possibilities of becoming successful preachers of the gospel, and with the help of the Holy Spirit become "fishers of men." James and John were busy men, mending their nets, preparatory to making a haul of fish, when Jesus came along and found them, and saw in them possibilities of being "Sons of thunder" in preaching the everlasting gospel. Matthew, the hated and despised publican, was a busy man collecting taxes, when Jesus found him, and saw in him the possibility of becoming an apostle, and evangelist. He responded to the call of Jesus.

Saul of Tarsus, although small of stature, had a giant intellect, and was a busy man when Jesus found him, on the way between Jerusalem, and Damascus. He was busy "persecuting the saints, and consenting unto their death." Jesus, who had all wisdom, and foreknowledge,—for "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world,"—saw in Saul a man of marvelous possibilities. He saw in Saul "one who would count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord." He saw in him, one who would be willing to suffer, and endure "hardships, privations, persecutions, tribulations, reproaches, and distresses, that he might win Christ, and be found in him." He saw in him one that could wish himself accursed from Christ, for his kinsmen, his brethren in the flesh. He saw in him, one who after having been purged from sin, would become a vessel of honor, sanctified, and meat for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work. Not by compulsion, however, but by free will, by choice.

Wm. Carey was a busy man cobbling shoes when Jesus found him. Jesus found in him a man who had imbibed the missionary spirit, and who was to do much for the extension of the Kingdom of God in heathen lands. He afterwards founded Christian missions in India. David Livingstone was a busy young man, working in the coal mines in Scotland, when Jesus found him. He, too, had imbibed the missionary spirit. The ruling passion of his soul was an intense desire to carry the message of salvation to the heathen of darkest Africa. God called him, and he responded to the call, with a joyful heart.

The woman of Samaria was a busy woman, drawing water from Jacob's well, when Jesus found her. Jesus saw in her possibilities of being a home missionary. Jesus called her and she responded by running home and telling the people of her own city, "that Messiah had come."

John Bunyan was a busy man when Jesus found him, and saw in him possibilities of writing that most beautiful allegory illustrating Biblical truths—"The Pilgrim's Progress"—which is conceded to be the finest piece of Christian literature, outside the Bible, the world has known. Jesus called him, and he responded to the call. We all have great possibilities within us, if we only bestir ourselves, by giving all diligence to exercise our gifts, in spite of every obstacle. If John Bunyan had not been cast into prison, in all probability the Christian world would never have had "The Pilgrim's Progress."

"God works in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform,
He plants his foot upon the sea, and rides upon the storm."

Praise his name forever.

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

4. The love feast was instituted by Jesus to be perpetuated.

The agape or supper came between the feetwashing and the eucharist. The expression "supper being ended" (Jn. 13:2) is not correct. "Ended" is not in the Greek. "Prepared is the proper word to understand to complete the phrase, because in verse 26 we find them still eating, and the bread and cup were given "after supper" (Lk. 22:20). Inasmuch as the feetwashing and the eucharist are sacred symbols the supper must also be. The three are parts of one institution, and are so related that one is incomplete without the other.

The announcement of the hour being come and the authority being given relates to the three parts alike, and not to one or two only. The use of the new name agape and the reference of Jesus to eating and drinking with him in his kingdom show that he was not thinking of that supper as being an ordinary supper without symbolic meaning. It was an integral part of the sacrament. The apostles so understood it and therefore perpetuated it, but it was instituted by Jesus himself.

5. The commandment to keep the love feast was written by Paul.

He received his commandment directly from Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 11:23-25) and he commands that in the celebration of the Lord's supper the church should wait for one another in order to eat together. In 1 Cor. 5:7, 8, also, he says, "For Christ our passover is sacrificed for us. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with the old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." The feast to which he refers as the type is the feast of unleavened bread, which formed part of the Passover festival, just as the love feast does of the Lord's supper. The word Paul uses for this feast in 1 Cor. 11:21 is deiipnon and refers to the evening meal, the principal meal of the day. To call a bit of bread and a sip of wine a deiipnon is as great an error as to call a few drops of water on the head a baptisma.

However, though the agape is called a supper and a feast, its object is not to delight the appetite or even to satisfy hunger. Paul says that those who hunger (and therefore cannot wait) should eat first at home, that the Lord's supper may be eaten together as by one body, the body of the Lord. Thus only can the church learn and express the symbolic teaching of the supper. In as Paul himself established the church in Corinth have established the Lord's supper there with feast as a part of it, and in preserving it after the abuse mentioned, he gives proof that it for essential part of the sacrament.

6. The love feast was observed by all the churches.

We have seen that Paul established the Lord's with the flove feast as a part of it in Corinth, therefore must have done the same in all the c which he established. If his custom in this had from that of the other apostles there would ha some mention of the fact. The Lord himself in Paul and would not have instructed the other differently.

In Jude 12 we read, "These are spots in your f charity" (agape). Charity is the old word for l feasts of charity were the love feasts of which th name is agape. Jude addresses his letter "to th are sanctified", that is, to the entire church an therefore be referring to an institution known to tire church. He also condemns the hypocrites v "crept in unawares" (vs. 4), but he does not cond love feast.

The apostles did, however, condemn the "rev (Gal. 5:21) of the world and the idolatrous feast they celebrated (1 Cor. 10:20), and would ha demned the agapes also if they had been ordinary banquets. The fact that they preserved them : rected the abuses in them, shows that they were in observing them as an institution of the Lord. same men who were spots in the love feasts w spots in baptism and the eucharist. In discard spots let us not discard also the sacraments.

Ohio Wesleyan University has reduced living costs to the lowest point in years. The boarding club, formerly continued, has been revived with rates at four dollars per week for men students have been priced as low as $1.50 a week. University is starting an experiment with a co-operative girls where twelve girls can secure their room and board cost of five dollars a week, doing much of the work themselves.

Some other institutions are agreeing to accept farm usable in the boarding departments to apply on living costs. —The Evangelical-Messenger.

ROMAN STRATEGY IN BELIZE

Thanks to the devastation wrought by the hurricane, t of British Honduras recently emerged from the obscurity. Lindbergh left it, to stretch itself across our newspaper. Normally, Belize is one of the quietest places mentioned in geography, being the port of entry for the least developed of the North American continent. Before the storm the mark of the town was a Catholic missionary institution, College, which is also an interesting illustration of Roman strategy. Although the peoples of the Central American countries are largely Catholic, the governments are frequently anti-Catholic. Catholic schools are subject to political supervision, and their liberties are exposed to confiscation. Therefore the Roman with its usual astuteness, has placed its one large school in Central America under the protection of the British flag. Students are recruited from the surrounding republics. A bit of genius is putting the school in charge of a group of men who have their headquarters in St. Louis. After the young men of the Society of Jesus have completed their college sent out to Belize to teach for a term of years, and then back to the United States to study theology. The recent apparently caused the destruction of the college buildings, on the water front, and the death of many of the student faculty, as school was in session. Educationally, this is a loss to Central America.—J. R. Scotford in Congregacoast of Sonoma County, California, is a small place that has the name of Fort Ross. It is a spot that marks the result of an effort that finally had a far-reaching effect upon our history. Here is a small wooden chapel, surmounted by an Orthodox cross. This chapel is an attraction to those who are in the history of the Western coast. This church, surrounded by a log stockade, is the sole footprint of the earnest but short-lived effort of Imperial Russia to stride over the California of the 19th century. Count Nikolai Rezanof was sent to survey the coast in 1805. He cruised to California, secured a cargo of furs, and a half-hearted consent to establish a farming and trading station on the Pacific coast. Following Rezanof's visit, a Russian expedition, without even asking leave of Spain, formed a settlement at what is now Fort Ross. They gave the Indians a settlement for the land, established a church and a governor's residence. To checkmate the Russians, the Spanish established missions at San Rafael in 1817, and at Sonoma in 1823. Steadily the Russians were hedged in, and finally decided that Fort Ross was not keeping, sold out the movable equipment to Captain Rezanof, who was trying to establish a community of Swiss at New Helvetia (Sacramento).—P. B. Hull in The Christian Evangelist.

not accustomed to grinding out dirges, but we feel that we must let the rest of the family understand the situation. Doubtless acquainted with the economies that your church people have been instituting, but you thought the little that you made would not be felt. However, you very soon realized that all other churches are economizing as you are and that the church paper is suffering more than other church interest as a result of such economies. We possibly if you understood a bit more how all these little economies of church budgets and home budgets are having a really direct effect on your church paper, you might in some cases take thought before you go further with the process. We feel that the situation with the Evangelist is not worse than with most church papers. But that is merely saying again that a lot of company, and though "misery loves company," "company" does not help one out of a situation. But just to know that we are not singing a solo, but rather are doing so in a great chorus, we are quoting from one of our contributors; the organ of a church much larger than ours. If any-thing is more discouraging than ours. Here it is:

are still alarmed over the decreasing list because it reflects that with the passing of the older class of readers are going to secure others in their places. A woman of many years in the church said to the editor recently: "I read the church paper with a great deal of pleasure. I'm sure that I learned the alphabet from its pages." Many homes is the church paper read by the coming generation by those who are the younger workers in our churches today? The lack of knowledge of our denominational life is simply appalling. Some people think that if they subscribe to a general religious paper they are fully supplied with news. But what about the work of their own church? They are intelligent workers in it if they do not know what it is in it?

there is less reading of church news than formerly. The church is probably drawn many away from reading, the auto-innovations in the summer time, and the movies allure in the time. What, with social engagements and bridge parties and other activities, is left for the church paper?

MONDAY

2 Cor. 12:1-7. Paul had evidently received visions from God of things so sacred that he would not have dared to utter them; yet he found in this no cause for boasting. After all, he was only a mortal whom the Lord had so blessed in order to better equip him for service. What the thorn in the flesh really was, no one may know with certainty, but at any rate it gives us some insight into the reason for some of the things in the lives of God's saints. Who has not marveled at the force of character and strength of faith of some of God's suffering shut-ins!

TUESDAY

2 Cor. 12:8-10. Unanswered prayer—what questions it raises at times! Why are they not answered? is it because of unforgiven sin in my life, of which I am not even aware? is it because I lack faith? is there, after all, a God who is interested in the cares of men? We may find much comfort from the experiences of Paul. It is not for God's glory that ALL prayers should be answered, and we should be willing to endure added suffering and hardship that Christ may be glorified and that his power may rest upon us.

WEDNESDAY

2 Cor. 12:11-15. During his earthly ministry there was very little in the way of real gratitude to cheer the heart of our Lord. So, too, from the days of Paul until now there has been little of gratitude or of understanding to reward the hearts of his ministers. If they served for gratitude alone, or even for money, surely they would become discouraged. But there is a higher reward, and he receives his wages in human souls and the consciousness of his Master's commission fulfilled. The motto of every faithful servant of Christ's is: "Not yours, but you."

THURSDAY

2 Cor. 12:16-21. There are those who are determined to find fault; they couldn't accuse Paul of having taken money from them, as a "hireling," so they said he had deceived them, and taken them by guile. Paul speaks plainly to them, and it is well to remember that the faithful minister must sometimes do so. God save us from fault-finding and help us to work together in all love with those who are trying to serve thee according to the best of their knowledge!

FRIDAY

2 Cor. 13:1-4. The Corinthians had demanded of Paul some proof of his ministry, and of Jesus working through him. After all he had done for them this was almost mockery, yet Paul gave the only proof that we can give today: though Christ was crucified, he liveth by the power of God, and we too live by his power, "in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power."

SATURDAY

2 Cor. 13:5-9. Again these few verses furnish splendid material for our meditation. Examine yourselves; whether ye be in the faith; Jesus Christ is in us unless we are reprobates; we should pray to God to keep us from doing evil; we can do nothing against the truth. God help us ever to be honest with ourselves, honest with thee, and honest with thy servants; so mayest thou bless us and lead us on to perfection!

SUNDAY

2 Cor. 13:10-14. Paul realized fully the purpose of the power that had been given him: he was not merely to "lord it" over his fellows, for his own glory, but was to use it to edify or build them up in the faith. He commands them to live together in peace and says that then the God of love and peace shall live among them. A certain denomination recently passed a resolution against war, and a newspaper columnist suggested it was because they were so busy fighting among themselves they couldn't carry on a second war! Probably the jibe was no more warranted than in other denominations, but if we expect the blessing of the God of love and peace, as a church or a nation, we must live in peace.

Singing In The Sunday School

By William Beery

A Sunday school without singing as a part of its exercises would be lacking in a very important feature of its activities, for surely in it lie great possibilities for effective ministry in the successful carrying forward of the work of the Sunday school. While it may fail to produce the good results of which it is capable, by mistaken uses which are sometimes made of it, the fact still remains that singing is, if properly used, a necessary part of the workings of a successful Sunday school. But only when the best hymns and music are used, in the proper place and time, with the right attitude of mind and heart, can the full power of its influence be realized.

What to Use

In dealing with this subject both hymns and tunes require consideration.

Certainly there never was a time when the quantity and variety of Sunday school music were greater than just now. The grave question is that of selection. A noted writer has said, "In the musical education of the children we are determining to a degree the taste and ethical horizon of the next generation. We desire to start them out with an equipment of selections that shall not wear out, or soon sound like cracked bells. The hymns that are to remain in the Holy of Holies of their lives should be those that have lasting value, of which they shall never be ashamed, and which shall, by God's gracious power, become richer in spiritual effectiveness as the years go by. Hymns, whether for children or for adults, should (a) reflect the spirit of Jesus, (b) have a Biblical basis, and (c) contain a direct approach to God."

From a table laden with a great abundance and variety of food the wise guests will eat of that only which they know to be wholesome. The same discretion should be exercised in the use of music in the Sunday school. The Sunday school cannot afford to tolerate anything but the best. To use any selection which we know to be unworthy of itself and of God is doing an injustice to the cause. Let us not be satisfied with what we know to be poor, and let us do our best to lead others upward from immature or mistaken standards to higher ones.

Some Questionable Features

In view of the fact that the Sunday school is composed largely of children and young people, it is clearly evident that it is essential that the selections used be such as will appeal to them and at the same time possess the qualities that go to make them worthy. Pieces are to be found in hymnals and in Sunday school song books which are by no means suitable as hymns to be used in worship. Hymns there are in which the ideas presented induce mental pictures which, to say the least, are extravagant; and to the mind which is inclined to take things in a comparatively literal sense, impossible; and some, especially to children, inapplicable and inappropriate. Other hymns there are which are indefinite, vague in expression, or whose address is not heavenward, and therefore are not a means of worship. There are other selections, too, in which the words are acceptable but the music objectionable, partaking too much of the nature of ragtime—too "catchy." This kind of music usually sticks in the minds of the boys and girls, and they will inevitably compose parodies, which at once destroys all religious significance.

The above suggestions deserve from our Sunday school workers careful consideration in the study of the hymns now in use, and in the selection of any others that may come to their notice.

Unquestionably, there is an immense quantity of music being dumped on the market which should be carefully examined before it is imposed upon the precious souls under the Sunday school's care and training. The rhythm and swing of the music may afford a certain kind of pleasurable feeling, but be entirely void of any soul-edifying qualities. Be sure it appeals to the s-o-u-l, instead of the s-o-l-e; that it is not a dance tune, but one that makes melody in the heart.

How to Test a Hymn

The following are suggested as some of the tests which a hymn should stand in order to be counted good enough to be introduced into the Sunday school. Test it (a) by the state of opinion of sentiment in which its actual use leaves you. (b) Is it true in its thought of God and (c) Is it healthy in general tone? (d) Is it written out of a deep experience? (e) Is the picture it gives nature of the providence or the God, or of Christ's offices or per the ministry of the Spirit, or of the Christian church and its activities, one mends itself to you as true? (f) Does the attempt to make it you have majesty and contagious power? Does the attempt to make it you press on give to you a wider vision rouse within you higher aspirations? Are you helped to be a larger Christian by it?

The Music Should Help the Sunday School

The purpose of the Sunday school education, the training and building of souls in the religion of Jesus Christ, the music should be such as to aid to her aim and desired results. The music should be such as to aid to her aim and desired results, not always easy for adults to be as helpful as they should be, and the helping children how to worship is deserving careful consideration. The kind that will not hinder. The hymns that are learned in days have much to do with their conception of God and his attrition of the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ among men. As a soul-winning agency the Sunday school has supreme and in her effort to bring religion to bear upon her influence she finds potent means of approach than the singing of sacred songs. Some one has said, "There is no artistic means of reaching the internal springs of feeling in the human heart that can compare with singing. Singing has peculiar personal appeal to those who sing and to those who hear. Our Christian hymns are surely among the most powerful agencies we have for opening the religious sentiment of the soul."

Sharing a Treasure

By Dr. C. A. Bame, Sunday School Editor

I have some Sunday school history that I want to share with the readers of the Evangelist. Many of our people will remember Elder S. Z. Sharp as the first president of Ashland College. Many who attended the National Conference at Ashland in 1928 will remember the aged man who reported his hearing the Gettysburg address. His speech at our Conference was one of the best-timed and shortest speeches I have ever heard.

Many of our people may not know that he recently went to his reward. He was driving with a horse and buggy and was run down by an automobile driver and died as a result of the injuries.

Under date of January 23, 1931, from Laverne, California, I received a letter from him which speaks volumes for his grace, keen mind and fraternal feeling for our church and literature.

"My dear brother Bame:

I just now came from the college reading room where I examined The Brethren Teacher. I notice one important feature the Sunday School Quarterlies of the ——— do not contain, but is found in your lessons. There have to be many teachers employed who do not know what questions to ask on the lesson to make them interesting. Questions fill the gap.

"I have had experience in preparing Sunday school lessons. On March 1, 1901, I issued the first Sunday school lesson published for the Church of the Brethren in a weekly paper called Our Sunday School, published at Ashland. It was the International notes on a set and a primary department. I started The Brethren's Quarterly in 1902 and it has since been published twice a year.

I think your Teacher a very good one and should be used in every Sunday school. ... With kindest regards and best wishes for your success, I am, Fraternally yours,

S. Z.

This is the last testimonial he gave to the world. "Being dead, yet speaking", and I pray he may be many of our Brethren Teachers who heed his advice. ## Ways to Help My Pastor and My Church

1. Co-operate with the pastor in planning a series of special church services. The pastor will adapt the sermons particularly to young people, and some of the society's members may have a part in the service. The young people of the church will assume special responsibility for promotion and attendance.

2. Cooperate with the pastor in honoring some of the great heroes of missions, science, social reform, and exploration.

3. Plan and carry out repairs or improvements in the church building and equipment. Young people should do as much of the work as practicable.

4. Assume, individually and as a group, certain church responsibilities, such as ushering, distributing pamphlets, choir service, welcoming strangers, bringing elderly or crippled persons to the church service.

5. One group rebound worn-out hymnals. Another society spends odd time in repairing the chairs used in Sunday school classrooms and elsewhere in the church building. One society refurnished the kindergarten room.

6. Adult service groups in the church may be assisted in caring for the sick and needy, distributing food and clothing, etc.

7. An every-member canvass of the church may use young people, not only as canvassers, but in messenger work, clerical service, and in "clean-up" work afterward, following up cards that have not been turned in, for instance.

8. Plan and present dramatizations to evening congregations.

9. Plan a complete service of worship for evening services or for Sunday school sessions.

10. Be responsible for leading games at a general church social event.

11. A committee of young people might plan and edit the church calendar or a small weekly magazine. If a mimeographed calendar is used, the young people could relieve the pastor of this work.

12. Improve the appearance of the church grounds. Plant shrub, care for lawn and flower-beds, repair broken fences or side-walks, replace worn-out electric lamps, freshen the appearance of the church announcement-board.

A PARENTS' MEETING

The Christian Endeavor society of the First Christian Church of Hammond, La., conducted a parents' meeting at which all of the parents of the church were urged to attend just to see what the Young People's society was doing for their sons and daughters.

The Endeavorers displayed their work, and did their best at this meeting. The topic was brought out in a blackboard-talk given by an active member, entitled "The Spirit of Christ." This was very interesting. Other sub-topics were given by members. The meeting proved a success, with a very unusual attendance and a very interesting program. Several prayers were given by the Endeavorers, which added to the meeting greatly.

Our society here is improving in every way; not only in attendance, interest, and membership, but in fellowship and consecration.—Hubert Crook In C. E. World.

A Letter From Miss Nielsen

("The Missionary" being overcrowded with missionary letters, we are glad to give space on our "Mission" page to Miss Nielsen's letter and hope she and other missionaries will find time to write an occasional letter direct to The Evangelist—Editor.)

Dear Missionary Friends:

Some time ago I was talking to some one who propounded what was, to me, an entirely new theory; namely, that according to Mark 13:20, "He hath shortened the days", means that the days are not as long actually, in time value or will not be, and that the process of making them shorter in time value has already begun. I smiled, of course, and yet I sometimes wonder just what has happened to the days that used to be long enough to get everything done, and still leave a little time to spare. Certainly they are no longer with us. Perhaps we are "careful—about many things," instead of choosing "the one thing needful." At any rate, the experience seems to be all but universal. So since speed we must have, may it be speed that will hasten the business of our King, Redeemer and Lord.

Last week another Workers' Conference was held in Rio Cuarto, with splendid interest, and a profitable time for all. Because of sickness, two of our workers, Adolfo Zeche and Federico Sotola, were unable to be with us. The program centered around "the Bible," its universality, its prophecy, its history, its miracles, etc. These conferences are times of real fellowship among the workers.

We were glad to have with us all the Sickel family. They came up two or three weeks before, enroute to Cordoba to interview a doctor there. It was such lovely weather that, instead of going by train as they had intended, they decided to drive, and Grace Yoder and I went along. We picked up Miss Larson at Almafuerte, where she had gone with Brother and Sister Yoder and Robert. We reached Cordoba in time to have a lovely drive among the hills before nightfall. We were reminded so much of some that we could easily imagine ourselves in Southern California. The real purpose of the trip, the interview with the doctor, proved very disappointing. It was decided that it would be best for Sister Sickel to stay in Rio until Conference time, getting a good rest, and we were glad that she was feeling better than when she came; though there is still much to be desired.

It was decided that Miss Larson should accompany the Sickels to Huinca Renanco, and while she is getting the language, she could take over the Sickel children's school work, thus relieving Mrs. Sickel of a heavy burden. So after having some one to share my apartment for a month, and just being nicely settled, we had to break up house-keeping, and I have things all to myself again, not an altogether satisfactory feeling, after having some one with whom to share. But nevertheless we are all happy in the feeling that it was for the best.

Greetings and farewells are apt to come close together in life. Hardly had we welcomed Brother Yoder and Miss Larson, when preparations began to say farewell to Robert. He will leave a big vacancy in the home here. We shall all miss him greatly, but Sister Yoder will miss him more than anyone, for he has been her companion, reading to her, taking mate (tea) with her, doing the many little odd jobs that are constantly needing to be done, and always doing it cheerfully. So as he goes to further prepare himself for whatever shall be his life work, we wish him God-speed ask that you send him back to wholesome, just as unspoiled, as him to you. We believe you will addition of those things that he to make his life count for the m

Twenty-Five Years After

An Appraisal of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, By Cornelius H. Patt

(EDITOR'S SUGGESTION—We offer two suggestions for those who may care to cooperate in the 25th celebration of the Laymen's Missionary Movement—first, that the date for Brethren people be advanced to a convenient day in October, and for those who have not yet had the Laymen's Day service, combine the two; and second, if the 15th of November is observed, why not make it the occasion for the enlargement of vision and the stirring up of interests on behalf of our Home Mission work, inasmuch as the Thanksgiving season is the time for lifting our offerings for national Home Mission work.)

Most timely is the suggestion that on Sunday, November 15, or on some convenient adjacent date, the churches of the various denominations celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The time is ripe for the revival of lay activity and initiative in behalf of missions at home and abroad. No one feels this more than the pastors of our more enterprising and forward looking churches. The movement which invented the Every Member Canvass and the Church Budget, and which, under God, was instrumental in aligning tens of thousands of business men in missionary belief and activity, which in hundreds of churches reinforced pastoral leadership by bringing to bear upon the problems of the church the brain-power and enthusiasm of practically minded business and professional men, the enterprise which, as we see it today, inaugurated a new era of missionary incentive and support, such a movement, we must hold, if once more given a prominent place in our counsels and programs may well prove the means of leading us out of the present wilderness of criticism, hesitation and receding devotion on the part of many in the church.

When those splendid laymen of twenty-five years ago met in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of New York for conference and prayer over the missionary situation, it was under the pressure of the idea that the world had swung into a new position of missionary opportunity and demand. The inciting occasion was the celebration at Williamstown, Massachusetts of the centennial of the famous Haystack Prayer Meeting, when a group of Williams College students, under the leadership of Mills, in the act of prayer plives to Christian service in fo thereby launching one of the gr movements in the history of the was felt that the time had com laymen of the church, as such, s by the cause of world evangeliz organized and aggressive way; church was to enter into the ne nities in a large and hopeful m would be needed the mobilization element in the church members denomination.

hindered in getting under way until 1927.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

My last report on this offering was dated August 1, and I announced the fact that up to that time the gifts from the church for the current year had amounted to $598.72.
Since that time remittances have been received as follows:

Williamstown, Ohio .....	$ 3.50
Mulvane, Kansas .....	3.00
Roann, Indiana .....	6.00
Pittsburgh, Pa. ....	25.00
Washington, D. C. ....	7.00
Oakville, Indiana .....	9.94
Pleasant Hill, Ohio .....	1.00
Morrill, Kansas .....	10.66
Total since August 1 .....	$ 66.10

Previously reported .....$598.72

Total .....$664.82

If I did not know the Brethren church as well as I do, and were inclined to give way to a spirit of pessimism, I would likely question the matter of loyalty to the institution so fundamentally important as this.
But I know the Brethren people, and know that if such matters are really presented to them, they will rally to their support. May God bless you all for what you have done, and for what you are willing to do.

Faithfully your Brother,

BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

We have just passed through one of the mightiest revivals the Beaver City church has experienced in many years. A glorious revival! A great time of refreshing! A season of joy! The work of the Spirit of God was manifested in tremendous power.
The entire city has received spiritual blessings at the hand of the Lord, because of these meetings and many outside of the church, members are rejoicing with us over the results.

We put much time in preparation for these services. Cottage prayer meetings were held twice weekly for several weeks before these meetings. A great intrest was shown by the members, their loyalty in prayer is to be commended. We were anticipating the great joy, which eventually has become ours, long before it was realized. A once discouraged and disheartened people have become again a people standing ready to take their place as those who love and are ready, against all cost, to step out into a life of sacrifice for the Lord who bought them.

During the past four years these enterprising laymen, with reinforcements from Boston to San Francisco, and New Orleans to Charlottetown, P. E. I., have entered the field, revived the old name, and sought to conserve the old spirit. This group of men felt deeply that such a passion, such an achievement, must not be allowed to pass from sight. They believed that ways must be found for conserving the best elements of the L. M. M. of 1906-1919.

(To be concluded next week)

Brother R. Paul Miller is a strong, fearless evangelist. His messages gripped the hearts of the people and several nights this church that seldom sees crowds, saw the house full. The wholehearted way in which the evangelist preaches thrilled his listeners, convicted their hearts, brought tears of sorrow and smiles of joy.

Our meetings went on for three weeks, with just six making confessions, but on the last night we truly had a time of rejoicing.
After a very inspirational message, twenty-one dear people responded to the call of the Lord. Each one was dealt with individually and personally by the evangelist. Six of these coming forward were members who came to renew their fellowship with the Lord. Each one was dealt with individually for definite service for the Lord; twelve for the first time confessed Christ as their Savior.

We are rejoicing over the mighty thing that the Lord has done for us. We believe that this truly is the starting of a great work for the Master in Beaver City. We want you to rejoice with us. We pray that this blessing that has been ours may also be yours, too.

Pastor, RAYMOND BLOOD.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

The Brethren at Winchester have just closed a three weeks' tent meeting under the leadership of Rev. Leo Polman, pastor at South Gate, California. As an evangelist he preached fearlessly and lovingly the whole truth, leaving no uncertainty in any of his messages. We admire him for these straightforward sermons. And it is inspirational to hear our brethren preach when we know they practice what they preach.
We commend him for his leadership in Gospel song, both in congregational singing and in solo work. We only regret that his good wife could not be present with him so that they might have rendered us some of those fine spiritual duets which they sing together. Had she been here we know Leo would not have been quite as homesick. Our sympathy for him made us keep him busy every moment of time except when at the table. Then, of course, I was relieved of all effort.

Brother Polman's work with the young people was inspiring. His plain Gospel illustrated chalk talks were excellent. The way of life was made so plain that twenty boys and girls responded to the invitation to accept Christ as their personal Savior.
There were three adults who confessed

Christ for the first time and forty-two who dedicated their lives to God to serve him anew. Two were received by letter and twenty have been baptized.

During the meetings a Bible reading contest was launched which resulted in the reading of 9026 chapters by 696 persons. The highest reading for one day was 375 chapters by Miss Gretta Mason, who not only read her Bible the closing Sunday, but attended five services during the day.

The second highest, was 291 chapters, by Miss Vada Frye. She read from Genesis through to Revelation and started over again before the meetings closed.

Delegations came frequently from the Maurertown congregation. We thank "Brother Ed" and his people for their fine support, presence and also the "specials" which they brought with them.

That faithful and helpful band of witnesses under the shepherding of Brother Kent and Superintendent Dooley gave us a special surprise when 22 of them motored 80 miles to offer encouragement. Thank you, Capitol city Brethren, for your presence and Brother and Sister Hartman for your spiritual singing. Brother Baker, pastor of our church at St. James, Maryland, also came with a delegation. Then on the closing night we had our greatest surprise when Brother Platt with family from Manteca, California drove out of their way in order to be present with us. We were gladdened with his words of greeting and encouragement from our western district. We praise God for these times of fellowship. We covet for all mentioned and those not mentioned, also for ourselves, a greater fellowship with the Father, his Son and with one another. Come again. While we are absent from one another let us continue to pray that God may find us all more yielded, so he by his Spirit may work in us both to will and to do his good pleasure.

E. J. ROHART, Pastor.

REVIVAL AT WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

It was our privilege to hold a three weeks' meeting in a tent with these good folks of Winchester, Virginia. This city while not so very large has a wonderful heritage. It can boast of being the second oldest city in Virginia. Many battles were fought thereabouts during the French and Indian war, as well as during the Civil war. It is still thriving heartily on this phase of its life.

Our church has a very fine location on the main pike with very fine surroundings. The building is small, yet very fine. Of brick and I was told that out of debt. That is quite a feat in these days of depression. Much credit is due to its humble pastor. Brother Rohart, who has had many problems to face here, and we commend him for his untiring efforts to hold on even in the face of bitter criticism. He believes that God is still on his throne and claims the promises.

We leave the report of the results with the pastor, but we cannot help but say that many victories were manifest visibly, and that many more are forthcoming in the future.

The hospitality was superfine. That good old southern cooking surely was great. Glad to say also, at least for my sake, that the chicken population was greatly decreased while we were there.

We made our stay with the Fletchers and Raceys, who made it very comfortable for us in their homes. We were glad for this fellowship and hope that again some day we shall have the privilege to again return to this field.

Brother Miller from Maurertown, Homer Kent from Washington, D. C. and Baker from St. James, Maryland, encouraged us with mighty fine delegations as well as with special music. This is a mighty fine spirit of cooperation, and the local people surely did enjoy their fellowship as well.

Winchester people have a great opportunity for a real service in their city, because of the Brethren message, The Bible, the Whole Bible and Nothing but the Bible. So many of the churches there are so disappointing in their message. We shall pray that harmony, unity and love may exist here and that many may be brought to Christ through their testimonies. We would encourage others to pray for this mission church and this people.

LEO POLMAN,
South Gate, California.

CANADA'S BAD BUSINESS

When Canada decided to go into partnership with the most lawless set of business men in the most degrading drink traffic, she made a choice that is bringing an increasing curse with every passing year. In this one thing she may well be regarded as a red light beacon to our big neighbor across the line, warning them in the present anti-prohibition agitation against following our course.

Canadians may well be aroused to what is transpiring. Mr. Benu H. Spence presents the cold facts in an article recently given out. It is personal safety that will call for a change in Canada, when "driving while drunk" convictions increase by 60 per cent in one year.

Mr. Spence writes:

Despite widespread business depression and unemployment, and notwithstanding the cutting of the prices of liquor in the government stores, the aggregate Drink Bill of Canada increased by over a million dollars in 1930 as compared with 1929. And, notwithstanding that the liquor systems have "control," the consumption of liquor increased by over two million gallons.

This increased outlay and consumption is having its effect. In the last year convictions for violation of liquor laws (bootlegging) increased by 27 percent, drunkenness by 17 percent, driving while drunk by 60 percent, crimes of other kinds by 17 percent over the previous year.

The exact figures as given by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics are set out in the following table:

	1928	1929
Violation of liquor laws . . .	15,263	19,327
Drunkenness . . . . .	33,224	38,826
Driving while drunk . . . . .	1,322	2,106
Other crimes of various kinds . . . . .	217,674	253,881

Total convictions . . . . . 267,483 314,140

The following table gives by provinces, as closely as can be estimated from the official reports, the amount of money spent for liquor in each province:

British Columbia . . . . .	$ 19,533,617.72
Alberta . . . . .	14,049,210.55
Saskatchewan . . . . .	12,388,490.78
Manitoba . . . . .	10,632,392.24
Ontario . . . . .	55,341,799.71
Quebec . . . . .	76,279,366.18
New Brunswick . . . . .	4,809,734.11
Nova Scotia . . . . .	621,588.00

Total . . . . . $193,656,199.09

These figures take no account of mous sales by bootleggers. They include export trade, but only legal consumption within the country. gering sum that the traffic in in beverages is now costing Canada mously more than ever before in t of the Dominion.

This, in the face of the fact clearings, which are an index as t ume of business, particularly of trade, decreased from $25,077, 1929 to $20,092,343,629 in 1930, a of $4,985,273,213.

Further, while the domestic e for liquor has increased, a favora in Canada's international trade, 216,894 in 1929 was changed to a able balance of $103,355,512 in 19

Now, as to the amount of liquor a statement just issued by the Bureau of Statistics gives the foll ures as the estimated consumption This is after deducting all export 3,036,755 gallons; wines, 7,241,44 beer, 62,100,225 gallons; total, gallons.

This amounts to 7.368 gallons which is by far the largest since days and has been exceeded only the history of Canada.

The figures convey some idea o nitude and extent of these liquor s tems that have been set up for the products of Canadian brewer tillers and satisfying the appetit who imbibe. They emphatically "sale," not "control", is the characteristic of the Canadian I tems.

While Canadians have lamenta to drink themselves or their co prosperity, they have splendidly in making the booze barons of th immensely wealthy.—The Evange tian.

a doubt the services of the lost much in dignity, reverence and uplift by the use of some of music which has found its way through the Sunday school. To a congregation of intelligent, young and older people, the historically famous and most hymns and tunes are not only out also unappreciated, is a counsel to contemplate. Such congregations by far too numerous. That the school should be responsible for such affairs is to be deplored. Surely owing to the scarcity of good hymns and music that that which is trivial and unworthy must be resorted to. An abundance of the best to be the hymnals of the churches; and, the most desirable songs for school are those taken from the hymnals of the churches and those from the English and German.

If instead of looking for new while with a view to making service more effective we were to that which has stood the test we better progress. Of course some good new pieces, and it is that others will still appear. It be added to the good we al-

Right and Wrong Use of Singing in the Sunday School

A hymn may be ever so good and the music ever so fine, yet if sung at inopportune times and places, or under wrong conditions, the possible good effect is lost. Singing in the Sunday school, as in any religious service, is an act of worship, or at least an aid to worship, or it is not worthy of a part in the service. The words and sounds uttered in song should carry with them true devotions from the depths of our hearts to the Heavenly Father.

The habit of using hymn-singing in a merely casual or mechanical way is much too common, and is worthy of condemnation. To use it chiefly as a stop-gap, as a cover for disorder, to counteract physical restlessness, to "fill in" while papers are being distributed, the offering taken, during the changing of seats, or while any other exercise is in progress, is certainly out of place. Furthermore, it is not conducive to reverence or a worshipful state of mind for the members of the school to engage in promiscuous conversation, especially in a loud tone of voice, immediately before the time for the opening exercises. There should be quiet, meditation and secret prayer, thus bringing the soul into proper frame to enter into the singing of the opening hymn with good effect. Children should be taught to regard the singing as an act of worship. Allow us to say, parenthetically, that adults should remember that the example they show has much to do with the conduct of the children. We say children should be taught this reverence, by precept and example, because as they are taught so they are and do. While they are children is the time to teach them right conduct in the house of God. Hymn singing has a right to a place in the main current of the service, instead of being made an eddy at its side, or an interruption and interference.

Importance of Familiarity with Hymns and Music

One cannot enter into the spirit of a hymn if he does not know what it says or makes him say. He should be familiar with words and music. So far as possible the entire school should commit to memory the hymns used, or at least study them. Still, there is need for caution right here, lest because we are very familiar with certain combinations of words we fall into the habit of repeating them without putting into them the meaning, thought or feeling which they are intended to express. Nevertheless one must be sufficiently familiar with the hymn to be able to sense the thought and make it his own so that the use of it becomes a means of worship. And again, if he has difficulty in applying the music he is hindered. Children should be taught, not the words only, and the tunes, but the meaning of the words should be explained, else how can they be expected to worship as they sing? Call their attention to these matters, not only once, but repeatedly.

Appropriateness of Hymns

Much care should be exercised in the selection of hymns as to their appropriateness to the occasion and the subject in hand. It is not generally safe to call for voluntary selections by individuals in the school. Often unsuitable hymns are called for in that way. Most people have favorites, and are liable to call for such when opportunity is given, whether suited to the occasion or not. The misfits and even ludicrous blunders that are sometimes made in this regard frequently destroy the solemnity and effectiveness of a service. For the Sunday school session the selecting of the hymns is the business of the superintendent or the chorister, or better still, these two officers should consult together in the matter. The superintendent may not be a musician and therefore not always competent to judge as to the music, while the chorister is supposed to know what can be used to good advantage.

Omitting of Stanzas

In most of the modern collections of Sunday school songs not many of the hymns contain more than three or four stanzas. The exceptions in good hymns are where more are required to complete the thought. Many hymns are thus considerably cut down from their original length, but compilers who understand their business generally see to it that the stanzas omitted are those that will least weaken the hymn. In using hymns care should be exercised in omitting stanzas, lest the continuity and completion of thought be broken and marred; but if in the construction of the hymn each stanza is complete in itself it is allowable and often advantageous to use only as much of it as may seem desirable and appropriate to the occasion.

Manner of Singing

The possible good effect of the music is sometimes lost because of the bungling way in which it is sung. One of the most capable and excellent supervisors of music in the East recently said that the greatest detriment that the work in the schools experiences is due to the very poor music and the manner of singing used in the Sunday schools. She considers that the work on Sundays practically works disastrous results on all the points she may have gained in the few minutes each week during which she has had the children in charge. The music and manner of singing in the Sunday school should be at least as high in excellence as that of the public schools. It frequently so happens that those who have charge of the children's singing in the Sunday school are not experts in the art of teaching singing to children. Just a hint or two right here may be of value to such. Children's voices are naturally soft and sweet. Do not try to improve them by requiring them to sing loud. Remember, it is not noise that is wanted but music. If they have already been trained to sing loud, caution them against this habit. It will finally ruin their voices. Teach them to sing easily, naturally, and their voices will develop naturally as their bodies grow. If possible consult some one who knows how to handle children in the matter of singing.

Music as an Educational Force

The fact that the songs the children sing are a potent factor in the building of character is known to all who have given the matter serious thought. The man who said, "Let me make the songs of the nation and I care not who makes the laws," knew what he was talking about. Another expressed the same truth in these words: "The singing of a daily song will do more to develop patriotism than the reading of pages and pages of history." Ruskin says, "The entire object of education is to make people not only do right things but to enjoy right things," and it has been suggested that we might add, as the preliminary, the thinking of right things. The singing of good music will help people to think good and right things; right thinking will bring about right doing, which will ultimately result in the enjoyment of right things. When once children learn that in music which is good, noble and elevating, that which is weak, low or debasing will have no attractions for them. This accomplished, the nickelodeons and cheap theaters will go begging. Music is said to be the outlet of emotional opinions. Opinions are formed from impressions made upon the mind. Music has to do with the emotional nature; and the impressions made by the singing of good songs, filled with right sentiments, will help to form right opinions, vitalized and deepened by the emotions; and so music becomes the outlet of these emotional opinions, and, by constant repetition, they become indelibly fixed in the heart and soul. And this fact lays supreme emphasis upon the importance of the use of good music in the Sunday school.

Congregational Singing

The most effective mode of song service is that of congregational singing. An occasional solo, duet, quartet, or chorus or anthem by select voices, if done with hearts filled with the spirit of worship and love for the cause of Christ, is sometimes in place, and can be used to good effect; but by all means, the congregational singing must prevail, if the best results are desired. Martin Luther knew this, and one of his first efforts was the restoration of congregational singing. Other great preachers have recognized the superior power in this form of song service, and have profited by it. May the time never come when in the Church of the Brethren the old-time congregational singing will be forgotten. But it behooves us to see to it that the young people are constantly trained in the art and science of music as well as kept in practice. We learn to sing by singing, and the way to maintain this form of singing is to use every means and opportunity to build up popular hymn-singing. We would recommend that there be special attention given to the teaching of vocal music in the congregations. Especially is this imperative in communities where music is not taught in the public schools. In the cities and in some rural districts this subject is taught in the schools, but even that is not sufficient. The children do not learn there the songs they should sing in Sunday school and in church. They need to form the habit of singing in the house of worship. Train the children to attend the preaching services; supply them with the church hymnals and have them feel that they are expected to sing and that their efforts are appreciated, and the natural result will be a constantly increasing number of strong, spiritual, loyal recruits to the army of efficient church workers.

A Summary

So, finally, the gist of it all is as follows:

1. Singing in the Sunday school possesses great possibilities for effective ministry in carrying forward her work.
2. There is a possibility of its failing to be helpful by mistaken uses of it.
3. Best results can be expected only when the best, in words and music, is used.
4. Every selection should be thoroughly tested before given to the Sunday school.
5. All the music used should be of such character as to aid the Sunday school in her aims and desired results.
6. Children, while in training in the Sunday school to be loyal and efficient church members and workers, must learn to love and appreciate the music and the other services of the church.
7. The singing must be regarded and used as an act of worship.

8. Singing cannot be engaged in to edification while other distracting exercises are going on.

9. Familiarity with words and music is essential.

10. Children should have the meaning of words explained and adults should study them.

11. Hymns to be used in the regular Sunday school session should be selected by the superintendent, or by the chorister, or by both together.

12. Care should be exercised in omitting stanzas.

13. Children and young people should be taught the art and science of music, and the correct use of their voices.

14. Every possible means should be employed to maintain, promote and improve congregational singing.—Selected Material.

OUR LITTLE READERS

WHEN OLGA NEEDED A FRIEND

By Gladys Melrose Gearhart

It was to be Olga's first day at school in America. Only two months before she had come with her parents from Russia. Now her father had bought a farm and moved his family there. Olga loved the pretty hills. It was springtime and she found great delight in hunting the first wild flowers of the season.

However when her father told her that she must start to school a great fear began to grow in her little heart. There would not be a single familiar face to smile at her. Perhaps even the strange faces would not smile. Perhaps they would not want her there. These thoughts were terrible enough to make little Olga shed many tears. Yet she knew the hardest part of all would be that she could not say a single word to the teacher or any of the boys and girls. For she could not speak at all in the English language.

"Oh, I don't want to go to school," she sobbed.

The mother could only pat little Olga's shoulder and coax her not to cry. For she could not tell her English words to speak. Nor could she promise that the American children would smile at her and want her to be with them.

Now this first morning had arrived! There was a pain in Olga's heart as she started down the road toward the bars alone. She knew the way to the little white school house that stood beside a small happy brook. For every day since she had lived in her new home she had picked flowers on top of the high hill in the back part of her father's farm where she could look down upon the building with its playgrounds.

So now Olga went through the bars, down the lane, then climbed the hill through the fields. She was afraid to go the way the other children went, for fear someone might laugh at her.

When she came to where she could look down at the school house the children were all outdoors playing games. How Olga wished she could be as happy as they were, joining in their fun. At the same time she wished she might run home to her mother and never go down to be with children to whom she could not talk.

Suddenly an idea flashed into her mind. She could tell her mother every morning that she was going to school, and then only come this far and stay until others went home at night. Yet a queer feel with this thought. She had told her mother the truth. Besides she would go home and tell what she had learned day if she did not go to the school.

At that moment the bell on the building began to ring. Instantly the children left their play. Olga watched them form in a line. As they marched she noticed that one girl about her age stayed outside with the teacher. The others had disappeared. It looked as if this girl was pointing up at the hill. Then almost at once the girl ran to the brook and disappeared in a bush that grew beside it at the foot of the hill.

What should she do? Oh, she must go on down. She would have the room all by herself! And she would say a word! Because she felt so lonely. She sat down on the ground that was covered with spring violets and began to cry.

In fact she sobbed so loud that she could not hear the footsteps of someone until they were quite close. Then once she lifted her tear-stained face up at the girl who a few minutes before had been pointing up at the hill.

The girl was smiling at her. Olga began to flutter in a strange way. The girl was talking, too. But Olga could not understand a word she said. She shook her head sadly.

Then much to Olga's surprise she stooped over and kissed her right tear-stained cheek. Olga's heart beat so rapidly, little tingling through her now. The next moment she was helping her to her feet and toward the little white building behind the hill. Then at once started leading her to the school.

When they came to the school house the girl paused. She pointed to herself and said, "I am Laura." Over and over "Laura."

At first Olga could not understand. All at once it flashed upon her that the girl was saying her own name. So Olga said the single word, "Laura." Immediately the idea came to her to do the same.

Right away the other girl repeated her name after her, "Olga." Then she laughed. And because there was a tiniest bit of pain in Olga's heart she laughed too. What fun she was having! But best of all she had already found a friend. And, Laura, she told her that night, was the prettiest name she had heard.

ANNOUNCEMENT

LANARK, ILLINOIS

The Brethren church of Lanark will observe the Holy ordinances of the Lord's Supper and baptism on Wednesday evening, October 25, beginning at 7 o'clock. All members of the church, especially isolated members, and Christians desiring to share in the feast are invited to be with us.

C. C. GRISSO,

PERU, INDIANA

The First Brethren church at Peru will observe the fall Love Feast and Holy Communion on Monday evening, November 2nd at 7:30 o'clock. Those of the faith are cordially invited to partake of the goodness of the Lord's bounty.

FOUR GREAT PREACHERS OF THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH

Signs of the Times

by Alva J. McClain

LESSONS from Russia

J. N. Darling, noted cartoonist of the Des Moines Register, is writing a series of articles on what he saw and learned while traveling about in Russia. He emphasizes two things:

First, that "No one who has seen Russia today, be he laborer or capitalist, could possibly want the same thing to happen in this country."

Second, that every American ought to take a trip to Russia at least once just for the purpose of seeing what happens when the ruling "overlords" become arrogant and overbearing and the "underdogs" rise up and do some house-cleaning. Darling intimates that it would engender some humility of spirit in the "upper classes" of America to see how Russia gets along without her former masters without even missing them.

THE Violence of Ghandi

By many who ought to know better—including newspaper editors, college professors and apostate preachers—the Indian Ghandi has been compared with Christ, and his principles are declared to be the principles taught by Christ. In particular reference is made to Ghandi's great political weapon in the fight against England, namely, the method of "Non-cooperation."

Ghandi pledges his followers to refuse to buy English goods, to hold no office or position under the English government, to refuse obedience to certain laws, and in the case of the salt-tax law to deliberately break the law. Yet in all these things Ghandi has steadfastly tried to teach his followers that they must not engage in physical combat nor take human life.

Now however much we may sympathize with Ghandi in his bitter fight against English mis-rule, there is nothing to be gained by confusing his method with the method of the Lord Jesus Christ. For they are not the same.

In the last analysis, although it may be startlingly novel to some, Ghandi's method is a method of violence. Christ taught that "if any man shall sue thee at law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloke also." "Resist not evil." "Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." But Ghandi says to his oppressed followers, "England has smitten us wrongfully. Let us smite England with the powerful weapon of economic non-cooperation."

If our Lord had used the method of Ghandi, he would have urged the Jews of his day to refuse to pay tribute money to Caesar. Instead he tells them to "render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's."

It is difficult to follow the Way of Christ. His way was not the way of the pagan Mr. Ghandi. Nor, we should add, the way of the pagans of this country who claim to follow Christ.

AN Ominous Warning

On his birthday recently Ghandi made it perfectly clear that the spirit of his teaching is not the teaching of Christ. "We do not want to sacrifice a single life to end British misrule in India," he said, "but the Indians are willing that the holy Ganges should run with blood if that is necessary to gain the freedom so long delayed."

WHAT the Preachers Forgot

During the summer the Daily Democrat of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, reported an interesting Sunday night union meeting of the downtown churches. It seems that when all the preachers had assembled on the platform, and the time came for reading the Scripture, no Bible could be found and none of the preachers had brought one. Fortunately, most of the people knew the 23rd Psalm, having learned it in the days when ministers and parents were more careful about having a Bible around, so they recited that.

One cannot help but wonder, in the face of certain present-day tendencies of the religious world, whether a congregation 25 years hence will be sufficiently well acquainted with the 23rd Psalm to give it from memory.

When I read about this union meeting without a Bible, I wondered whether there was a Brethren preacher there, and found upon inquiry that on the evening in question Brother Ashman was holding his own service in his own church, and they had a Bible.

Which is the way it should be. A preacher without a Bible is like a soldier without a gun, like a doctor without his medicine, like a lawyer without his law, like a baker without bread, like a bank without money, like a mechanic without his tools.

THE Spirit of the Christian Scholar

We have two extremes today with reference to attitudes toward scholarship. On the other hand we have those who suppose that nothing is to be accepted in religion until proven by "scholarship." Such men will not accept even the Word of our Lord in matters like the authorship of Old Testament books. At the other extreme we have men who do accept the Word of Christ, as they should, but who treat the patient labor of Biblical scholarship as of no account.

I have been reading various writers lately on the prophecies of Daniel, and among them I have found much profit in the work of Pusey, that godly scholar who has so ably defended the book of Daniel from the destructive critics. In his introduction to Daniel, Pusey makes a statement which breathes the proper attitude of the true Christian scholar.

In making a passing reference to the much disputed question of the authorship and genuineness of the Pentateuch, Dr. Pusey says, "Forty years of study have shown me the more, both from language and the subsequent books of the Old Testament, the evidence of its genuineness," and then adds, "which I already believed on the authority of our Lord."

This is the true Christian attitude in the realm of scholarship. It is willing to undertake forty years of patient research in Biblical matters, but it starts and ends with faith in the absolute authority of the Son of God. When he has spoken, human scholarship can only confirm. It cannot change.

The Most Important Job in the World

A man friend said recently, in offering a criticism on the part of a certain minister to do pastoral work, "What the preacher in the pulpit is a very small portion of his job." We recognize this friend, and recognize the importance of pastoral work, but it is dead wrong. Before everything else the preacher is a messenger of the message of God and the pulpit is the place set apart for the doing of that particular thing. And, lest any speaker of the message of the Sacred Word should think himself exempt from the counsel that follows, let us say that every place set apart to one an opportunity of preaching the "Good News" is a pulpit to that man. No position is so fraught with responsibility. No place is so important as the sacred desk. No task is so exalted, so vital, so indispensable, and nothing else so may do deserves being approached with such care and devotion, or such love and prayerfulness. Nothing else that a minister can do is needed so much by his people as the preaching of the Word. Far from being a secondary part of the minister's job, it is the first and biggest part of his job, the one thing he cannot possibly escape doing, and must surely feel constrained to do as was the first great preacher to the Gentiles who said: "Woe to me if I preach not the Gospel." That is the minister's distinctive and urgent duty, and no other work under heaven carries with it such far-reaching possible consequences. Eternal issues are at stake on the faithfulness with which he preaches God's Truth. It is so important, therefore, that he shall seek to discharge his ministry with the utmost of grace, sincerity and efficiency and shall guard himself against those habits of thought and emphasis that detract from the effectiveness of his labors. Tendencies to two such errors have been called to our attention and deserve general consideration.

One tendency is to prophesy "smooth things to them that are at Zion," to tone down, to mollify, to weaken the force of the Word. The editor of the Reformed Church Messenger recites the story of a well-known business man who made this serious charge against his preacher: "Our preacher never tries, or at least he never succeeds, in making me feel that I am a sinner." That is a hard thing to say, yet there is the ever present temptation and tendency to do just that very thing. Preachers are inclined to be quite human, to sympathize with other people, and to avoid unpleasant subjects in their plain words against sin. There is a way of preaching that does not greatly trouble the consciences of men and so does not lead them to "cry out for mercy and forgiveness." Sometimes preachers prefer this type of preaching to the more strenuous and direct type. "They prefer to play to the galleries, to cater to the fancies and fancies of their congregations, and to avoid the offending those whose interest might be lessened or deflected if the undiluted truth were proclaimed to them in all its

The Messenger quotes Christopher Morley as writing in Atlantic that "it is not the dreamer's job to heckle society with cruel and spectacular follies, nor suggest remedies for civilization's ills." To which he says the brilliant dramatic critic of the York Times, J. Brooks Atkinson, aptly replies: "But it is precisely his job; he has no other. Civilization being threatened by those who have no capacity for dreaming, and in order to make it safe for stupidity, it behooves those who are to take charge tyrannically. We dreamers and artists bear the brunt of the conflict; no one else will. When a principle of principle is at stake, it behooves the critic to assume the prerogatives of the artist, thrust his opinion down every man's throat and cast his lot in with a wiser world." Dr. Leinbach replies, "Well, the preacher is a combination of dreamer, artist, and prophet. He is the ambassador of the Most High God, and for that reason he must not truckle nor trim nor in any sense weaken and pervert the divine message." He must call sin by its right name. Speaking in love though he does and must, yet he should never take away the candidness and straight-forwardness and strictness of the message, nor turn its positive reproof and condemnation into soft words and taps on the wrist. He must be a true proclaimer of the unadulterated, undiluted message of God.

On the other hand he must avoid the extreme of the muck-raker and advertiser of evil. He must not fail to distinguish the difference between proclaiming God's truth without apology against sin on the one hand, and reproducing and popularizing the ways and filth of sin on the other. Sometimes pulpits are polluted by detailed recitals of gruesome or shameful crimes that almost beggar the realism of the movies and almost equal them in the baneful effect of the curiosity thereby aroused. The newspapers recount all too many details of criminality and sin; it surely does not become the pulpit nor the religious press to seek to outstrip them. This is a type of sensationalism that is without excuse on the part of the man dedicated to be a prophet of God. But it will be more effective to let another speak the advice, one to whom we may all listen with respect, both because of his many years of service and because he is a prince among preachers. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson gave this fatherly counsel in a contributed article in The Congregationalist. He said in part as follows:

It is a mistake for a preacher to dwell on the seamy side of life. That can be better attended to by others. A Christian congregation needs no description of the underworld. It has learned all about it from the newspapers and magazines and the movies. Paul's exhortation, "Seek the things that are above," is good advice for everybody, especially for preachers. When he says, "Set your mind on the things that are above," he says something which all preachers do well to heed. When he says, "Whatsoever things are true and honorable and just and pure and lovely and of good report, think on these things," his words ought to be caught up by every preacher in the land. If the people are to think high things, the preacher must set them an example. He has no valid excuse for spending an hour Sunday morning in describing a cesspool or opening up a sewer. The preacher is called to a different sort of job. His specialty is good news. People should go from the house of God feeling cleansed and refreshed.

It is a mistake also to carry into the pulpit the names of men who habitually sneer at religion and scoff at the Church. Why honor them by giving them public recognition? Irresponsible writers of third-rate ability are given a fictitious importance when the preacher proceeds to combat their theories and speculations. Why notice them? What difference does it make what they think or say? There is a horde of shallow-pated wiseacres now gabbling and scribbling for the public, and because some of them are clever in the use of words and enjoy a wide newspaper notoriety, many a preacher is tempted to give them a significance they do not deserve. Preachers ought to take heed lest unknowingly they degenerate into pulpit book agents, increasing the sale of books which ought to be let die. Why should a preacher waste his time in sowing the seeds of popular, skeptical "smart-Alecks" in the minds of those who otherwise might never hear them? The lecturers and authors who sniff at Christianity and ridicule the Church do not deserve serious attention. Why then should the preacher give them the publicity for which they hunger?

A Suggestion for Armistice Day Service

In many churches preceding Armistice Day recognition will be given to the thirteenth anniversary of the close of the terrible World War. It is a good time to proclaim the Gospel teaching on war and peace, and to seek to establish the church more strongly in the conviction that war is wrong and that the church as a body and that Christian people individually are under high obligation to promote the principles of peace and to oppose war and everything that makes for war. It is a good time to call the attention of the people to the encroaching spirit of militarism upon our national life, and of the danger of its growing until it becomes a threat to the peace of the world.

It is fitting by reason of the terrible financial depression that rests like a pall, not only upon our own land but upon the world, to point out the government's sinful waste in spending many millions of dollars in building a mammoth navy and in manufacturing vast engines and materials of war, for which we will have no use

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. G. C. Carpenter gives us another of his interesting and practical life lessons under the title of "That Reminds Me." We enjoy his occasional messages and he has promised to write a number more.

A well-deserved tribute of praise is paid to our recently departed Brother J. D. Findley by Brother Freeman Ankrum. It is fitting that he should do this, his own life having been so largely influenced for good by this noble Christian layman, whose death was recently reported in another department of the Evangelist.

The church at Dayton, Ohio, which is under the capable pastoral leadership of Brother R. D. Barnard, has launched the publication of a sixteen page parish paper, which services also the purpose of a weekly bulletin. It has an elaborate front page decoration, its first issue is well edited and we understand it is to be supported by advertisements.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey is spending a busy week in Bible Conference work at the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Charles H. Ashman is pastor. Last week Dr. Monroe gave daily Bible lectures at the Pennsylvania conference, which met in Philadelphia, filling the engagement of Prof. McClain, who was just recovering from a week of illness.

Brother W. S. Baker writes of increased spiritual interest in the Lord's work at Lydia, Maryland, where he is pastor. The financial depression has been keenly felt, but there has been no depression spiritually, rather interest and attendance have been stimulated. Attendance at the Sunday school has increased about twenty per cent over last year. Brother Baker offers to exchange revival meetings with some pastor interested in such an arrangement.

The Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, Sunday school had an attendance of 327 and an offering of $85.86 on Rally Day, the first Sunday in October. Their average attendance for the past quarter was 202 and the average offering, $15.56. Thirty-nine of their Sunday school scholars had perfect attendance records for the past year, and one had a perfect attendance record for six years. Conemaugh ought to have some regular church attendants in the next decade. Brother W. H. Schaffer is the pastor.

On Professor Stuckey's page this week, he gives us the report read at the National Conference by the General Secretary of the Sunday School Association, Brother N. V. Leatherman. It is a well-prepared, informing report, and deserves the careful study of every Sunday school worker in the brotherhood. A budget that should appeal to the Sunday schools as being worthy of support, is presented, totaling $4,100. You will not be asked to give such support your immediate attention, however; it is to be your Christmas gift.

Brother Floyd Sibert, the new Citizenship Superintendent of the Brethren National Union, writes his introductory message this week—a timely message indeed, and it will pay Endeavorers to read it. Brother Sibert is not a stranger to Ohio Endeavorers, as he has just closed a four and a half year pastorate at Ellet of that state, and we venture that, now that he is head of this department of Christian Endeavor, he will not long be a stranger to the Endeavorers of any district, if they will only read the Christian Endeavor page of the Evangelist. He is in the habit of doing with energy whatever task he undertakes.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Flora, Indiana, writes of a "victory revival" at that place, he himself having served as evangelist and Brother Everett Myers, a local talent, as song leader. The meetings resulted in fourteen confessions and baptisms, and one other, who had previously been baptized, made the fifteenth to be received into the membership of the church. Since March 8th, when Brother Ankrum took charge, twenty-eight new members have been added to the church. The closing day meetings was Rally Day, with a banner attendance and a attended basket dinner, then on Monday a successful communion service.

Brother R. Paul Miller writes of his evangelistic campaign at Beaver City, Nebraska, concerning which the pastor, Brother Mond Blood made a report last week. As the Home Missionary states, this church was much discouraged, so much so that its very existence seemed in question. But with commendable faith and courage they made a new try of it and under the enthusiastic leadership of their new pastor, and the additional encouragement of Brother Miller's meeting, they have gained new confidence and strength and are going forward now in a splendid way. The revival of this congregation was a splendid service for the brotherhood. It is as great a credit to the Home Board to rebuild a congregation as it is to establish a new one.

From Roanoke, Virginia, comes a well-written report from the secretary of that congregation, telling the outstanding accomplishments of Brother Eppley's three years of service and of the ministrings of Brother Herman Koontz' pastorate. Brother Eppley's congregation in the erection of a new church building, new parsonage, two big undertakings. Also a number of members were added to the church during his leadership. Now installed as pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, Brother Koontz is undertaking his big job at Roanoke with untiring energy and consecration, which we believe will result in victory. In a personal communication we learn that he is greatly encouraged at the reception he has received and the attention he is being given. That makes the outlook bright.

From Roanoke, Indiana, comes a report of an experiment in a merged service of Sunday school and church on Sunday during July and August. It met with such approval that they decided to continue the plan into the new church year. It indicates a real effort being put forth to overcome the widely prevalent habit of leaving Sunday school at the close of that service, staying for church, and such an effort resolves itself into a movement to take care of the children and young people who are usually the ones missing from morning worship by being present at the Sunday school. It indicates wide-awakeness and spiritual alertness which betoken good for the future of the church. It would be good if really sincere efforts to interest the youth in church services were more widely undertaken. Brother G. H. is the aggressive pastor of this church. He has been retained for another year of service.

Last week when the paper went to press, Brother Ira D. for many years the head printer of the Brethren periodical, Sunday school literature, was alive and patiently enduring illness. This week we are publishing his obituary and his body has been returned to the earth and his soul to the Father. He gave it and to the blessed rest of the believer in Christ Jesus. He was a blessed freedom for Brother Slotter, who for several years has been an invalid, but still our hearts are grieved at the fact that he is gone from the possibility of fellowship in this world. It had meant much to the editor, more than we can tell, in the many years of his editorship. He was ever ready to give up his position to solve the mechanical problems connected with our publication and we leaned heavily upon him. Upon our life, as well as upon many others, he made a deep impression by reason of his spirit and ever readiness to help. He was not only for our mechanical department for many years, for a number of years was a member of the Publication Board, and his counsel was always valued because of his technical skill. But his greatest expression was made as a member of the local church, in which he served as deacon, Sunday school secretary-treasurer, singer, and in other capacities. He was a very sociable man, always welcoming strangers welcome, and particularly the students as they came in the College chapel from year to year for their Sunday school. We have been missing him during these seven years of illness, but we will yet miss him, but going to be with the Lord seemed to him. We extend the sincere sympathies of the Evangelist to his wife, daughter and sister, who remain. Sister Mary, well known for her efficient work on the "Woman's Outlook," will have the sympathies of the W. M. S. throughout the brotherhood.

The Essential Value of Feetwashing as a Church Ordinance

By J. L. Bowman

any organization has some reason for its existence. Characteristics that distinguish it from every other organization and put it in a class by itself. The walls separate may not be very high or thick but they are high enough and thick enough to segregate each in by itself. Are these lines a help or a hindrance? They tend to develop strength or do they tend to weaken? To the author it would seem that where the walls are thin and so very high and where the identical are taught on both sides of the wall, that it would tend to take down the wall, level the ground, greet each other with the right hand of fellowship and the kiss of unity. Forget the past and now henceforth live to- as Christian people should. Stop bickering and fighting. Get together. See good in each other, and meet sweetly and happily together ever afterward. To me it would seem a cogent reason for the value of certain divisive doctrines as taught by the Brethren and the of the Brethren. There is no longer a sufficient reason for keeping these two churches apart. The doctrines of each church are as much alike as two peas in a pod.

Above may not be just what the programme committee had in mind when they assigned me the subject, "The Value of Feetwashing as a church Ordinance." I admit that I do not think it was. I still insist that seriously considered would have weight on the subject. Space and time compel me to discuss but one of the subjects assigned, and that in the nature of the case is brief.

Dealing with the subject of feet washing as a church ordinance I offer no excuse, I make no apology. It is not of which to boast, nor is it anything of which to be ashamed. I suppose I can best introduce the subject by asking a few questions first. In the thirteenth chapter of John, did Jesus say what he meant and did he mean what he said? Did he mean what he did or did he do what he meant to do? If you say yes to these questions, there is but little need of further discussion. What a privilege in the life of the Son of God—KNOWING that the Father had given all things into his hands! That he came from God and went to God! Doubtless this consciousness dawned upon him in its fullness as it has done hitherto. He knew that this was the last of his life on earth. Conscious of these tremendous things he stooped to institute an ordinance in which there was no value to the disciples then, and none to his present disciples? He instituted a sort of comedy in which Peter and the other disciples were the principal actors but which had no value to Peter or the other disciples? Something had been done but it had no particular value or significance? Is that all? NO! ten thousand times no! What he DID had a meaning and he meant that it should be continued till he should come back again.

The solemnity of the occasion awed the little group into silence. With the dignity of a king he arose and laid aside his garments and took a towel, poured water into a basin and began to wash the feet of the disciples and to wipe them with the towel with which he was girded. Peter objected in very emphatic language, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Perhaps realizing the great inequality in his life that existed between him and the Master Jesus led Peter to make a declaration like this. Remember that it was Peter that exclaimed, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Naturally Peter felt that he would not want his Lord and Master to humiliate himself by stooping to wash his feet. Jesus was equally firm and replied, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." Then Peter became willing not only to have his feet washed, but also his hands and his head. Was there any value in this distinctive ordinance to Peter? Peter realized that unless he obeyed, he would forfeit his part with the Master. Unless I wash your feet you have no part with me? With your permission I will translate that literally and rather loosely in order that you may see just what Jesus really meant. Thou shalt have no portion, no communion, no common inheritance with me in the honors and blessings of the kingdom.

Another meaning that is very clear might arise. If you refuse this manifestation of humble love from me, if you put your own pride between yourself and me, if you disdain this act of self-surrender, claiming to understand our mutual relations better than I, you have no part with me. This is a symbol of love to you and of what your love ought to be to one another. If you refuse to accept it from me, this will sever the relationship that has existed between us. Peter, you must learn the lesson of the beauty and glory of service for the sake of others. If you are unable to understand and accept this love, you have no part with me. You must learn one lesson well, "That obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (1 Sam. 15:22). Then Peter replied, "Lord, if it comes to a primal experience of being washed by thee, if there is any question as to part or share with thee in thy work, I will go with thee to prison and to death, then, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head—all my uncovered body. But Jesus said, "He that is bathed, needeth not save to wash his feet." So Peter yielded and permitted the Lord to do what he had said he never would permit the Master to do—wash his feet.

Did this rite have a distinctive value to him? It most certainly did. Does it have a real value to us? Will it bring needed grace for the daily toils of life? Will it bring the blessing you need? Jesus said, "If you know these things blessed (happy) are ye if you do them." Knowing and doing are often divorced but knowing and doing do bring a blessing. Jesus said it and I know it is true. You say that Jesus meant this service for the disciples only, and not for the present age, that he never meant to establish a custom or introduce an ordinance? But he said, If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet." When? Now, in this age.

By no manner of honest logic or fair reasoning can you deduce an argument to show that Jesus never meant that feet washing should not be observed and practiced till he comes back again. Why object to this rite? The foot is a part of the body as well as the hand and just as honorable. It is a command and when obeyed brings a blessing, and a failure to obey forfeits our lot and part with Christ. Wilson in his Emphatic Diaglott translates the Greek verb "Ophleite," ye are bound. Liddell and Scott translate the same verb among other translations, ye must, and Jesus says, ye ought. I am under no obligation to wash somebody's feet because Wilson says "I am bound," or because Liddell and Scott say, "I must." Neither of them spake with divine authority, but when Jesus says, "I ought," I must obey or lose my part with him.

How will this ordinance benefit me, or is there no benefit attached? Was feet washing a side issue and had no connection with anything that preceded or that followed? Was it just a segment of teaching that had no connection with anything, past, present or future? Nobody believes that, or how would it have found its way into sacred scripture? The Lord's supper and the eucharist derive their authority from the same source as feet washing. Why accept one and reject the other two? What the Lord joined together, let not man put asunder. Here are a few reasons why this ordinance will benefit us.

1. Feet washing is a high test of love and obedience.
2. Feetwashing is a symbol of humility, a cardinal Christian grace.
3. Feet washing is a symbol of cleansing.
4. Feet washing is a divine command, a command with a penalty attached.
5. Feet washing is of binding force upon the children of God today.
6. Feet washing exalts the Master.

May the Holy Spirit lead us to get rid of our prejudice, false teaching, carnality and pride and open our minds to receive the truth. May we approach the Master with this simple prayer, "Teach me to know the truth and give me courage to obey the same regardless of consequences.

What is a "Saloon" or "Barroom"

By Ben H. Spence, Canadian Journalist

Ben H. Spence, Canadian journalist, writing for the World League Against Alcoholism, asks this question, and then goes on:

The writer has in mind that notorious resort in Chicago, just outside the loop, on South Clark street, run by "Hinky Dink." It bore the inappropriate name, "The Workingman's Exchange." On one evening, 240 patrons were counted in this place. Probably one-fourth were noticeably intoxicated.

Not many weeks later, at the same hour, this place was visited. On the swinging door, as one entered, was a sign, "Fresh Buttermilk." Inside several men were leaning upon the bar and unhilariously sipping buttermilk or near beer.

The "saloon" was no longer a "saloon." What had changed? The place was the same. There were the bar and barroom equipment, the mirrors and decorations, the glasses and decanters. There were the same white-aproned bartenders trying as best they could to carry on under prohibition. Everything was as it had been save the "kick" in the beverages sold. Alcoholic drinks were no longer obtainable.

What, then, is meant by the word "saloon?" Was it not the name given a place where intoxicating liquors were sold for consumption upon the premises and were consumed upon the premises where sold?

It was not simply a place where men congregated to drink, but a place where the drinks were alcoholic. If this be not the case then every drugstore, soda, fountain, every ice cream and soft drink parlor would be a "saloon."

In Canada, 2536 of the 5064 retail liquor selling establishments, more than one-half of the total, are places where intoxicating liquors are sold for consumption upon the premises and are consumed upon the premises where sold. They are, in reality, "saloons," even if they go by the more high-toned names of "beer parlors" or "beer rooms" or "taverns."

Four of Canada's eight liquor selling provinces, namely Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, have these new-type saloons under various aliases.

Furthermore, in these four provinces liquor sales in these "saloons" exceed those of the government. The exact figures are as follows:

Sales in government stores . . . . . $52,185,500

Sales in "saloons" . . . . . 55,374,500

It is true that the sight which meets the eye on entering is different. The old familiar bar is gone or a serving counter only. There is no brass foot-rail which unsteady patrons can put a foot and "blow froth." Instead, there are tables and chairs. As the evil of drinking depended upon whether the drink was in a perpendicular or a semi-horizontal position was imbibed.

But the smell of the place has the same old staling pungent, nauseating, gastric smell. One hears the same old vulgar, profane obscenity that characterized the old saloon. One witnesses the same drunken disorder disgraced the old saloon. And, when closing hour comes, similar maudlin contents are spewed out onto the streets as staggered from the old saloon.

The unhealthful influence of these places is the same. They reek with moral miasma and vile contagions. They are centers from which emanate many evils. They are feeding places for speakeasies and vice resorts.

Generally speaking, these "beer parlors" are located in hotels. Where this is the case they operate to lower the quality of the service rendered the traveling public. They make these "homes of travelers" unpleasant to sound and smell, and less safe for life and property.

In hotels, they are situated right in the path of the traveling public, thus the moral danger and temptation are peculiarly subtle and dangerous.

Nowhere did the cry sound louder than in Canada that the saloon must never come back."

It is back.

Studies in the Types

By R. I. Humbert

Study No. 10

ISAAC A TYPE OF CHRIST

Isaac is a type of Christ in various ways but now consider him as the bridegroom.

Abraham was concerned about getting a wife for his beloved son, and, calling his faithful servant, he gave him a charge to go "to my kindred, and take a wife for my son Isaac" (Gen. 24:4). The servant immediately proceeded to carry out the orders and loaded ten camels with goods from the store of his master and journeyed to the far country of Mesopotamia.

He arrived at the city where Nahor lived and made his camels kneel down by a well of water outside the city where he knew that the women soon would be coming out to draw water for their houses. He then determined to wait upon a sign from the Lord. It came to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall give my son Isaac, she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also. Let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac" (Gen. 24:14).

The Prayer Answered

Before this simple prayer was ended Rebekah her pitcher upon her shoulder." She was fair upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her." She had filled her pitcher with water, the servant took a drink. Rebekah let down her pitcher and gave and his camels water to drink. Immediately the servant perceived that the God of Israel had heard his prayer and he took a golden ear-ring and two bracelets of gold and gave them to Rebekah.

The Heavenly Bridegroom

This reminds us that the Father in heaven desires for his only begotten Son, has sent the Holy Spirit, into the world to secure his bride. Just as the servant did not speak of himself but of Isaac who was heir of Abraham, so the Spirit takes of the things of Christ and shows them to us and thus wins a bride for the beloved Son. (John 1:12-13)

The servant gave rich gifts to Rebekah but they were but a small portion of what was to follow, so the Holy Spirit enriches the bride of Christ with certain spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 12:8) but these gifts are only an earnest or a foretaste of what will follow later at the "redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:14).

Spiritual Chastity

Rebekah was a chaste virgin and the church is espoused to Christ as a chaste virgin to be presented to him (2 Cor. 11:2). Let us remember that just as Rebekah was a virgin and was free from physical fornication, a Christian should be free from spiritual fornication.

Israel of old was guilty of spiritual adultery, that is, of forsaking Jehovah and Israel was as husband and wife (Hosea 2) but Israel had committed spiritual adultery and had sought out other Gods. It is thus today. A Christian should not love the world, in fact if a man loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 Jno. 2:15). A person who desires to be the bride of Christ must be unequally yoked together with unbelievers and must come out from among them and be separate" (2 Cor. 6:17), for friendship with the world and anything like that is "enmity with God" and makes one a spiritual fornicator (James 4:4).

A Definite Proposition

The servant put up the issue and required a definite answer. Just like many today, her friends tried to put off the issue of acceptance and said, "Let the damsel abide for a few days" (Gen. 24:55).

The issue of salvation is definite, "now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6:2), "boast not thyself of tomorrow" (Prov. 27:1). Will the damsel go? An immediate answer was called for, "and she said, I will go."

Just as Rebekah had never seen Isaac, yet through the testimony of the servant she, like the church today, was going to journey to him, "whom having not seen, ye loved" (Eph. 1:8).

A decision was made but it was a long, hard journey for the servant until she would meet the bridegroom. It is the same for us. When a person becomes a Christian he is not taken to be with Christ but must often travel the life of many years of toil and sorrow under the guidance of the Holy Spirit who's business it is to bring us to the Great Bridegroom.

Rebekah turned aside from following the servant and immediately encountered great difficulty. Just as today we should "quench not the Spirit" (1 Thes. 5:19) but should follow his leading continually. The servant took Rebekah to Isaac and Isaac went forth to meet her and when our Lord has the place prepared for his bride he will come again and receive her unto himself that where he is there she may be also (Jno. 14:3).

"Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Rev. 19:9).

Heartening a Discouraged World

By William T. Ellis

Things look dark for the world. What with revolutions all around the earth; with financial disaster threatening the oldest and steadiest nations; with unemployment and distress universal, and with discontent everywhere, the present seems to be a period of more general gloom than living men have ever before known.

Every day produces new discussions of the subject, and suggested remedies. This is one hopeful aspect of the case. More and better brains are dealing with the present depression than ever before considered a kindred calamity.

Strangely little is being said or done, however, in the realm of sustaining people's spirits through a hard time. All of our concern seems to be for their bodies.

Clearly, though, an earlier need, and a continuing need, is for putting heart into a fearful and discouraged generation. To make strong and hopeful the spirits of the people is the first of all steps toward a successful emergence from a perilous period. The state of public ideals is more important than the condition of the banks.

Here we come to the unique mission of the Christian Church, with her message of courage, comfort and peace. In this emergency, only the Church's Good News can lift up the hearts that are cast down.

If people are to be inspired by considerations that outweigh material calamities, the Church must inspire them.

If society is to be held steadfast to the old integrities of character, the Church must hold them.

If men are to be kept from despair and destructiveness, the Church has the word that will keep them.

If the social order is to progress toward a more brotherly and more equitable operation, instead of plunging into accentuated class strife, the Church must enunciate the principles of brotherhood and justice.

Without entering at all into a discussion of the vast and pressing problems that squarely confront the whole world, I wish merely to suggest that this is obviously the opportunity of the Christian Church to speak, clearly and constantly, her Master's word of counsel and comfort. Week by week, every pulpit in the land should find place for some message that will put courage and confidence into hearers who are bearing unusual burdens.

All sorts of anti-Christian and anti-social agencies are showing themselves quick and resourceful in utilizing the the world-wide depression for their propaganda purposes. Shall the Church be less efficient?

She may not cry "Peace! Peace! when there is no peace;" but she may, and should, bring to bear all her mighty resources to stabilize panicky thinking; to discover a Divine design in this upheaval; and to help men and women to stand fast by the qualities of character which should survive all changes of condition.

The Church has the word for the hour. If she speaks it, bruised and baffled hearts will throng to her temples, to learn life's deeper lessons in the light of eternity.

"Comfort ye! comfort ye my people."

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

7. History testifies that the love feast was an apostolic institution.

Any church history, whether Protestant or Catholic, will speak of the love feasts of the apostolic church. The early writers themselves speak of them and we will now hear their testimony.

In the first century

The Didache (Teachings of the Apostles) giving instructions for the Lord's Supper, says, "After having eaten to satisfaction give thanks as follows." They ate therefore to satisfaction before partaking of the eucharist.

Ignacius says, "Without the pastor it is not lawful to celebrate baptism or the eucharist or the love feast."—Ad Smyrna c. 8.

Pliny, the Roman governor of Asia Minor, in a letter to the emperor Trajan, only a few years after the death of John, says, "They (the Christians) meet in a supper of an open and innocent nature, a custom which they abandoned after my edict, by which, in accordance with your orders, I prohibited meetings of societies" (Ep. 10:97).

Tertullian (200 A. D.) writing from Egypt says, "Our feast explains itself by its name agape or love. It is an act of religious service, and does not permit lack of respect or modesty. The participants first taste of prayer to God. As much is eaten as is necessary to satisfy hunger."

Clement says, "The genuine love feasts were of apostolic origin."

Modern historians

Bennet in Christian Archeology says, "During the apostolic period the manner of observing the Lord's Supper recalled the last supper of Christ with the apostles. It was accompanied by hymns and prayers, and by the love feast to show that its object was an expression of brotherly love. In the most ancient records of the Lord's Supper there prevails a simple and almost literal imitation of the meal as instituted by Christ." p. 462.

Jacob's History of the Church says, "The name Lord's Supper or the phrase breaking of bread was given to the ordinance,—to the love feast the same as to the eucharist with which it terminated. The love feast itself was an apostolic institution."

Hastings Bible Dictionary says, "In the Scriptures there is no indication of the separation of the eucharist from the agape and the phrase "breaking of bread" refers to both together.

Neander, a famous Jewish historian, says, "Following the model of the Passover, the Lord's Supper originally included both the eucharist and the agape."

The Catholic New Testament, version of Pons in a note on Acts 2:43, says, "Of the breaking of bread,—that is they attended the love feasts in which they distributed the eucharist, for at that time, the communion ordinarily followed the meal which they had in common."

The Spanish Dictionary. (Diccionario Enciclopédico Hispano-Americano) says of the agape, "These feasts were celebrated in the time of the apostles in memory of the last supper which Jesus gave to the disciples before instituting the eucharist."

It would be possible to add literally hundreds of similar testimonies. Historians agree as to the existence of the love feast as an apostolic institution, though they do not see the richness of its symbolic teaching. The evidence comes from the Scriptures themselves.

THE JAPANESE TAKE MUKDEN

As usual, it is necessary to counsel extreme caution in drawing conclusions as to what has happened in Manchuria and to place the blame. All the reports so far cabled to this country are the product of Japanese news agencies or originated in China hundreds of miles from the scene of fighting. It seems certain that Japanese troops have occupied not only the capital, Mukden, but all the important centers of southern Manchuria. Something approximating a Japanese military occupation of more than half of this large province has apparently been accomplished. Whether this was provoked by Chinese military action either on the Japanese-administered South Manchurian Railway or on Japanese soldiers acting as railway guards, is yet to be determined. It is also unknown as to how seriously the Japanese are tempted to dispute the advance of the Japanese troops. The situation in Manchuria makes it easy to escape responsibility for breaches of the peace which may occur there. Technically, Manchuria is a Chinese province. But it is a province over which the central Chinese government, in Nanking, has no control, while the authority of the local governor, Marshal Chang, is, in practice, reduced to a shadow by the presence of Russian and Japanese troops. Moreover, it is not clear that the Japanese troops, in this instance, acted on any higher authority than that of local commanders, and there are undisguised hints of a break between the Japanese foreign office and the war office over the outburst of hostilities.—The Century.

THE CHURCH'S MAIN BUSINESS

The Right Rev. Michael Furse, Lord Bishop of St. Albans, who arrived in this country a few days ago, to make an address at the general convention of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church in Denver, September 16, asserted that the members of the clergy seem to forget too frequently that their duty is to give religion to the people, in their efforts to supply the needs of the parishioners. "My idea of the Church is that it is to do its own job. And that is what I tell the clergymen," Bishop Furse said. "And as the Church has a definite job to do, it must take to try to compete—as a sort of general entertainment—the cinema. I believe in helping clergymen to become preachers in their own field. People come to church for religion, and we should give them."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ODD BIBLES

The largest Bible is said to be in the Royal Library at Stockholm. The covers are made of solid plank four inches thick, the pages, which are made of parchment, are a yard in length and number 309. The famous thumb Bible in the theological collection at Washington is the smallest complete Bible ever printed. A New York man's son, a cripple, is reported to have spent 100 hours a day for two years transcribing a Bible. We are told it does not contain an error in transcription and that the initials and headings are beautifully engrossed in red ink. A Bible is exhibited in London, the work of an apprentice of James II, when even to possess a Bible was held to be a crime. An American woman owns a Bible which she has baked in a loaf of bread when a house to house collection was being made for copies of the Scripture.—The Way.

JEWS IN HOLY LAND STILL EXPECT MESSIAH

The coming of a "kingly Messiah" to restore the Kingdom of David is imminent, in the belief of thousands of Jews in the Holy Land. Burdened by many obstacles in trying to establish a national home for their race and still involved in quarrels with Moslems here, the Jews believe the day is near when the fulfillment of the Old Testament prophecy of Eze-

s are said among the 50,000 orthodox Jews for the coming r leader. Recent threats of conflict with Arabs have served nsify the belief of both worshippers and priests that the have ourselves, and which will be of little effect for self-on if we don't. It will make little difference who wins the orld war, should there be one; no one will be left to enjoy ts of victory, not even the profiteers. And the more elabor-e as a nation prepare for war, the more will we be responr it, if it occurs, and the more likely are we to be brought the dust, if the fate of Germany in the last war has any on the case. The time was never more promising of results w to oppose the large and extravagant expenditures of the y advocates,—now, when the President himself is insisting also a most opportune time to speak out in behalf of the conscience against war, and nowhere does the steel-gloved militarism rest upon the church with promise of heavier e sinister effect than when it denies the right of conscience war on the part of Christian men and women applying for hip. If it is to be the continued and settled policy of our ment to refuse citizenship to applicants who have no other ication than that they cannot promise to do combative ser-war or to engage in a war that is unjust, how long will there eption from military service granted to native citizens who conscientious scruples against war? It is time for pacifist to speak out and no longer hold their peace. If we do our influence be felt now in favor of the right to exercise ice against war, what kind of treatment can we expect when spon us?

Seventh Day Baptists have recently taken action that is a ample, not only for our conferences but for congregations el. Taking note of the Supreme Court's decision in the case ossor Macintosh, they passed the following statement:

General Conference of Seventh Day Baptists in session at d N. Y., August 18-23, 1931, in considering the recent Suourt decision refusing citizenship to Prof. D. C. Macin-Miss Bland, which involves principles of liberty of cone that we hold dear, makes the following declaration:

While a nation "has a duty to survive," yet its first duty is

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Esther 1:1-9. The feasting and reveling of Ahasuer-us was only in keeping with the luxurious splendor of the oriental kings. The people were impoverished with unbearable taxes in order to support the extravagant orgies of the king; and perhaps there is not as much difference between these oriental monarchs and our modern grafting politicians as one might wish! Certainly it makes us long for the days when he shall come whose right it is to rule, who will rule his people in justice and righteousness, considering always the good of his people rather than their exploitation. "Come, thou almighty King!"

TUESDAY

Esther 1:10-12. Many times have we heard Bible teachers condemn Vashti for refusing to obey the command of her royal husband; rather she is to be commended! She could not but have known the heavy penalty that would fall upon her for her disobedience, yet she refused to agree to the king's plan to parade her physical charms before the eyes of the drunken revelers. In these days of "bathing beauties," and general moral laxity, how we admire women with the chastity and courage of Vashti! Praise God for the great numbers of sanctified Christian women who do live in honor and chastity in spite of the fact that it never gets in the papers!

WEDNESDAY

Esther 1:13-22. The principle that the husband shall be head of the house is thoroughly scriptural, but these maudlin princes were not concerned with a principle:
they were merely "yessing" the king and getting even with Vashti. They remind us of some of the false leaders in every denomination who endorse principles that are sound in themselves merely to further their own selfish purposes. The ease with which the king put away Vashti emphasizes the greatly superior status of woman since the time of Christ—in spite of Reno! Let us pray for sincere leaders, and praise him for the softening influence he has had on the hearts of his people.

THURSDAY

Esther 2:1-4. This might be called one of the first beauty contests, and a royal prize was offered. Mere physical beauty, however, is a very poor basis for marriage: if we could only learn, even today, that unless there is a deep, chaste love it were better not to marry at all, much of the human misery might be avoided.
"Husbands love your wives"—"and the wife see that she reverence her husband."

FRIDAY

Esther 2:5-7. How intricate and beyond human understanding are God's plans! A great crisis was soon to come upon God's people, and here was a man, Mordecai, taken captive and exiled from his own country, in a position where he was enabled to further the plan of God. Perhaps God had some reason for having placed us just where we are: are we willing to be led and used by him to fulfill his own good purposes?

SATURDAY

Esther 2:8-17. Although quite common in his day, the king's method of selecting a wife was an unholy thing; however, we are led to suppose that when he met Esther it was not merely a physical attraction, but a more real and lasting love. He maketh even the wrath of man to please him.

SUNDAY

Esther 2:18-23. Through Esther and Mordecai the king's life was spared, and God later used him to save his people. Even though our rulers are frequently not all that they ought to be in the sight of God, it is our duty to pray frequently and earnestly for them. They have been placed in a position of authority, and may either help or hinder the cause of Christ: we should pray that they may be used of God for his glory. This is especially true when we have Godly rulers, who need the strength and encouragement of God's people.

Report of the General Secretary

Of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church for 1930-31

EDITORIAL NOTE

The following report is that of the General Secretary of the National Sunday School Association for the past year. It is the fullest and most complete statistical report our Board has received for many years. Rev. N. V. Leatherman deserves great praise for the work he has already done for our denomination as secretary of our Board. He has been efficient and active in the work. This report speaks for itself, however, yet a personal word of thanks to him certainly is in order at this time and in this section of the Evangelist.—M. A. S.

Approximate number of schools in the

Brotherhood .....	165
Number reporting in 1929 .....	25
Number reporting in 1931 .....	93

The total Average attendance reported in these 93 schools, 12,214. This gives an average for these schools of 131 each Sunday during the year. Presuming the other 72 schools not reporting have an average attendance equal to two-thirds the average attendance of those reporting, (the larger schools reported in the main), which would be 87 in number, this would make an additional 6,264, or a total of 18,478 who attend Brethren Sunday schools each Sunday. Your secretary proposes that this gives the most accurate view of the actual strength and interest demonstrated in the Brethren church.

For the encouragement of Sunday school workers making reports asked for we are here giving the list of the first ten schools reporting in sequential order.

1. Flora, Indiana.
2. Danville and Homerville, Ohio.
3. Hamlin, Kansas.

Editor's Select Notes on Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for October 25)

Paul in Corinth

Scripture Lesson—Acts 18:1-17; 13.

Printed Text—Acts 18:1-11.
Devotional Reading—1 Cor. 13:1-13.
Golden Text—Now abideth faith, love, these three; and the greatest is love.—1 Cor. 13:13.

Introductory Note

Paul, having been driven from Berea by persecuting Jews from Thessalonica, Athens. There he noted the conditions, circumstances and trends of thought. He saw that with all their boasted wisdom, four out of every five were slaves of the devil. He beheld the city full of idols, that his spirit was provoked with "burning with indignation," that it should be dedicated to idols, instead of true God and the uplifting of the race. He strove to lead them to God and to Christ and through him he was called before the council of Areopagus, where he uttered the words given in the rest of the chapter. (—Adams.—Christianity was first introduced into that city of vice (Co his second missionary journey, Ac-giving with two pious Jews and main-himself by his own manual labor, his work here, as elsewhere by himself first to his own country-after he had preached for some the synagogue, the same hostile ations which had driven him from nica broke out at Corinth also. Sus-however, by a special divine promise ction and success, he continued year and a half; and when at the at time, he sailed for Asia Minor, he left a numerous and flourishing Illustrator.

The Task

s only to take a good look at Cor-sense somewhat of the task there why Paul could say later to the n church, "I determined not to anything among you, save Jesus and him crucified." Or if one is ever to doubt the efficacy and deny the a cross-centered gospel, all he do is to ask where such a gospel applied and to start answering his by studying the situation at Cor-mental picture of the place first.

was a wealthy commercial center, in its strategic position on the routes but in the development of ries as well. It was a manufactur-ell as trading center. Dye-stuffs, different kinds, pottery, armor—a few of the products made. The Corinth from these two activities, nd selling, was well known.

se, Corinth was the center of the worship of Venus, introduced, we by the Phoenicians who were at-the city by its trading and man-ing possibilities. So notable was its ness, that it gave rise to a verb "thianize," meaning to debase, or an excessively immoral life.

eat such a center as this, proverbial ealth and for its vice, that Paul la-a year and a half to establish a the foundation principle of a crusion. Well he knew that "excellen-speech," or "worldly wisdom" could such a situation. He needed to heart of the gospel to bear on the of Corinth.—Adult Leader.

The Man

ight well ask of Paul "What man-an is this?" The task at Corinth most impossible and yet Paul started there. Imagine, however, his ar-city. Already you are aware of absorption in material interests tentious practices. The outlook for isn't very promising. There is ashed church waiting to greet him.
talk over with his companions the to be used, for he has left Silas thy behind. He is alone in the if he has any misgivings he must na with himself. There is no great constituency behind him guaran-funds to carry on. His private ems to be nil. So in order to keep must ply his trade of tent-maker.
urns because of the need of the is Christ, yet he must patiently himself he sews his canvas. The ning of Paul's soul was that Is-be saved, but another thorn is at Corinth, as the Jews begin to blaspheme. He found no comfort from the general group of his own countrymen.

This background also gives to us a deeper appreciation of the man Paul. A man of lesser parts could have found no encouragement in that outlook, but he starts to work where he can, setting the example for that great host of pioneer missionaries who have faced the same problem from his day to this, men and women who in difficult situations and with meager beginnings laid foundations for permanent and far-reaching work.—Adult Leader.

A Shrewd and Able Official

Portia, in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, proves a very astute and able judge.
Gallio, as he is described in the book of Acts, displays a wily strength which fairly astonishes us as it may well have astonished the men and women of his own time. He is not a very lofty figure. He does not suggest rare and gracious spiritual attainment.
He is a keen man of the world not without a clear sense of justice. He does not propose to be entangled by adroit men so that

What Is Expected of Youth As A Good Citizen?

By Floyd Sibert, Citizenship Superintendent

At no time since the Olympian games have the demands on youth been greater than they are today. In the field of education a well rounded preparation topped out with specialization is necessary to insure success. Standards are being lifted and goals of attainment are pursuing an ever receding horizon. This is the challenge of youth in the field of education! and it is good, for it demands and calls forth the best effort.

Youth may, however, meet this challenge,

Rev. Floyd Sibert
Our New Citizenship Superintendent

fulfill its demands, and still not be good citizens. There are two standards of citizenship for youth, good and bad. The expectations or demands made on these two classes are as different as light and darkness. "A tree is known by its fruit." We do not expect to pick sweet apples from a sour apple tree.

But what are the demands of good citizenship for youth? First of all, they are infinitely more than his best efforts in the field of education, for good citizenship has to do with clean living. If a young man would be a good citizen he must present to the world a good life. Citizenship is right living. A man may lose his citizenship by wrong living. The man who dies ceases to be a citizen of this earthly kingdom. Since citizenship is judged by the manner of our living we should choose carefully the citizens with whom we live. Bad associates corrupt good morals. Moses said, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil."

There are times in the days of youth when it is better to walk alone—alone with God.
From James comes the stern command to keep one's self "unspotted from the world."
This does not mean that we should be ascetic, but rather that we should keep ourselves aloof from the sinful activities of the world enough so that the acid splashes of sin do not spot and scar our life and character.

Youth, to be a good citizen, must not forget his responsibility to government. The Holy Spirit, through Paul in Romans thirteen, tells us that human government is ordained of God. The Christian is commanded to be in subjection to the rulers of the land.
A poor government is better than no government at all. It is God's will that we should live under rule.

No nation has more reasonable laws than our own. When we fulfill its laws, we are fulfilling the commandment of God. Did you ever think of that? When we break a law,—whether we exceed the speed limit or take the life of another,—we are disobeying God. The Christian is commanded to submit to the law, provided it is not contrary to the will of God. Paul said, "We ought to obey God rather than man."

This brings us to the final test of good citizenship. To be a good citizen, one must be a Christian. Paul's advice to youth is that he lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset him: put aside every encumbrance and run with patience a winning race. If he would run such a race he must keep the bodily passions in check, the mind clean and the heart pure. A good citizenship is one of purity and a citizen of purity is one who has citizenship in heaven.
"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; and, therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not. Behold now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be;
but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him PURIFIETH HIMSELF even as he is pure." 1 John 3:1-3.

Twenty-Five Years After

We are living today in a new world of opportunity and peril. The war has drawn a sharp line through the history and program of every political and social institution. The cause of Christian Internationalism (which is the cause of Foreign Missions) has been affected in notable ways. A new generation has come upon the scene. New attitudes are being formed. New theories prevail. There is a new layman to be enlisted, and he has the chance of the ages. If a considerable number of influential churches should utilize the anniversary on November 15, aligning their laymen for mission study and mission support, there may, almost certainly there will, emerge a demand for organization on a national scale.

In the briefest possible form I will attempt to state what appears to be to be the conditions of success in any attempt to rally our Christian laymen to a new and effective support of missions.

1. By reading, study, discussion, they must be made intelligent upon world conditions as these affect the prospects of Christ. Where are we in the progress of the Kingdom? What are the new forces, favorable and unfavorable, with which we have to deal? What changes are demanded in missionary attitude, theory and procedure? What are the demands of stewardship in a day like this? Unless our laymen will contribute brains as well as money, their consecration will not avail. As Mr. J. H. Oldham, of the International Missionary Council, once remarked, "In the Church, as in the political realm, the future lies with the man who thinks."

2. The new movement, like the old, should be interdenominational, strictly so. It should not split up into affiliated denominational movements for men. In my opinion, the old L. M. M. was seriously weakened by the denominations taking up the idea on their own account. The result was that in many cases our business men were allowed to visualize the work as denominational propaganda. Thus the larger incentive was lost. That our laymen should be loyal to the boards of their respective communions goes without saying. The existing boards should be recognized and utilized as the first charge upon their interest and generosity. But always with the Kingdom plans and the Kingdom interests in view. The laymen of today have it in their power to reenforce immeasurably the conception of missions as the enterprise of a steadily unifying church, one direction, at least, in which we can dispose our forces for the success of Christianity as a whole.

Another consideration is the advantage of a strictly inter-denominational movement in respect to freedom from the network of restrictions and relationships which characterize our purely denominational efforts. I am not objecting to these; for the most part they are necessary; within their sphere they are of great value; but there should be room for the free movement and initiative of uneccelesiastical groups. If the laymen of the various denominations are allowed to do their own thinking and their own planning, every board should be the gainer. The genius of our business men has not been exhausted by the invention of the Budget and the Every-Member-Canvass.

3. There is a demand for more intensive work in the realm of adult missionary education than the old-time convention method makes possible. Big conventions may still have their value, but I think the emphasis should be placed upon the reaching of smaller and more influential groups. I have in mind particularly the drawing together of select groups of prominent business men, men who, by the nature of the case, constitute a class by themselves, and whose opinions and example carry greater weight. Also the officers of our local churches. I have never understood why missionary agencies do not seek to deal with church officials by themselves. After all these men and women as our standard-bearers, are responsible for the policy of the church. Without them it is well nigh impossible to carry the congregation; with them great improvement might be made. Why not a convention in each city of church officials, including, by all means, the trustees of the parish.

4. Our laymen must, and certainly will rise above the present timidity in respect to appealing for money. They are dealing with money all the time; they are not afraid to ask for it when a good cause comes along. They are not given to apologizing for budgets. They are not afraid of the word promotion. They know that quick results can be secured when quick work is to be done. They believe that money, as the expression of personality, is sacred. They realize that in the cause of Christ it can be made immortal. Our boards are suffering for lack of a courageous business attitude in respect to money.

5. Finally, in my opinion, our laymen will be free of the timidity of present-day theological speculation. They will want a motive and a message that ring with the faith and the optimism of Jesus. It is inconceivable that they will fall in with the idea that Christianity is but one among many religions of the world, or that the ultimate religion is to be a blend of existing faiths. The Christianity which is based upon the personality and message of Christ they will consider not only better but best. They will want to think of missions as the giving of the best—God's best—to a suffering world. A sympathetic approach to the peoples of other faiths, a glad and generous recognition of high and permanent values in other religions—yes, by all means. But your reality-loving Christian business man, if he is to back a world movement for Christ, is likely to do so because he believes the religion of Christ to be supreme and final.

In recent scholarly work there is this statement of the philosophy of modern missions: "Today we think of the missionary process as the cooperative endeavor of idealists of all nations to produce, the motive of a social religion, an enn- friendly human society of varied tually contributing cultures." W is a good deal in these words to interests and a measure of assent if they will appeal to the averag as an adequate statement of the c tainly there was a more compellin than this on November 15, 1906, w laymen met and prayed and orga Christ in the Fifth Avenue Church problems that no one has taken time to write for the "Evangelist."

The last Sunday in July Brother H. E. Eppley brought his three-year pastorate to a close. It was during his stay that the Roanoke church made its most pronounced building expansion in history, having erected both a new church and parsonage. During this time some very faithful members were added to the roll. We hope and pray that Brother Eppley and his good wife and daughter will be used in their new work at Oak Hill to accomplish even greater things in the Lord's vineyard than they have yet done.

On Saturday, September 12th, Brother Herman Koontz and his family arrived in Roanoke from Masontown, Pennsylvania. They were strangers to the work, and strangers to the entire congregation, except the six or eight Roanoke delegates who were at the National Conference, and it was felt they would feel more at home if they had a chance to meet some of the members; so Saturday evening, in the Sunday school rooms of the church, we had a short program, an informal reception and "pounding" which we hope the new pastor enjoyed as much as we did.

The second Sunday in September Brother Koontz officially began his services with us by bringing two spirit-filled, thought provoking sermons, and the interest in the church services has been increasing. In the short time since their arrival, we have learned to love our new pastor and his family, and we can now thoroughly understand why the Masontown folks were so very reluctant to let them go; but their loss is our gain. Brother Koontz has demonstrated that he is not afraid of work and lots of it, and if he thrives on plenty of hard work, he will be so robust that his old friends will not know him by Conference time next August.

Brother Koontz recently inaugurated a Church Bulletin and it certainly adds a lot to the spiritual tone of the services when the pastor does not need to spend ten or fifteen minutes calling attention to the usual church announcements.

Three weeks ago we started an Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society and immediately they started working and we believe their Superintendent, Miss Winnie Hale, will keep them on the job.

We were told at National Conference that many former pastors were definitely praying for our work and we covet the prayers, not only of these good men, but of the whole brotherhood, for we have problems here that can only be solved by prayer.

MRS. J. HAROLD PUTT, Secretary.

Victory Revival Closes

The first Sunday after National Conference Brother and Sister J. H. Foster were with us morning and night, presenting the African work. We used them very extensively the days while they were here. They addressed the Missionary Society, the Quads, spoke before Sunday school classes, and at the Brethren Home. They made many friends while here and a welcome awaits them whenever they can return.

The next Sunday following the visit of the Fosters we launched out in our revival campaign. Our attendance and interest was very good from the start. Whether it is natural or not, it usually takes about a certain length of time for a meeting to get under way and for some of the folks to get

LYDIA, MARYLAND

In our last report we have passed the summer vacation period. During the month of August we followed some plan as last summer, only on a smaller scale. This time the manor conference of the Church of the Brethren in Lydianus and the Downsville Christian Union Sunday evening outdoor services being well attended and varied by the people of the community. Meetings served a twofold purpose, each of the pastors had a two week visit without discontinuing services. Second, we were brought closer together of different denominations and became acquainted as citizens of the community.

We feel quite keenly the effect of the depression, our church work suffered in the matter of attendance. There has been a noticeable increase in attendance at the church services during our regular services after the Sunday school attendance increased approximately twenty percent.

We find the time opportune for an annual meeting here this fall or winter. Due to financial conditions the conference does not feel able to bear the expense of an evangelist. And since we have already conducted three campaigns we do not feel justified in undertaking another. We would therefore be glad to corral some pastor, who has a similar experience, with the view of exchanging one evening, October 25, the St. Michaels church will observe Holy Communion. All members are urged to be present. Neighboring Brethren are invited. W. S. BAKER, Pastor.

ROANNO, INDIANA

Most of the church has been moving steadily under the efficient leadership of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Maus and this is indeed fortunate to have a new pastor.

The most worthwhile achievements of the year were accomplished during the months of July and August. On June 29th we held our quarterly business meeting with the consent of the church. It was before the church for discussion whether or not the church would care to discontinue service during the last two months of the year. The vote was taken and was unanimous in favor of it. These services were enjoyed by both old and young and the attendance kept up splendidly. The requests to continue this plan of worship encouraged the pastor to have it brought before the Sunday school for final decision and there were no objections. This is a wonderful step toward encouraging a more worshipful atmosphere during the church service.

It is the task of the church to bring the lost, careless and indifferent to the fountain of life from whence flows the stream of purification, and to aid in destroying the dross of life so that Christian character may be formed. Pure ideas should be kept before the youth of our churches and the adult church members should try to inculcate into the minds of boys and girls a feeling of reverence for the worship program on the Lord's Holy Day.

The habit some have of leaving after Sunday school is dismissed is growing throughout our land and we are made to wonder what the outcome will be in a few years. With a professing Christian every pull of his heart ought to be heavenward, Godward and Christianward and if people are too much centered upon the material things of this life to enjoy the hour of worship it is rather a good indication that they are not where God wants them to be.

The regular quarterly business meeting was held on the evening of September 29th. The officers for the Sunday school were elected as follows: George Giltner, adult superintendent; Keturah Leedy, secretary; O. P. Comer, treasurer; Mable Shillinger was retained as superintendent of the children's division. Two trustees for the church were elected,—they are Samuel Anderson and Clyde Rager.

On the evening of October 12 the communion services will be held in the basement of the church. Every member is urged to be present. We should not forget the command of our Savior to observe these things until he comes again. Lest we be found not watching and ready.

A welcome will be extended to those who will come and share with us the joys of Homecoming day on October 25.

MRS. CLYDE RAGER, Corresponding Secretary.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

their work adjusted to services night after night. However, we had splendid audiences for each service. Some people came twenty-five or more miles to be present. Brother Everett Myer, a local boy, who is the regular choir leader, demonstrated that it was not necessary to import a singer. He ably led the singers night after night in the fine old Gospel hymns, and he proved as fine a helper in this campaign as I could ask. We tried to preach the plain old Gospel without fear or favor, but in a friendly and sympathetic way. People seemed to like it as they came back for more, and that is usually a good test.

Many new friends were made for the Church. Folks came who had not been regular attendants for some time. The total visible results were fourteen confessions, fourteen baptized, and fifteen received into the church. The fifteenth was one who had been baptized this spring but had not been received. One entire family of three, was received,—father, mother and daughter, and entrance was made in some new families that will open new territory for us. Prayers were answered that had been made for a number of years when a successful business man who like the Rich Young Ruler only, "lacked one thing," stepped out and surrendered himself to the Master. The meeting closed Sunday, October fourth, with Rally Day in the Sunday school in the morning with the largest attendance in four years, a basket dinner in the dining room when an estimated crowd of 250 enjoyed the bounteous dinner, and a fine service at night followed with a baptismal service. Twenty-eight members have been added to the membership rolls of the church since we came here March 8. We feel though that this meeting has just begun to make us acquainted with the field and to present our opportunities to us.

An encouraging sight Monday night which gladdened not only the heart of the pastor but the older members as well, was the fine attendance for the Communion service. Every one of the new members was present with the exception of one who was compelled to be absent on account of sickness. I was told that the attendance was the best that they have had in recent years. There is still room for improvement. Sickness, rain, and a death in a local family kept some from the service.

The field here is over-churched and there are many duplications of efforts, especially along "Dunkard" lines, but there is yet room for the old time Gospel. The work here is not easy, neither is it easy anywhere else for that matter, but we feel that much can yet be done. We covet the prayers of all interested that we might be led by him and kept in his will in the work here.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

J. D. FINDLEY—AN APPRECIATION

Sometimes we men in the active ministry lose sight of the loyal, consecrated laity who stand back of the church and the pastor. Were it not for them perhaps many of us who are preaching would be elsewhere but in a pulpit.

I feel led to add some words of appreciation to what has gone before of one who has meant more to my life than most men, the late Mr. J. D. Findley. He came to Glenford, Ohio, not many years after the Johnstown flood, and continued the mercantile business that he had been engaged in in the Flood City of Pennsylvania. I do not remember a time when I did not know him.

His store contained priceless treasures in the eyes of a small country boy who was privileged to peer behind its counters. Mr. Findley always knew just what interested boys and no matter how busy with his trade, he took time to bestow some little gift which would delight a boyish heart. I think in my boyish world that if some one would have offered me a ticket to heaven or an opportunity to stay with Mr. Findley, I would unhesitatingly have chosen Mr. Findley. His home was also wide open. He was very loyal to the Bible and the Brethren church. As there was not a church in Glenford of the Brethren faith he drove practically every Sunday four miles in the country to church over all kinds of roads. One Sunday to the Baracha Brethren church, four miles east of Glenford where he taught his class of boys, of which I was one, then he acted as chorister for the church services. He had a special talent for handling boys, for teaching and for music. The next Sunday he would drive the four miles west of Glenford to the Bethel Brethren church where he would repeat the process followed at the first mentioned church. These churches have been torn down and naught but the spots where on they stood remain, yet those spots are hallowed with sacred memories. I preached my first sermon in the old Baracha church and also preached a number of times in Bethel. Many of the men preaching today have preached in both of those churches. Mr. Findley encouraged me in every way possible in my wobbly start. His cheery words, "My Boy" with which he always greeted me, helped me over many a place of discouragement! His son Winfred and I became bosom chums from childhood. We were together in the Sunday school class, children's service at every possible opportunity, winter or summer, roomed together several years at Ashland and continue in that same spirit today. Fifteen years ago or thereabouts Mr. Findley retired from the arduous cares of mercantile life and moved near Richmond, Virginia, finally locating outside the city of Hampton where he lived upon a beautiful old southern farm until his death.

It was my privilege and pleasure to visit him just two years ago. I was pained to find him broken in health and his body racked by a severe cough, but that old cheery spirit that I had known for so long was still there. Unfortunately the church had lost his services while he was in Virginia but he kept well informed along all its lines. He never lost his interest. While he attended a Presbyterian church in Hampton, he was ever loyal to the whole Gospel. For instance one morning in the large mens' class which if I recall correctly was taught by the pastor, a great tirade had been made against baptism by triune immersion. The class fell in with their leader evidently. However the teacher was magnanimous asked if there was any one who cared to say a word in defense of the subject. Mr. Findley who had sat silent through the discussion, arose and that class and preacher received such a lecture and plain presentation of the matter that the day was won by the minority present, Mr. Findley. The teacher weakly said, "We will not take time to discuss the matter farther."

The loyalty, faith and ability of Christian consecrated men like that who fearlessly stand for their convictions have made the Brethren church what it is today.

When we left the cozy old Southern Home after two days of visiting and reminiscening, we said goodbye. The old handshake and a "Good Luck My sure to come back" was pleasant to my ears as we headed into the work he has preceded me into the work. I think when I meet him I shall hear words I have so often heard, "My dear son, are you?"

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN IN BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

This season's work began with an evangelistic campaign among our Brethren in Beaver City, Nebraska. Here is a place that in days gone by has been one of the best churches of the Mid-west district. The work has always been most loyal to the interest of our brotherhood. So the greatest leaders of the Brethren church of a generation past gave of their time of their ministry to this church. However, in recent years this work has fallen into such a multitude of various hands that it seemed that the very existence of the church was threatened.

Many months ago the Secretaries of the Home Mission Board began corresponding with these folks to the end of electing a pastor on the field. They had discouraged a pastor for quite some time. Discouraged had they become that only a few believed that the church could be revived at all. Even to these a great leap of faith, but finally they left proved their faith and courage in our word that they would make a tremendous effort to revive the church that we should obtain for them a man whom we felt could revive and lead the work. Within a few weeks Bro. Leonard Blood of Philadelphia, Pa., who had just completed his preparation for the ministry and ordained in his home church, arrived in Beaver City to take charge of the work.

Things seemed most discouraging at first, but faith and hope began to bear their fruits and courage returned with confidence until the work had so much to seem to justify the holding of an evangelistic campaign at this time.

The meetings started off slowly but were hard to gain, but from the start slowly but solidly, and until the end when the front of the church was a wall to wall with those seeking, the meetings grew in interest and attendance. Although we do not usually have spent two weeks more in an evangelistic campaign that the results would have unfolded beyond what they were.

I have never enjoyed speaking more than to these folks, for they love to greatly love the gospel and take pleasure to minister to them. In speaking the credit for the recovery of the church rests largely with the women who refused to give up for the sake, for the sake of their husbands, the Lord whom they love. Good women in the church.

At these meetings a splendid number of young men and young women in the young people's service offered to give their lives in definite and special service to Christ in some special field. So call them. Among these is a young woman, whose heart has been won by the call of the mission field. She expects before many months to be ation for her life's work for Christ in College and Seminary.

these many blessed results gained work that was by many considered redemption we give our blessed Lord glory.

Brother Raymond Blood is proving a most excellent pastor and teacher's Word, he is a most ambitious man, to do his utmost as pastor, as a teacher of the Word of God. He preaches and seeks for them constantly. God give him a rich and fruitful harvest.

Some during this meeting was with brother and his wife who did all that in love and care could exercise to stay both happy and fruitful. They are a fine family of young folks whom we see in the active service of Christ always to come.

They were never more hospitably treated than were in the homes of the people of Beaver City church and community and do not soon forget the splendid way in which they sought to make our stay among them a happy one. We believe that the future of the Beaver City church is assured in the condition that they all work toward realizing that God can do anything.

HAT REMINDS ME

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter

Some time ago a prominent Christian business man, a loyal American, whose name is known to many thousands of people in this country, gave a remarkable demonstration of faith in a man. He possesses considerable wealth and is a faithful Christian. He is interested financially in a bank and it is reported that he gave the key to his safety deposit box to the bank's officials and said to them: "If a condition arises in this bank at which making necessary more funds than I can command I want you to open my safety deposit box and take therefrom bonds to the amount of five thousand dollars and cash them and the proceeds."

What faith in a fellowman! Has any of us such faith in any man? Into whose hands would you be willing to give the key to your safety deposit box, though it contained only one thousand dollars? O yes, all of us surely have faith in and loved ones whom we would trust to the utmost limit. How barren life would be without some fellowmen whom we can trust fully!

What reminds me is that we have a wonderful God who asks us to enter into a life partnership with him here and for eternity.

He tells us that if we will seek first his kingdom and his righteousness he will supply all our needs needful for this life.

He gives us thirty-two promises fully guaranteed by Heaven's bank which will never fail.

Our faith ought to go far beyond any limit in any mere man and cause us to use the conditions of collection and to go to the limit on Heaven's resources.

We can well believe with St. Paul that "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord, and to them who are the called according to his purpose."

That every Christian ought to face the future without fear and with unwavering faith and great courage, determined to do ONLY THOSE THINGS THAT PLEASE HIM, trusting to our God the key to our life, our all!

"My faith looks up to thee, thou Lamb of Calvary, Savior Divine!"

Where Silence is Golden

A GROUP of college students were standing on the campus engaged in animated discussion. Finally one of them was overheard to exclaim: "I'm glad Andy won out, but I wish, now that he's carried off the honors, he'd find some other subject to talk about. He'll lose all the popularity he's won if he's not careful."

Modesty is always becoming but never so much so as in the man or woman who is really capable and has successfully accomplished some fine or difficult thing. While no one can find fault with us for being the best or trying to be the best in our crowd, they are very apt to find fault if we spend all our time afterward trying to prove our superiority. In this as in so many other temptations, it will be found that Christianity will stand us in good stead. A real Christian will never forget that he is a disciple of One, "who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped."—Sel.

he shall serve their prejudices. The men who plot against Paul find that they are completely thwarted when they come into the presence of this master of effective diplomacy whose keen-edged words are like swords. One thinks of another Roman official of a later day, the great Ambrose, who, accepting the Christian faith, became a lofty and influential Christian leader. One would like to have seen what the Christian religion could have made of Gallio.—Church School Journal.

IN THE SHADOW

SLOTTER—Ira D. Slotter was born in Mahoning county, Ohio, March 6, 1871, the son of David H. and Laura Slotter. He passed to be with the Lord on Wednesday afternoon, October 7, 1931, aged sixty years, 7 months and 1 day.

At the age of sixteen Ira Slotter came to Ashland, Ohio, and entered the employ of Brother A. L. Garber as a printer apprentice. Being a conscientious apprentice Brother Slotter became an accomplished and competent printer. For six years following the conclusion of his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman printer at Columbiana, Ohio, and in the state of California. He was then called to the employ of the Brethren Publishing Company, at Ashland, and for twenty-eight years he served the Company, and for most of that time as superintendent of its mechanical department, relinquishing the position when his illness made it necessary. Many of the older members of our fraternity will remember seeing him at our National Conferences on various occasions.

On October 27, 1898, Brother Slotter was married to Miss Cynthia Roseberry, of Ashland, Ohio, and for thirty-three years she had stood by his side as a faithful companion and helpmeet. Sister Slotter is well known to the brotherhood as the faithful Business Manager of "The Woman's Outlook", the official organ of the W. M. S. And for more than seven years she has patiently and lovingly ministered to her husband in an invalidism covering that period.

The surviving members of his family are the wife, Mrs. Cynthia Slotter, one daughter, Mrs. Ruth Brian, of Mansfield, Ohio, an only sister, Mrs. M. Alice Ward, of Long Beach, California, and two grandchildren, Jean Marie and Robert Neil Brian. Other and more distant relatives also survive.

Soon after coming to Ashland Brother Slotter united with the Brethren church at this place and has remained a faithful and consistent member of the church through the years. For many years he was a member of the local choir and a tenor soloist of ability.

For thirty-one years the writer has known Brother Slotter, having served a printer apprenticeship under him in the office of the Brethren Publishing Company. For the past two years it has fallen to my lot to be Brother Slotter's pastor and so the relationship as brethren has been deepened, and at the last it was my sad duty to close his eyes in the sleep of death, being at his bedside as he passed away. A friend has passed on and left us to carry on yet a while until our summons shall come, but life is richer for having known him and witnessed his unflinching patience and resignation during the years of his weakness and suffering.

Funeral services for Brother Slotter were held at the family residence in Ashland, on Saturday afternoon, October 10, 1931. The services were in charge of the undersigned as the pastor, assisted by Dr. Charles A. Bame, former pastor of the Ashland church. Burial was made in the family plot in the Ashland cemetery. The prayers of their many friends ascend for the bereft family in this hour of sorrow, and we can but commend them to the care of him who doeth all things well. DYOLI BELOTE.

Our human love, however deep and strong it may be, is but the faintest spark of the divine flame from which it is kindled. However insufficient we may feel in answering some cry for help, we know that God's love meets every need.

Signs of the Times

by Alva J. McClain

PERILOUS Times Shall Come"

World conditions, as this is being written, are not encouraging. We still have fatuous optimists who assure us, in radio speeches and the written page, that everything is all right, that our difficulties are mainly "psychological," that we are victims of our own fears. But all their parrot-like reiterations do not feed hungry children, give work to unemployed men, nor settle the political problems of the world.

As a matter of fact, there is something wrong with the world. And the trouble is spiritual, not merely psychological. But you cannot expect the unregenerate wise men of this age to believe anything of this kind.

However, it is possible to find some who at least recognize the desperate situation, even though they do not know just what is wrong or what the proper remedy is. H. G. Wells, who is supposed to know something of human affairs, says that "The western civilization is on the brink of an economic and social breakdown. One wheel of the car is already over the brink."

WHAT is the Remedy?

Mr. Wells, never at a loss when it comes to suggesting remedies, tells us what must be done in the present situation. "We must throw out the politicians and speculators before the car goes over."

Doubtless, this is good advice. But the problem is how to throw them out, and after they are out how to replace them with better men. After all, what the world needs, politically is not merely a new group of men, but rather some new men, a set of statesmen born from above spiritually. The world has been giving almost exclusive attention to new parties, new methods, new treaties, and ignoring the most important thing—the New Birth.

Of course, the experts will tell you that the ills of humanity belong to the domain of sociology and political science, and we must not drag religion into the field of science. And that attitude is precisely one of chief reasons why, as Wells puts it, the civilization of our day is on the verge of a complete collapse.

Civilization is like the woman with the issue of blood, trying all the human physicians, not knowing that there is healing in, but the touch of the hem of his Garment.

OUR Troubles

Japan, needing more room for her increasing millions and fearing the advance of Russian power toward a Pacific port, moves an army into Manchuria. Poor China, unable to resist, appeals wildly to the League of Nations. The League, fairly successful in handling small nations, is now facing a real test. The United States does not want a conflict in the Orient, but how to stop it is a problem. If this country moves alone, it will arouse Japanese antagonism. If she works with the League of Nations, Japan will remind us that we have no business meddling with a piece of political machinery which we have rejected. In the end

Japan will probably get what she wants. The nations are too much engrossed with their own internal troubles to apply the severe sanctions of the League of Nations Covenant. And China, if she gets no protection from the United States and the League, will possibly turn to Russia, which will please the Bolsheviks.

President Hoover, by cooperating with the League of Nations, is treasuring up wrath for himself which will break upon his head in the day of election.

It begins to look as if Germany won the late war, at least from the financial viewpoint. Having borrowed billions from the government and the private banks of this country, she spent the money recklessly and now asks for more loans. If the bankers suggest that enough is enough, she rattles the menace of Communism, and the bankers, shivering in their boots, haste to send over more money. But all things must end some time, and it looks like the day of reckoning is at hand. President Hoover suggests a moratorium, which receives wide spread approval, but proves to be merely a mustard-plaster, somewhat irritating but of little value in solving the problem.

Much more might be written, but this is enough to remind the true Christian that when human wisdom fails there is still a "God in heaven" who answers prayer, and who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. We should seek his Face with unceasing prayer and faith in these difficult days, and not forget that the Coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

THE Disputers of this World"

Reading the literature of unbelief which pours forth from modern presses, one might suppose that the present generation is passing through a unique experience. But such is not the case. The scepticism of today may be the worst the church has had to face, but it is not the first.

Dr. Pusey, writing nearly three quarters of a century ago, described the situation of his day in language which would fit the present day just as well. "Everything alike is disputed," he says, "only men use courteous language toward him (God), as to a dethroned monarch, who is to be treated with respect and the semblance of royalty, provided that he transgress not the bounds which his creatures assign to him."

ANOTHER Remedy?

Of all the suggested methods of meeting the present financial depression, the most remarkable comes from a professor at the Carnegie Institute of Technology. The gentleman has a "plan" which contains only two simple points:

First, give the jobless and needy plenty of amusement in the form of games, movies, plays, light farces and musical comedies.

Second, let the government pay the bills. By this scheme, the professor argues naively, a "feeling of gayety" would be produced where there is now depression and fear. Also, he adds, it would give the unemployed army of actors a job.

It is doubtful whether watching the antics of Charley Chaplin would put much gayety into the heart of a man without a job and with no food for his hungry children. And furthermore, if one turns from the writings of the theatric to most of the present-day plays and are sad affairs.

The entire scheme smacks of "circus" put on by the Roman emperors to keep the populace satisfied. Reluctant as you will tell you it did not work well.

The Difficulties of French Protestantism Today

One of the best signs in the Church is that leading churchmen are looking toward the necessity of suffering for the sake of Christ and the Church. They do not call his disciples to a soft life, but pointed out the hardness of the way, the terrors of the task. He sent them into the midst of wolves; they would be persecuted and cast into prison; and so they think they were serving God by suffering. How pitiful it seems today when we are willing to endure so little for Christ and that we flinch from testifying to our faith if we have to brook the slightest opposition.

Bearing on this idea, a story is told of Dr. Adolph Keller in a recent number of "Die Christliche Welt." He is writing of French Protestantism at the present time.

He begins with a pathetic picture of old Huguenot times. At Aigueperse, near the estuary of the Rhone, stood the "Tower of Constance," where the women who refused to deny their faith once suffered long and harsh imprisonment. A lofty turret room is still preserved, light glimmers feebly through narrow slits; mere openings, a handbreadth in the thickness of the feudal walls. Prisoners were allowed to go up on the roof of the tower they would see the fortified town from within. Louis sailed for his crusade; and where their husbands were toiling as slaves. One of the women, Marie, spent nearly forty years of her life in prison, without ever yielding to the temptations of the world.

Promoting Tolerance That is Unchristian

rightly understood, is a Christian virtue, and the id have been profited greatly if in its recent past its displayed more of that quality one toward another and differences. But there is a kind of tolerance that is n, and our attention has been called to a demonstration Christian tolerance.

read that there was conducted in Orchestra Hall, Chi-evening of October 12th, an "experiment in fraternity".
of four addresses, one each from a Protestant, a Cath-and an agnostic, given from the same platform. Each s allowed thirty minutes in which to present his views.
Dean Charles W. Gilkey of University Chapel repre-Protestant faith and spoke on the subject, "Why I Am at"; Dr. John A. Lapp, head of the Sociology Depart-quette University of Milwaukee, spoke on the subject, a Catholic;" Rabbi Solomon Goldman, spiritual leader
e Emet Congregation of Chicago, was the brilliant Jew-selected for the occasion; and Clarence Darrow, cele-brial lawyer, presented the agnostic viewpoint.

from the distinguished character of the speakers, we expected to learn that the vast throng that filled Oral to overflowing was greatly enlightened as to some of ding and unique characteristics of the different faiths faith represented, but the editor of The Christian Cen- ting the event, says, "There is scarcely a single proposi-which any two speakers take definitely opposite positions.
characteristic and distinguishing features of the various are scarcely even hinted." It seems that the speakers, those representing positive religious faiths, spent a aying next to nothing. Doubtless that is what was ex-them. But it is passing strange that a Protestant minispend thirty minutes telling why he was a Protestant ing issue with a Catholic representative on such subjects and the Priesthood of Believers, and without locking the Jewish speaker on the Person and Work of Christ.
even have been so tame and unassertive with regard to and the fundamentals of religion as not to have drawn an agnostic.

ot their differences in belief that was wanted, apparently, their similarities. They were to see how well they could together in matters of religion and irreligion. They to emphasize fundamentals and distinctions, but the inci-ed common possessions. They were to show how little essed worthy of serious disagreement, and how easily they ate one another's views. The Catholic speaker declared s church because "it is a church of all sorts of people, oor, educated and ignorant, and is therefore a democratic Dr. Charles C. Morrison retorts: "Czarist Russia was on the same terms, for it contained all sorts of people."
stant preacher also said he liked Protestantism because cratic," because "it represents religion as a way of life," e "it now faces the duty of opposing all forms of injusthe rabbi praised Judaism because it "urges the princcial living." All could agree on that, even Mr. Darrow.
nists had affirmed nothing for him to deny, or disbelieve.
could say he didn't know or couldn't know about. And ould be no disagreement, and the impression would be that there was little to disagree about. It is not surt even the liberal editor of The Christian Century ques-worth and wonders "just how much is accomplished by us," and concludes by doubting "whether popular under-the great religions and irreligions was much advanced."
nk The Baptist editor grasped the aim and significance when he suggested in announcing the event that it was for the purpose of "promoting tolerance."

Such tolerance is not Christian. We certainly do believe in cultivating the spirit of self-control in the face of conditions and claims that are in disagreement with our own, and further, in maintaining a kindly, considerate spirit, as is becoming to a Christian, but we do not believe in compromising the truth in order to reach or approach an agreement with those who are directly and openly set against the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. A Christian ought to live peaceably with, and be helpful toward, all men regardless of religious belief or lack of religious belief, but that does not require him to make a spiritual brother of an atheist, nor obligate him to engage in religious fellowship with one who denies the Lord Jesus Christ. As Christian people we meet on a common religious footing with those who confess Jesus as both Lord and Christ. And any effort to bring together Christian and Jew and Catholic and agnostic or atheist with a view to promoting a spirit of tolerance for an un-Christian or anti-Christian system should be frowned upon and shunned. For we must be true to Christ.

The Laymen Will It

We ministers need not take on airs, because we happen to occupy positions of leadership. The church is not ours, nor of our making, nor can we do anything with it or for it that counts for very much,
of ourselves, without the laymen. We are dependant upon them, owe what we have to them, and should seek to go forward in every undertaking with them and not by ourselves, being ready always to give due credit to them.

Another reminds us that "when Marshal Foch visited this country at the close of the war he had a speech in which he explained that the only reason he was able to carry the heavy responsibility for the spending of human lives, which was his as commander-in-chief, was because "You willed it!" The same principle applies to the church. A local congregation does not exist because of either the ambition or the eloquence of the minister, but because there were laymen who willed that there should be a church. Marshal Foch would have been powerless if his orders had not been supported by the wills of the nations which he represented. So is the church and the minister powerless unless they, too, are supported by the will of the laymen. Especially is this true of our missionary enterprise—at home and abroad. In America it began with five laymen taking refuge in the shelter of the haystack at Williamstown. It has continued because there was a multitude of laymen who believed in it and supported it by their substance. All the ventures of the church in the last analysis owe their existence to the convictions of the laity. On Sunday, November 15, the 125th anniversary of the haystack gathering and the 25th anniversary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement will be observed with Men and Missions Sunday, which is an excellent opportunity for our churches to remind themselves that after all both the local church and our common undertakings owe their existence to the laymen."

And for Brethren laymen, it affords an opportunity to lay the foundation for a great missionary advance at the Thanksgiving season, when the offering for Home Missions will be taken. The building of new churches and the extension of the Gospel message into new communities rests upon the shoulders of the laymen in a very large way. They deserve the credit for most of what has been done, and no advance can be made without them.

We inadvertently omitted comment on "Bell Jingles" this week, but in our next issue we will tell something of the important work
Dr. Bell is doing for the college.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

In Dr. G. C. Carpenter's contribution of last week under the heading, "That Reminds Me", he was made to say that "God gives us thirty-two promissory notes fully guaranteed by heaven's bank that can never fail." What he really did say in his copy was "thirty-two thousand promissory notes" rather than "thirty-two." We are sorry for the typographical error and gladly make the correction.

From Canton, Ohio, comes a report of progress under the leadership of Dr. J. C. Beal, who is now engaged in a three weeks' evangelistic campaign. Bible reading is being featured during these meetings and during the first week, it is reported that 10,600 verses were read. The Sunday school holds up to a splendid attendance. On Rally Day the record showed 315 and on Homecoming Day the attendance was over 300.

A request comes from the Home Mission Secretary, Brother R. Paul Miller, and also from Christian Endeavor officials for the sending of discarded clothing to our mission at Krypton, Kentucky. The request is to any class, society or other church group, or even to individuals to help out our missionaries at that place by sending clothing which they may distribute among the people for a small sum. Take a look into your wardrobes and if you have something useful that you can spare, put it where it will be doing service. Write to Brother Frank Gehman at Krypton for a clothing bag in which to send your clothing.

Brother R. L. Humbert writes of his change of pastorate. For five years he labored with the good people of Lake Odessa, Michigan and made quite an impression upon the community as a Bible teacher. Previous to departure he was tendered a farewell reception. And upon his arrival at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, he was given a welcoming reception and a shower of good things to eat. The McKee church, which is part of his new charge, has recently been painted inside and out. Brother Humbert pays a compliment to the faithfulness and courage of his predecessor, Brother James S. Cook, who is now pastor at Portis, Kansas.

Brother David Bailey, one of the first professors of Ashland College and a member of the Ashland Brethren church, celebrated his 84th birthday anniversary at his home southeast of Ashland on October 16th. He was born in Richland county, Ohio, in 1847 and taught mathematics in Ashland College for several years from the time of its opening in 1879. He was a member of the college board of trustees for 16 years. Brother Bailey is enjoying good health for a man of his age, and was found working on his farm when interviewed by a local newspaper correspondent. We congratulate this veteran professor on his number of years and the service rendered and wish him a continuation of these blessings.

An interesting report comes this week from the Junior Endeavor society of Goshen, Indiana, under the superintending care of Miss Doris Follis. They are learning to do missionary work at home and abroad, sending their offerings to carry the Gospel to foreign lands and by their own voices bringing good cheer and spiritual blessing to the sick of their own community. Such are the natural results of the hiding of God's word within the heart. We invite other Junior workers to tell of some of the things they are doing. Brother C. D. Whitmer, publicity superintendent, of South Bend, Indiana, will be glad to receive your report.

Brother E. M. Riddle, of Warsaw, Indiana, says the work at that place is making steady progress. The Sunday school recently had a recognition service when honor was shown to twenty-nine members for "regular attendance" during the past year. One member, Mrs. Sarah Whitehead, has a perfect attendance record for eight years. Such faithfulness deserves public notice. The organized choir of this church is also said to be a splendid asset and the services of these musicians seem to be much in demand outside the program of the local church. It is a noble two-fold aim—spiritual growth and evangelism—around which the program of this church is being built.

A very encouraging report comes from Elkhart, Indiana. Brother W. I. Duker is the pastor. The maintenance of evening services through the summer months was rewarded with good attendance and with a church strengthened for the year. The mid-week services are well attended and the Bible studies are proving attractive. The Sunday school for Rally Day was 460 and the regular attendance also register an increase over last year's record. These facts still show up strong in their quarterly cash offerings for the ing fund. Brother Duker is entering upon his tenth year of this church.

Brother W. H. Schaffer, secretary of the Pennsylvania conference, supplies us with a report of the proceedings of the meetings at the Third church of Philadelphia, where Bro. Gingrich served as moderator. The out-of-the-district were Dr. K. M. Monroe and Rev. H. A. Kent, the latter giving the National Sunday School Association and Prof. Clivering the Bible lectures. Brother Claud Studebaker is elected moderator and the conference for next year is to be held at the First church of Johnstown.

The business manager, Dr. R. R. Teeter, will be for "Corner" this week, calling upon the membership of the church for support of the "Publications Loyalty Campaign" by the Promotion Committee appointed by the Publication Board. We hope all our readers will not only take time to read what we put out but will take seriously our request to join in the Loyalty Campaign. We firmly believe it is every member's duty, both layman and layman. These publications are your publications—the Evangelist is the organ of the entire church; it belongs to the members of the church. It was brought into existence by the property of the brotherhood by the will of the Brethren in conference many years ago, and the Brethren through their influence have been directing its career ever since. Being a church paper, it ought to have a place in every home, and every member ought to be a booster for the extension of its influence. The times are hard for all of us, but we are sure every loyal Brethren will be willing to go to the point of sacrifice, if necessary, in order to keep his church paper in existence. There are no homes but Brethren homes to which we appeal for support of a paper carrying the Brethren message, and there are no Sunday schools but Brethren Sunday schools on which we can count for the use of our own literature. This is an important matter, and we hope you will pray earnestly before you economize to the point of discontinuing the use of your publications. If you find it necessary to deny yourself of any of the magazines you have been wont to take, we believe your church paper ought to be the very last one to be cut off. And the reason for which we plead is in the interest of the best welfare of the church and every church member. Your home, your family, your own spiritual life need its message as much as it needs support.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, says: "Sunday, October 18th, we begin our revival here on November 1st. During the second week, Mr. and Mrs. E. Richer, singing evangelists from Peru, Indiana, will be at our services. Will be with the Brethren at Maurertown, Virginia, three weeks beginning November 9th. Will be pleased to have prayers of the church in our behalf at these two campaigns."

Brother Mark B. Spacht writes: "The Corinth Brethren Twelve Mile, Indiana, desires the prayers of the brotherhood for half of revival meetings conducted by the pastor, October 1st to November 1st. There are many members of this church who have become inactive. Pray definitely for their reconsecration into active service, as well as pray that many souls may be brought to Christ as their Savior. The pastor desires your prayers may be led by the Holy Spirit in all ways, that self may be gotten and Christ may be exalted."

Pray for a two weeks' campaign to be held in the Corinth Brethren church at Columbus, Ohio, with Brother C. A. as evangelist, beginning November 2.

Advantages, Dangers, Needs and Opportunities

By Charles W. Mayes

the blessing of our gracious Lord, we are privileged to assemble amid the most pleasant of surroundings at the twenty-first Annual Bible Conference of the Brethren Churches of Southern California.

God has smiled upon us, not because we are worthy. He has seen fit to call this particular body of believers who earnestly desire to contend for the faith once and for all delivered to the saints. To this end he has bound the people to the ministry of the Brethren church into a confidence in the Word of God, and a common faith in the Word of that Word.

At the beginning of this conference it is fitting that we bring before our minds, the advantages, the dangers, the needs and the opportunities of the Brethren Church in this Southern California district.

Our Advantages

Our District is a harmonious unit of a denomination, not cluttered with worthless ecclesiastical machinery. We are blessed in not being uncontrollably large. We enjoy a fellowship, a harmony and a world understanding which is a most precious possession, not enjoyed by many of the older and larger denominations.

Conferences, both district and national, are free from political wirepulling so common in many of the conventions. Also our denominational work is not subject to the common criticism which is often heard of "Too much overhead." The Lord has graciously adjusted the work, both home and foreign that the best good may be accomplished with the least expended.

We have a Bible-loving and Bible-teaching ministry. Ministers are students of the Word and as Paul told Timothy, they preach the word, and commit the word to those who shall be able to teach others also.

We have a prominent Bible Teacher from Los Angeles who before the National Conference a few years ago, he testified that he had never seen in any denomination a body of ministers more loyal to the Word of God. The years since that time has been marked by steady growth in the preparation of only the strongest of orthodox ministers to fill our pulpits. At the present time we are glad to announce that the Brethren Church has a Theological Seminary which is one of the best, most thorough, and most orthodox in the United States. What is said of the ministry of our beloved denomination can be said even more strongly of our missionaries in foreign lands. Every missionary under the Brethren Church is a defender of the great truths of the Christian faith, including the Pre-millennial return of Christ. We ministers and missionaries have the great privilege of proclaiming the whole truth of the Word without hesitation or hindrance from bishops, superintendents, or the powers of Christ-dishonoring machinery. It is a privilege to be a minister in the Brethren Church. It is a safeguard against our brotherhood being dominated by the ruling minority or conquerors of the laity. We have wrought such untold havoc in the professing church down through the centuries, we enjoy the privilege of laboring under the Congregational form of government, which we believe is the plan in harmony with the Word of God. To say that this is an advantage to any minister or layman in these apostate days is putting it all too mildly. This vital advantage should be greatly appreciated, carefully guarded, and consistently maintained.

4. Not only does the Brethren Church have the advantage of being able to effectively proclaim and defend the so called fundamentals of the Christian faith, but the Scriptural practices of the House of God as well. This is a far greater advantage than we have sometimes realized. These practices, otherwise designated as ordinances of which I speak were delivered to hold the believers to the fundamental truths of Christianity, and if properly observed and taught in the past, would have been a safeguard against many of the terrible heresies which have all but wrecked the church. How the ordinances as practiced by the Brethren defend the fundamental Christian truths may be briefly noticed.

1. The important doctrine of verbal inspiration of the Bible is defended and maintained in our mode of baptism. This can easily be seen, for if the Bible is not verbally inspired, we would have difficulty to defend our mode of baptism. But if the Bible IS verbally inspired (WHICH IT IS) then not only is our mode of baptism taught but taught so plainly that all other modes fail by far to measure up to the scriptural standard. Hence, for any of our ranks to weaken in the faith of the authenticity of the Word of God would cause them to naturally cease to be Brethren. For this cause, many have gone out from us, but our ranks have remained pure.

2. The foundation doctrines of the Deity of Christ, the Deity of the Holy Spirit, and the truth of the Tri-unity of God are all defended and pictured in our baptism, which according to our verbally inspired Bible is TRINE IMMERSION, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

3. The fundamental doctrines concerning SIN and SINS and God's treatment of the same are revealed in the symbols of water which we follow. Baptism, recognizing the three persons of the ONE GOD, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, marvelously symbolizes our being loosed from the Adamic sin of the natural man which damns the soul. The Father the Son and the Holy Spirit each have a separate and distinct work in producing this salvation.

Again a water symbol, the practice of feet-washing keeps before our minds the cleansing from SINS, the sins of the believer after he has been saved from SIN. A proper understanding of the meaning of these water symbols will be a safeguard against many heresies which have not only been prevalent in the centuries past, but are present today. The false idea of the eradication of the old nature is thoroughly inconsistent with the teaching of the Word, when Christ tells believers, "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Since this act is a symbol of the cleansing by the blood of Christ of those who have committed sins in their daily walk, any one who had had his old nature eradicated and could not sin, would certainly not need such cleansing.

4. The keystone doctrine of the Second Coming of our Lord to gather his saints unto him at the Marriage supper of the Lamb is taught and guarded in the ordinances as they have been delivered. The Lord's Supper or Love Feast again acts as a reminder of that great future marriage supper of the Lamb mentioned in Revelation 19. As it partakes of the nature of a meal, the fellowship both there and here is brought plainly before our minds.

5. The fundamental teachings concerning the Atonement of Christ are brought before us in the ordinance of the Bread and the Cup. These properly understood will keep before our minds the truth of the substitutionary suffering and death, and imputed Life and Righteousness on the ground of the flowing blood of Jesus Christ at Calvary.

If the church of the past ages had consistently practiced and taught the meaning of these ordinances the church would have been preserved from Unitarian tendencies on the one hand and fanaticism on the other. God has made us in these days stewards of some most precious truths. Our responsibility is to maintain the faith once for all delivered in the most minute details as God gives us wisdom and guidance. May God show us what a tremendous advantage it is to belong to, and labor in the Brethren Church.

The Essential Value of Feetwashing as a Church Ordinance

By J. L. Bowman

1. Feet washing is a high test of love and obedience.

By the divine standard love and obedience are measured not by what they profess, but by what they do. If we love Jesus we love to do what he wants us to do. As many as are led by the spirit, they are the sons of God. If he calls us into the vineyard we love to bear our burdens and the heat of the day for his sake. If he calls us into the mission field where the toils are hard and our labor unappreciated it is not sacrifice we are making for him but loving service that we render. If he says, Take up your cross and follow me, we know that the way of the cross leads home. If he asks us to perform a menial service for our brother or sister, we know that service will bring us a rich reward. If feet washing is a high test of love and obedience to your Master, can you stand the test? "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not what I say? Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the WILL of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21). Would you dare by any sort of sophistry to say that Jesus did not do the will of his Father which was in heaven? If he did the will of his Father, how are you going to do his will unless you obey? If you had been in that upper room in Jerusalem the night that this rite was instituted, would you have refused to obey? Jesus says, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. No wonder that feet washing is a high test of love and obedience. But it is a test that brings a promised blessing and the blessing is always commensurate with the cross we take up for him.

2. Feet washing is a symbol of humility.

Humility is a cardinal Christian grace. It is the grace from which other graces grow. The whole teaching of the Book shows that Christians should always be humble. "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" (Luke 14:11).

This shows that the fine Christian graces such as love, worship and obedience have their root bedded in humility. As we stoop to wash our feet we show him by that act that we are willing to do the most menial service for him when in need. Humility is not outward but of the heart and inwardly we regard ourselves not as better than our Master rejoice that we are willing to follow him in menial service. Thus we show to him and to the church that the servant does not count himself to be greater than his Lord, and that the one that is sent does not think himself to be greater than he that sent him. And still further as we stoop to wash our brother's feet we conquer pride, carnality and a natural inclination to forget the very plain and simple teachings of the Word of God. We love and the Savior who loved us. May each of us pray for a deeper grace of humility that will lead to action and obedience. May each of us realize that the more humble we become the more we are like our Master.

3. Feet washing is a symbol of cleansing?

Our Master never washed the feet of the disciples because they were unclean. I know that, because we are clean, and to wash anything that is already clean is to make that washing a symbol. I know the repeated story about the sandy country and the man whose footgear of that day being the reason why he washed the feet of the disciples. This story is all without foundation, and is a slander upon the Lord. The story is the equivalent to saying that Jesus came down from heaven to wash dirty feet, and to do what the disciples could do for themselves. No, Jesus says, I am clean, and the word of the Master ought to settle the matter, if anything could. The original makes it plain. Loosely rendered would read something like the following: "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet, because he is already clean, having just come from the water."

All of you have received baptism in water, and you have been washed away but you need to observe the symbol of cleansing, as a reminder of the fact that you have been cleansed. As water will wash away any particles that might adhere to your feet, so my blood will wash away the very last particle of sin that might cling to your soul. This washing of your feet is a symbol that you have been cleansed from all iniquity and as you now permit your feet to be washed, so you also permit the blood of the Son of God to be applied to your heart that it too may be cleansed. This properly fit you for the Lord's supper and the communion that follows.

4. Feet washing as taught by Jesus is a commandment that has a penalty attached.

Some people may object to this statement. What is the difference? Objections do not change the truth. The ultimate source of authority must be the Word. They must settle and decide the question, and not my opinion in favor of it, or yours against it. Your opinion is just as much as mine and mine is worth just as much as yours, but neither of them are worth anything unless they come to dictating a policy to the Son of God. No man is in honest doubt as to whether feet washing is a command or not, please read John 13th chapter, verse 14 and 17. Now for the penalty attached, read the latter part of verse 8. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me. You say there is still a shadow of doubt in your mind. All right. Turn to Matthew the 28th chapter the 20th verse. Here we have the last commission given by Christ to his disciples and that commission reads: "teaching them to observe all things which I have commanded you." Did you notice the "Al er I have commanded you"? Only on the condi-

 "All things" should be taught as he "com-was the promise given, "Lo I am with you al-unto the end of the age." Feet washing is a "All things," is a command and is covered by nd. If you fail to observe this rite you miss a blessing. Jesus said it and he said what he no greater joy than to hear that my children at to obey brings joy. The servant is not great-is Master, neither is he that is sent greater than ent him. He declares he came to do his Father's the doing of his Father's will he says, "I do al-se things that please him." When in the Jordan om above said, "This is my beloved son in whom I pleased." Jesus was just as truly God's son stooped to wash his disciples' feet as he was in an and the Father was just as well pleased. God pleased when his children are obedient and hum-when they love each other. You ought to love er as I loved you. I loved my disciples unto the

 I, you will do what I ask you to do.

washing exalts the Master by proving your loyalty, e and obedience to him. It shows your love to ner and your desire to obey him in all things. If on the subject of feet washing hear the Master offer it to be so now, for thus it cometh us to righteousness." When you own your allegiance ne owns his allegiance to you? He says, "Them or me will I honor." It does honor him because that we have complete confidence in him and are d willing to follow him all the way. When your bmerged in his, you will have the most blessed p with one another, and he gives you more than ised blessing.

washing is of binding force upon the children of today.

u know any part of the Bible that we have out-r no longer need? Any part of the Bible that is rt of the "All things"? The dusty country, low , and trouble among the disciples are not factors erve discussion. Not one of these things is men-the 13th chapter of John, not even hinted at.
 onquerors are usually world heroes, for the time least. They used the cannon and grasped the Upon what do their victories rest? Usually upon ors, force and genius. Jesus Christ, the world or, conquered by a towel and a basin, conquered and millions today would die for him. The sub-ibition of that love was when he took a towel and He declares, I have no greater joy than to know children walk in the truth, and his word is truth.
 eternal and can never change, never grows old.
 ch and the import of the teaching of the 13th of John is just as young today as it was 1900 cen-go. If one may properly argue that a part of the no longer needed and is of no binding force upon ildren, he might logically conclude that a time will en no part will be needed. The value of this or-will stand the test of storm and time. God will ave children who will willingly obey him:

"Jesus, and shall it ever be,
 A mortal man ashamed of thee,
 Ashamed of Jesus, that dear friend,
 On whom my hopes of heaven depend?"

"If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the Holy city, and from the things which are written in this book" (Rev. 22:19).

A certain Sunday school teacher was teaching a class of boys on the subject, "Angels as God's ministering spirits." She asked the boy at the head of the class how angels could be God's ministering spirits. He studied a little and then said, "Whatever God tells them to do, they could go and do right away." Fine! When a thing is to be done, how we like it to be done right away! She asked the next boy and he said they could do it with all their might. Splendid! A whole-hearted service always pleases.
 She asked a red headed boy sitting next, and he reached up with his freckled hand and scratched his red head and studied a moment. He could hardly think of anything else and finally the light broke in and he said, "Whatever God tells us to do, we can do and do it without asking any questions about it." One hundred percent for that boy. I think he afterwards became a great philosopher.
 What a truth he expressed! If Jesus tells you to do something (for example, wash each other's feet) just do it, and ask no questions about it and a great blessing will be yours.

I close with a quotation from the mother of Jesus,
 "Whatsoever he saith to you, do it," and many blessings will be yours.

Buying Prosperity with Beer

By Georgia Robertson

In order for the brewers to pay into the Federal Treasury $400,000,000 in license fees, as August Busch said they would do with the return of beer, it would be wise for every one to ask himself the following questions, which concern him, whether he be a manufacturer, owner of a mine producing raw material of any kind, an oil well, timber lands, dairy or stock farm, poultry farm, truck garden, cotton fields, fruit orchards, or a merchant, agent, salesman, or has, or expects to have, anything to sell—even his or her own labor.

1. How many million dollars in addition to those $400,- 000,000 promised the Treasury would the brewers have to take out of the pockets of our people before they would pay those $400,000,000 into the Treasury in license fees?

2. How much would spending all those vast sums of money for beer reduce the buying power of the people in purchasing the necessities and comforts of life?

3. Would the employment and wages paid for manufacture of beer and its allied industries, anywhere equal the employment and wages lost by those thrown out of other employments because the people would not be able to buy these other products being made by them, when spending this enormous amount of money for beer?

4. How much in time and wages would also be lost
 Mondays because of Sunday drinking orgies?

We have more food and manufactured goods now than the people who need them are able to buy when not wasting vast sums of money on beer. The grain used in making beer would "not make a dent" in the surplus stocks.

The coming of prohibition caused no financial depression, nor did it flood the market with grain, or the unem-played; then why hope that the return of beer would help remedy these conditions? Beer in abundance has not brought prosperity to England or Germany or saved them unemployment much worse than with us.

It is a weakness of human nature to want to get something for nothing, but the brewers would not give the Treasury the money. As in pre-prohibition times they would first take at least four or five times as much out of the pockets of the people—mostly working people—for beer, out of which they would pay over to the Government $400,000,000 for the privilege of taking more than a billion dollars first from the people. It would not be a gift from the brewers, neither would it be "easy money." Beware of snatching at such a deceptive prize!

Shall we relieve the enormously rich from sur-taxes and put that burden on the shoulders of the working people through the sale of beer?

Which shall it be, milk for the children or beer for the fathers?

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

V. THE EUCHARIST, EMBLEM OF CHRIST'S DEATH

The name "eucharist" means "thanks" and refers to the custom of Jesus, followed by the church, of giving thanks before eating (Lk. 22:19). At first the term was used of the entire Lord's Supper, but later only of the bread and cup.

Ever since the fall of man, the way back to God has been represented by sacrifices, which were typical of Christ, "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8). The most prominent type was that of the lamb slain and eaten in the Passover feast, which feast has been replaced for the church by the Lord's supper. The Passover was a prophecy of Christ's death, but the Lord's Supper is a memorial of it. The climax of the Lord's Supper was the eucharist, which we now study.

I. The eucharist is a memorial of the atoning work of Christ. "Do this," he said, "in memory of me" (Lk. 22:19). The bread and cup are emblems of the new covenant, sealed by the precious blood of Christ. They form a symbol to preserve in the church the fundamental truth that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin" (Heb. 9:22). But in spite of it the modern apostasy is quenching the "preaching of the blood" in many pulpits, as if there were something savage in such a doctrine. It is not a brutal superstition, but an expression of a basic law of nature. "Except a grain of corn fall to the ground and die it abideth alone." "And I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." "He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth it shall find it unto life eternal." The modern spirit of ease and luxury which is shocked at the lowly rite of footwashing, and turns from the Gospel love feasts to social banquets, would also abolish the eucharist, pull down the cross and follow the leading of the carnal mind in the hope of evolving into Supermen rather than sons of God. But there stands the ancient law, and the road to life eternal must ever lead through Gethsemane and on to Calvary. Romanism also has annulled the work of Christ by materializing the body and blood in the eucharist, that the priests may be glorified as miracle workers "creating God," and then ing the work of their hands.

But the true church will continue "in the apostrophe" (Acts 2:42), and to it the "breaking of bread" will ever be a memorial of that love which caused our Lord to die for us. The cross is magnetized with love, so also is the cup, and when we partake of the emblems of the vicarious death we bring to mind, not only the love which illumines the cross, but which also shone from the cross and will light up the heavens when he comes in. The memory of Christ is the memory of a love that is finite, universal and eternal. The eucharist awakens memories and meditations which are inexhaustible of grace for the soul.

2. The eucharist is also a symbol. It represents the present work of Christ in forming his body of believers who, because of their faith, have also been "crucified to the world and the world to them." They "reckon themselves to be indeed dead unto sin and alive unto God." They have died and their lives are hid with Christ in God. They are in the world but not of the world. They have risen to sit with Christ in the heavenly places.

To such the body of Christ is meat indeed and we drink indeed, but they perceive that the body is the spirit and the words of Christ (Jn. 6:63), we partake by faith (vs. 54). When Jesus said "eat, This is my body" he used a simple orientalism which any child can understand. No one stumbles when we use such other expressions as, "I am the door," "I am the light," "Ye are the salt," or "Get thee behind me." To say that "the mass" celebrated by Catholics, is a denial of the sacrifice of Christ is to deny the efficacy of the true sacrifice (Heb. 10:12), and to call it a "denial of sacrifice" is to deny the worth of the blood (Heb. 9:14; Mk. 14:24). The miracle which takes place is the change of bread and wine into body and blood, the change of the carnal nature of the participants into the spiritual nature of Christ. Unless this change takes place we partake of the emblems in vain.

3. The eucharist is also a type. "As oft as ye shall eat bread and drink this cup ye do show forth the death of the Lord TILL HE COME." (1 Cor. 11:26). The Lord is coming again, and then the bride shall be prepared, and the eternal union shall be consummated. We are pilgrims, sent forth as sheep in the midst of wolves, bearing about in our bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus (2 Cor. 4:11), but when we shall come we shall transform our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21). Each participation in the holy eucharist should bring forth tears of grief in memory of the suffering of our Lord and tears of joy at the thought of our gathering unto him in his coming (2 Thess. 2:1). We are to be faithful examples of his love and zeal in the midst of his grace till he comes.

GERMANY'S SUPERMAN—ALCOHOL

It has been the boast in Germany that the nation knows no use of alcohol. No sensible man believed it, and now we learn that Berlin's seventeen centers are hard pressed in the fight against drunkenness, and their staffs are said to be totally inadequate for the summer. The Socialist party has taken up the fight with the government to stop the spread of habitual drunkenness among the employed and the working classes generally. The government has been compelled to withdraw funds intended for the purpose

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Esther 3:1-3. As Christians we are taught to pray for our rulers, and to be subject to the powers that be, since they are ordained of God. However, there are times when the Christian must obey a higher King. Mordecai could not bow down and reverence Haman even though his king had so commanded, for his God had declared: "Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God." He must have known that his action would be reported to the king, and would bring dis- favor, yet he would not violate his conscience. There were many during the late war who were disobedient to those in authority because their God had said, "Love your enemies." May we first of all be true to HIM, and he will show us how far we should obey our earthly rulers.

TUESDAY

Esther 3:4-7. Haman held one of the most exalted positions in the kingdom, and there must have been many who envied him his power and position. Certainly many of the Jews must have thought how unjust it was for so egotistic and unprincipled a man to hold such a position while they must suffer. How fitting the words of the Psalmist: "Fret not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt THOU dwell in the land."

WEDNESDAY

Esther 3:8-15. Could it be that way back there Haman was urging the king to make the world safe for democracy? These Jews that were scattered among all his provinces had laws and customs differing from those of the king, and it was not good for them to dwell among his loyal subjects! So have the people of God suffered throughout the ages because of the polit- ical pretenses of their enemies. At such times how we need the faith of Daniel's friends: "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us ... but if not"—we must still serve him, and not thy gods!

THURSDAY

Esther 4:1-3. The grief of Mordecai was not for him- self alone, but also for the many who seemed destined to suffer with him, for his action. How it must have led him to doubt within himself, and to wonder if after all he had not been over-scrupulous, if the easier way out would not have been better than to involve so many other innocent ones. "For none of us liveth to himself," and in such troublous times we surely need strength from the Lord.

FRIDAY

Esther 4:4-17. There are those who see in Esther's initial reluctance to approach the king, only a selfish regard for her own safety; this scarcely seems in keep- ing with our other knowledge of Esther, and we prefer to believe rather that she merely felt that such a visit would not accomplish the desired end. However, when she realized that it was her ONLY hope of saving God's people, she was willing to risk her own life in the at- tempt. Even then, she would do nothing without the prayers of his people. How much more our work must prosper if we gave prayer a larger place!

SATURDAY

Esther 5:1-8. "Prayer changes things." Esther found favor in the sight of the king, and was assured that her petition should be granted. What comfort to know that we are not dependent upon the caprices of an oriental despot, but may enter his presence with bold- ness, and make our requests known. And our God loves to give good gifts to them that ask him.

SUNDAY

Esther 5:9-14. Haman rejoiced in the success that seemed to be his, but when he saw Mordecai all his joy was turned to bitterness. The ambitions of the self- seeker are never satisfied. As we think of the fate that so soon came upon Haman, we are again reminded of the words of Paul: "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." May we ever be mind- ful that the "World passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Plans that Wide-awake Schools are Using

Gleanings from many parts of the Sunday School field that you may find useful in your school

UNUSUAL PLANS OF UNUSUAL SCHOOLS

By Elizabeth Williams Sudlow

"Exchange Sunday" is one of the special days of a Southern Sunday school. All officers and teachers on that day exchange jobs. In this way the faculty has an opportunity to experiment with some other job and to learn at first hand what some other member is doing.

"Soap Day" is an annual affair in one Sunday school. On this day every member and visitor is expected to bring in one or more bars of soap, either laundry or hand soap. This is then sent to a local institution in which the school is interested.

For the twelfth year the First Christian church of Atlanta, Georgia, had charge of the Mother's Day service in the Federal Prison. Thousands of roses, red and white, were distributed. Only a comparatively small number of people are permitted to take part in this service.

The Broadway Baptist church of Kansas City, Missouri, is interested in having the teachers who work in the Sunday school trained, and manifest this interest by buying all textbooks which the students enrolled in the Standard Training School require.

Once each year in the big Austin Avenue Methodist Sunday school of Waco, Texas, a special service is held in memory of those who once labored with those remaining but have now gone on to be with the Lord. The service is a precious one, and the lives of those who participate are enriched, as for a moment they pause and recall those whom they "have loved long since and lost a while."

In the First Presbyterian Sunday school of Coral Gables, Florida, a part of each service is a "Forget-me-not" number. At this time messages are read from any member who may be absent from the city and who sends in a card or letter of greeting.

Holding the annual Sunday school picnic in the autumn was a plan followed by the late Marion Lawrence when superintendent of the old Marion Lawrence Sunday school at Toledo, Ohio. The picnic was held in connection with the autumn rally. An interesting program of games and sport events was arranged. This brought the membership together and started them off on the autumn campaign in good shape.

Another school that holds its annual Sunday school picnic in the autumn is South Park Presbyterian of Rock Island, Illinois. The picnic is held on Labor Day, and is under the auspices of the Men's Bible Class.

HOW ONE SCHOOL FOUND TEACHERS

By Grace Williams Winston

The need for new teachers was acute in a Southern California Sunday school. The church was small and it seemed as if all the active members were overburdened. The Primary superintendent, who needed helpers the most, thought of two consecrated young women whose health was so poor that they were barely able to attend church after working all week in the city. After prayer and a consultation with the pastor, she called on these two women, laying before each the great need of teachers and the glorious opportunity of being of service to the Master, whom they so loved. She suggested that they join her in prayer that God would strengthen them so that they might take up this definite piece of work.

The first young woman was an experienced Sunday school worker, and after some months she felt able to take an important place, which she continued to fill most acceptably and with increasing vigor for some years.

The second woman had never taught, as her frail health had kept her from following the example of other members of the family who were most active in the church. However, she held a responsible position in the business world, and with her gentle, consecrated spirit, she seemed to be an admirable candidate for Sunday school teaching. To the joy of the Primary superintendent, she soon asked for a class and served most ably in the Sunday school for several years, when her health was so much improved that she felt led to enter a Bible training school. When last heard from, this splendid Christian worker was hard at work in a distant city, rejoicing in the life of service which had so blessedly opened up before her.

Potential teachers are thus brought to light when definite prayer is made. The pastor of a very small church offered a class of children to a college girl who came home Sundays to see her parents. This would seem a rather haphazard arrangement, but he knew the girl was conscientious. Early Sunday morning she was in her class room, getting things ready for the lesson. During Christmas and Easter vacations, she called on her pupils and hunted up new ones. One summer she had a small vacation Bible school for children of Primary age, and at graduation from college she was able to pass on a group of forty children to her successor.

Thus by prayerful searching three valuable teachers were brought to light to the benefit of all concerned.

DEFINITE GOALS FOR CLASS WORK

By Jennie E. Stewart

A class of young people felt that if they were to accomplish a great deal they must work to a definite purpose. They decided to try the plan of setting themselves a goal each week and to expect this goal to be reached. The working committees also set themselves a goal of one worth-while task undertaken and completed each month.

Goals were announced at the meetings and reports made at the monthly meeting. Weekly goals announced in class one Sunday upon the following Sunday. A plan interest was always good, high, and the work done worth while.

Of course many tasks were that could not be completed in a definite part of the task could be finished in the week. For instance, determined to double the average and the actual membership. This be done in a week if permanent were to be assured. But they did themselves the task of calling in person by telephone or by card, every person ever attended the class and who now regularly attending. Their that every member of the class approach at least one person in one of three ways mentioned.

At the same time the membership committee and the absentee committee pledged themselves to have the attendance and the actual membership within a month. Each week of the they set a definite task for the week to accomplish that would help toward the goal. Every goal set was reached.

Another time the social committee set a goal of every member visited by at least four members of the within the month; for the class, goal of every member calling upon one member during the week. The third, and fourth weeks of this the members must call upon different members each week to have the call completed.

Of course the class understood other forms of activities, some for and some outside the class itself were instituted by the class officers for general class activity, while others undertaken by different committees planned weekly goals for the class in cooperation.

It was understood that when one committee had launched a monthly campaign list all the class, no other committee put on a general campaign till this finished and out of the way, though the committee might have a task of its own on the way providing it did not interfere with their taking an active part in the scheme on foot.

For instance, when the Social Committee was having its calling and get-around campaign, the Membership Committee on the lookout for a couple of new members. They called upon them, asked to call upon them, and succeeded in getting them into the class without in any way deriding the calling campaign, but rather adding interest to it. At the same time the Absentee Committee was making their rounds in the interests of their committee, the Sick Committee was making their rounds among the sick, and asking others to include sick members in their calling.

This careful dove-tailing of the various committees in one common interest was a very great help to them since it interested the whole class in the work of all committees.

A BANK FOR SPECIAL OFFER

By Linda De Armond

An emergency bank has become our Sunday school equipment. Through many things we would like to do, our way clear to make use of the Sunday school funds. The emergency cares for such needs. I can with a slit in the top is set in the front of the room; then when are told that they may bring what they have earned, outside of their contributions, and drop it in the Sunday to Sunday. Perhaps it is a penny, a nickel, or even a dime. Children do like the extra things. Children are always told of the needs, and are not mentioned, and the child is asked if they would like to have money used in the way suggested. Alas, they answer yes. Money is used when needed to purchase, in cases of illness or death; music; for food or other gifts for families.

ing the emergency bank the little are taught to think of others and to give money with those less fortunate. (more, Pennsylvania.

World's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

World's Temperance Lesson

(Lesson for November 1)

Lesson—Gal. 5:13-26; Rom. 13:

Lesson—Gal. 5:13-26.

Scriptural Reading—Rom. 14:13-21.

Text—Be not drunken with wine, as riot, but be filled with the Spirit. 1:18.

Introductory Note

was the central part of Asia Minor called because it was settled by Paul had founded churches in this his second missionary journey in Corinth on his third journey from Galatia disquieting news led him to write this letter at once. I come among the Galatian Christians insisting that the only road to led through Judaism, especially circumcision. Paul wrote the letter on the freedom of the Gentiles from the yoke of the Jewish law. But the letters abound in practical teachings as well suited to our day as to earlier part of this fifth chapter of the great freedom under the Christ.—Illustrated Quarterly.

It is a Temperance Lesson to be a temperance lesson, and it fully discovered that temperance are very much needed, even among a people, for not all are temperance, sorry to say. Not long ago a church who likes his beer and wine, wrote or of the Evangelist rebuking him in support of Prohibition, insisting, as for his appetite that the Lord drank wine all his earthly life. Even those who do abstain from intoxicants, there are many who do so with unwillingness and a feeling that personal rights are being imposed on. Whitall Smith writes:

There are two ways of being Temperance men. One is to chafe under what they call a "yoke of bondage" to Prohibition; the other is to walk in the liberty of the Holy Spirit. Every one sees the difference at a glance. In the one the soul is controlled by a stern sense of irksome duty and obeys the law, either from fear of disgrace and punishment, or from expectation of pecuniary advantage or wages. It works for hire, and flees or shirks in time of the pressure of danger or loss. Jn. 10:12, 13. In the other case the controlling power is an inward life-principle that works out, by the force of its own motions or instincts, the will of the Divine Lifegiver, without fear of punishment or hope of reward. These latter serve from love not from aggrandizement. In the first case it is a servant, in the other it is a son. Nowhere do we find these two forms or stages of Christian life more fully delineated and contrasted than in the Epistle to the Galatians."

Self Control

"We often hear quoted these days that the Greek ideal was to know thyself; the Roman ideal to control thyself; and the Christian ideal to deny thyself. But in fact the Christian ideal of self-denial includes the knowledge and control of self and extends into our social relations. One cannot hope to live up to the ideals of Christ without both self-knowledge and self-control, although neither of these are Christian or Christlike without the self-denial which immediately suggests others."

"Paul admonishes us (v. 13) not to use our freedom for an occasion to the flesh. The biggest and stiffest fight any man has to put up with in life is the fight with himself. He who thoroughly masters self-control is greater than he who taketh a city. There are always fightings without the walls of our human habitation but the fears within are the greater enemies."

"This lesson warns against these insidious enemies which affect self-control. It puts drunkenness (v. 19-21) into no pretty company, and warns the man who enters into these works of the flesh that he will cease to be the master of his fate or the captain of his soul." Eliminating all other debasing, filthy and fearful works of the flesh, one might well ask himself on this World's Temperance Sunday the question of the Bard of Avon: Why should a man put an enemy in his mouth which will steal away his brains? Surely self-mastery is gone as long as this continues."

Alcohol and Science

Popular Science monthly says about science and alcohol:

"The fact that there is a Prohibition problem at all is little short of ridiculous. The whole question hinges upon the effect of alcohol on the human system, and obviously this is wholly a scientific problem. Yet... its voice has been lost in the clamor. Let science definitely and conclusively solve this problem."

Here is the verdict of science in regard to alcohol:

1. "Science defines alcohol as a narcotic, habit-forming drug.
2. "Science in biology proves alcohol a poison destructive to all living tissues.
3. "Science in pathology proves that alcohol as a beverage substantially lowers resistance to disease.
4. "Science in medicine proves that alcohol is a poisonous drug and not a food.
5. "Science applied in life insurance proves that alcohol taken even in moderation definitely shortens life.
6. "Science in military training proves that even under rigidly controlled moderation alcohol reduces human endurance and skill.

"Science in government must finally suppress alcohol as the destroyer of human life and happiness."

The Weakness of Prohibitionists

One church man said the other day, "Why all this fuss about prohibition? We have it in the Constitution, and it will stay there. It is a settled question. Why not let it rest?" For the simple reason that it is not a settled question. It is not a dead issue. It is in the Constitution, it is true. But by the same method it was put there it is possible to revoke it. Or, more probable, it may be so modified, the enforcement may, that Prohibition will in truth be lost. And a still greater danger is that nullification shall become so widespread a popular and official attitude that Prohibition will turn out to be only a joke. Prohibition is not self-enforceable. It must have a strong and active public sentiment back of it, and no group of people are so much responsible for the maintenance of a healthy sentiment in favor of

From the Juniors of Goshen, Indiana

Dear C. E. friends:

We are always glad to hear and know what other C. E. organizations are accomplishing and to rejoice in their victories.

We trust that you will be glad to hear what our Goshen Junior C. E. is doing. While many C. E. organizations disbanded for the summer we kept on with our work and suffered little from the summer slump (1 Cor. 15:58).

Our Juniors are very enthusiastic in Missionary work both home and foreign. Our offering at Easter for foreign missions was ten dollars, all the money being given by our own members from our regular Sunday offering. Many of the children have also pledged themselves to pray daily for our missionaries and their work on the field.

We are always happy to do what we can at home, one of the finest meetings we have ever had was held in the home of one of our church members who was an invalid and has since gone to be with the Lord. We sang for her, prayed with her, and each Junior gave a verse of Scripture from memory which is part of our regular Bible work. Our leader then conducted our regular C. E. program. This meeting not only cheered the few remaining weeks which this sister had to live, but it also gave each one of us joy in our hearts to be able to minister to one who was unable to attend our regular church services. (Heb. 6:10).

We are doing systematic Bible work, a part of each meeting being given over to a Bible drill. Hiding God's Word in our heart that we might not sin against him (Ps. 119:11).

We feel we are doing work now which shall develop young leaders and prepare the children to take charge of the work which our older people shall later turn over to them.

Wishing you all success in your work for Christ and the church.

(MISS) DORIS V. FOLLIS,
Junior C. E. Superintendent.

"AN URGENT NEED IN OUR KRYPTON FIELD"

In a letter just received from our Home Mission Secretary, Brother R. Paul Miller, he says:

"Dear Brother Vanator:

"Word has just come from Krypton that they are in great need of winter clothing. The cold snap came suddenly down there and has about exhausted their supplies."

Short and to the point. Knowing the interest of the Endeavorers centers in this particular field, Brother Miller knew just where to come to make his appeal. His communication was meant to be forwarded to every Endeavor Society in the brotherhood, and as your representative on the Home Mission Board, he is expecting that I make this request for immediate action. May we not quickly heed this call and get our bags of clothing off to Brother Gehman AT ONCE? Let each reader of this short note, take heed and bring the matter to the attention of the society of which you are a member. It does not make any difference if one society of you make the same appeal to one society. BUT DO IT NOW!!!

year of full time ministry. Brother has been serving the church in a wonderful way. May the church continue willing to be led by the Spirit into fields of usefulness, that his name be glorified.

CANTON, OHIO

The Canton church observed its Field Day on October 4th. With no great effort forth, as we have always done previously, the attendance reached the 315 mark. We feel was very good. The Field Day Primary and Junior departments program which proved to the audience they have been hiding away in the God's Word. We trust that this Word truly keep them from sinning again in the days ahead of them.

October 11th was known as Home Day and again the attendance was good. Evangelistic sermons were preached morning and evening, as a three week campaign was begun on that day. At 7 o'clock a vesper service was held, at which time the Louisville Brethren came to visit. After this a light luncheon was served. The Louisville folks helped us with the Field Day program and the evening service.

At the present time we are preparing to engage in the above stated evangelistic campaign and trust that the Lord will make it possible to report many souls to Christ by the time the meeting closes. During this meeting a record is being set of the Bible verses read and a total of 600 verses have been read during the week. We know that "the entrance of the word bringeth light," and therefore we are assured that the faith of all who attend these meetings shall be built up and the spirit of yieldedness will result.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

WARSAW, INDIANA

Our work is steady and of a healthful nature, not crammed by contests or other methods frequently used. In our church school the Robert Raikes Recognition system is used in noting regularity in attendance. Quoting from the "Warsaw Daily Times," under date of January 26th, 1931: "Floyd Robbins, general superintendent of the First Brethren Sunday school, gave special recognition to twenty-nine persons who had attained the requirement for regular attendance during the year previous. Of the twenty-nine, some had been present for several years, varying from one to eight. The highest honors of the day were given to Mrs. Sarah Whitehead, in form of an Alumni diploma. Her record has been perfect for eight years. She is the first in this school to receive this honor."

Another feature of our work, is an organized choir which has been a great asset to our church program. After one year with such a working body, a reorganization was recently effected. The members of the choir, with their families, met at the church for supper (in style and order, pot-luck). After a social hour business and practice were taken up. The election is as follows: Howard Hile, President; Mrs. Fred Matthews, Vice-President; Geraldine Hile, Pianist, secretary and Treasurer; Albert Hartman, Choir leader and Mrs. George Vanator, assistant. February 24th, this choir presented a beautiful musical service at the Salvation Army headquarters in Warsaw, for the benefit of the Army's local work. In May we gave an entire evening to a sacred musical service, with the help of two readers of our own number, to the Brethren church in Peru. Two weeks ago our Men's chorus sang at the Church of the Brethren Revival meeting in Plymouth, Indiana. Last but not least the services of these groups in the local church during the past year has been much appreciated by both pastor and people.

During our winter's activities in every department of our church, we aim to work for at least two things, spiritual growth, and a definite program of evangelism. Our Teacher Training class will begin the first week in November. Homecoming day will be observed November 1st. World's Temperance Sunday, November 8th. Revival campaign opens January 10th, 1932.

Our best wishes to every reader of the Evangelist. E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The Elkhart church is forging her way forward with much the same zeal and the same loyalty that has ever characterized her work.

Our regular services have continued throughout the summer months with interest and a good attendance.

From time to time the evening services were varied, which helped in a large way to maintain the interest and increase the attendance. We really feel we have come through the summer months strengthened and ready to go forward with the year's program.

Our mid-week prayer services are the outstanding services of the church, even the intense heat of the summer months did not lessen the attendance or interest. Brother Duker is taking us through Revelations, which is a constructive study. Teaching the Word holds the people as nothing else can.

October 4 was rally day for the Sunday school—attendance totaled 460. The quarterly report of the school shows an increased attendance and offerings over the same period of last year. October 4 was also our quarterly cash day, and while the offering was not as large in dollars and cents as heretofore, yet, when we consider the depression and the efforts it takes to earn a dollar, we surely had a great offering.

Our choir has been doing a most splendid work. The program of the church has been carried on infinitely better because of their loyalty and willingness to serve and has proven a source of strength in every service.

October 1st also marked the beginning of the tenth year for Brother Duker's work with the Elkhart church—this is the second

As most of the readers know, I am part time to the College as Field Secretary. The duties involved are various—after our outside interests, preparing the wills, etc. Also seeing those in position to take out annuities, making wills and furnishing scholarship. I believe that we as a church can for a future without a competent Educational Institution to train our youth. We have and it is important that we do it and make its future safe.

We have too large an investment in the land College to forget it and we have labored long and hard to bring it to the point it has reached, and it is highly important that we give it our encouragement and support, that we may hold the place it has cost us money, sacrifice and labor.

The College and Seminary have asked that a faculty as will be found in no other institution doing like work.

In the midst of a year of depression the student body is as large as last year unless things happen that we cannot control. Our year's work will be highly satisfactory.

Our only hope for future growth lies with the people of the church. We cannot erect buildings without money. Our present student body is about all we can accommodate with our present equipment. The College is to have larger equipment must be through the gifts of those

ED REPORT OF THE FORTY- O PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT HERENCE, HELD IN THE IRD BRETHREN CHURCH F PHILADELPHIA, PA., OCTOBER 5-8, 1931

Moderator J. L. Gingrich in the e Forty-third annual Pennsylvania Conference came to order Tuesday 7:30. After A. V. Kimmell led the ce in praise and song he also the devotional Bible study of the using for his subject, "Union with His text was found in Philippians nd he spoke of the believer's union rist in humiliation, resurrection, position and exaltation." Vice-Mod- claud Studebaker then delivered his address on "Fulfilling the Purpose of the Church." He used for his text Eph. 3:10-11 and spoke on the supreme and eternal purpose of the church, using the following outline, "Love, Loving hearts, Listening ears, Liberal hands, Lowly minds, Loyal devotion, and Light of the world."

The Tuesday morning devotions were conducted by S. E. Christiansen, after which J. E. Braker gave the address of welcome. This was followed by many delegates responding to the hospitality of the city of "Brotherly Love." Moderator Gingrich then read his Moderator's address which was based on the text as found in Rev. 3:8. His subject was "Christ's Open Door." The address brought encouragement as well as a challenge to evangelism and a deepening of the spiritual life of the Church.

The District Evangelist's reports were then given and prompted encouragement for the coming year. Substantial progress was noted in most of the churches reported. For the first time the College Trustees submitted a signed written report of the last trustees' meeting in Ashland College. They have asked that the conference hereafter suggest or authorize them to submit matters vital to the College and Seminary into their hands to be recommended to the Annual Trustees' meeting of Ashland College. The following brethren were extended fraternal courtesies of the conference: H. A. Kent, Dr. Kenneth Monroe, and Milton Bowman. The Ministerial Examining Board's report for the year met with approval of the conference. They examined for ordination the past year four young men. They were: Brethren McConagey, now of Limestone, Tennessee; Wm. Clough, now of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Raymond Blood, now of Beaver City, Nebraska; and Robert Crees now of Kittanning, Pennsylvania. They recommended several tentative standards preceding ordination. The Statistician reported a net gain of the churches in the district reporting of 210. The District Mission Secretary reported the year's work which met with commendation by the conference. A memorial service was held for our late Brother Albert Trent, who was for more than 50 years a faithful and untiring Sunday school superintendent of the First Brethren church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Many brethren expressed their sincere appreciation of the high standard of Christian living set forth by Brother Trent. His presence was greatly missed in this conference, for he had been a faithful attendant for a number of years.

The first hour of the Tuesday afternoon session was devoted to Christian Endeavor. The District President, W. H. Schaffer, Jr., delivered a brief and practical message on "Possibilities in Christian Endeavor." This was followed by an address by L. E. Lindower on "More Christ in C. E." The latter message was one of challenge to Christian Endeavorer to keep the Lord Jesus foremost in their Christian Endeavor Societies. Then followed the results from a questionnaire submitted to the societies of this district. The answers from 13 societies were read. The questions were: "What are the two weakest points in your society and how are you endeavoring to strengthen them?" And, "What are the two strongest points in your society and how did you attain them?" (The answers may be found in the Evangelist under the Christian Endeavor columns later). Following this was a brief round table discussion of Christian Endeavor problems which resulted in several definite answers to problems presented. The next hour was devoted to Sunday school work. H. A. Kent, representing the National Sunday School Association, delivered a very practical and helpful address on "Preparation and Delivery of a Sunday School Lesson." His six main points were: "Gathering material, proper arrangement, concentration upon main part of lesson, illustrations and their dynamic use, time allotted for lesson study, and the definite aim." N. V. Leatherman, General Secretary of the National Sunday School Association, gave a review of statistical items of interest on Sunday school work with notes on the year's budget and the possibility of a "Pennsylvania Shipshewana Training School." W. E. Ronk, District President of Sunday school work, spoke on "The Relation of the Sunday School to the Church." This was followed with a round table discussion.

The Tuesday evening devotions were brought by I. D. Bowman, who spoke briefly on "Sanctification" and was followed by R. I. Humbert, who gave an illustrated Bible study on "Prophecy and its Fulfillment." The choir of the First church, a brass quartet and duet rendered special music on several occasions. The first Bible lecture by Dr. Monroe who took the place of Prof. McClain, who on account of illness was not able to be present, was delivered on the subject of, "The Doctrine of God's Government of the Nations."

The Wednesday morning session opened with Vice-Moderator Studebaker in the chair. After Wm. Steffler led in devotions, A. V. Kimmell spoke on "Benevolences" and his address was so well received that conference later voted $200 from its treasury to be given at once to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund! The result of the election for the next conference year was: Moderator, Claud Studebaker; Vice-Moderator, Wm. Steffler; Secretary, W. H. Schaffer, Jr.; Treasurer, D. C. White; Statistician, Robert E. Crees. There being time on the hands of the conference it was voted that I. D. Bowman's paper on "Ministerial Experiences" be read. Brother Bowman having had car trouble was not present to read his paper before the Ministerium earlier in the day.

The open conference Ministerial Session was pleased with an address of instructive nature on "Scheduling of time and preparation of sermons by the minister." This was followed by the Home Missions hour. Wm. Steffler then spoke from experience, "Solving the Problems of a Home Mission Church." D. C. White followed with a discussion on "The Layman's Part in Church Extension." He mentioned that "Every layman ought to lay his life upon the altar of sacrifice, a life of consecrated service, and also every layman ought to be sensitive to the leading of the Spirit."

The Wednesday evening session's devotions were conducted by Alton Witter and followed by a devotional Bible study on "Fellowship," by N. V. Leatherman. Dr. Monroe brought his third message to the conference on "Divine Victory Over Diabolic Opposition."

The Thursday morning 9:30 hour was given to business. The total number of delegates were 101. An invitation was accepted for next year's conference to be held in the First church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania. A motion was made that the Committee on Committees be instructed to appoint a committee to get in touch with the National Conference Committee on boys' work and also confer with the Laymen's Association and the W. M. S. The fourth address by Dr. Monroe was an exposition of the book of Ecclesiastes on the subject, "The Doctrine of Man."

The Thursday afternoon session was devoted to Foreign Missionary interests. C. H. Ashman spoke on "The Future of Brethren Missions in South America." His address was educational as well as inspirational. Carl Seitz, member of the Foreign Board, addressed the conference on "The Part of the Home Church in Extending Foreign Missions." This was followed by a brief talk by A. V. Kimmell on "Preparation Necessary for Foreign Missionary Service." The new elected W. M. S. officers were installed by the Moderator. They are: Mrs. D. C. White, President; Mrs. W. C. Benshoff, Vice-President, and Mrs. C. H. Ashman, Secretary-Treasurer.

The Committee on Committees then reported the nominees as follows: Credential Committee—W. A. Steffler, W. H. Schaffer, Sr., Harry Darr. Ministerial Examining Board—J. L. Gingrich, National Conference Executive Committeemen—W. E. Ronk and C. H. Ashman. Delegates to National Conference—W. G. Gans and Fred Frank. College Trustee—(3 years) W. H. Schaffer, Sr. District Mission Board—Claud Studebaker, Geo. Smith (1 year), D. C. White. District Sunday School Board—N. V. Leatherman, President; A. D. Gnagey, Vice-President; Leslie Lindower, Secretary; Superintendent of Adults, Wm. Gray; Superintendent of Young People, R. E. Crees; Superintendent of Children's Division, Mrs. Harry Jones; District C. E. Board—President, W. H. Schaffer, Jr.; Vice-President, Miss Hazel Genader; Secretary-Treasurer, Robert Ashman. Fraternal Relations Committee, A. V. Kimmell, J. L. Gingrich and Wm. Clough. Committee on Moderator's Address—W. C. Benshoff, W. E. Ronk and S. E. Christiansen. Committee on Resolutions—N. V. Leatherman, J. A. Rishel and Wm. Gray. Committee on Rules and Organization—D. C. White, W. C. Benshoff and A. V. Kimmell. District Evangelists—East, S. E. Christiansen; East Central, W. E. Ronk; West Central, R. I. Humbert; West, Claud Studebaker and Wm. Clough. Board of Trustees and property—Wm. Crofford, Ira Wilcox and S. A. Snook. District Executive Committee—Claud Studebaker, Wm. Steffler, C. H. Ashman, Mrs. D. C. White, and W. C. Benshoff. Committee on Boys' Organization—Robert Crees, Wm. Steffler and Milton Bowman. The Resolution Committee then submitted the following report:

To the Moderator and members of the 43rd Pennsylvania Conference of the Brethren Churches, by the Resolution Committee, greetings:—

I. Whereas it has pleased Almighty God in his wise Providence to protect, provide and nurture his Church, and, to our knowledge, particularly the Brethren Church and the Brethren Churches in this District of Pennsylvania: Therefore let it be resolved that we first of all recognize him and praise the name of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Head of the Church, and honor the person and work of the Blessed Holy Spirit, who has been so graciously in our midst.

II. Whereas our Conference officials have so faithfully and conscientiously performed their duties in the provision of a most excellent program and in the execution of the same: Therefore be it resolved, that we most heartily commend them for their part in making this conference a great success. Particularly do we wish to mention our appreciation of the address brought by our Moderator and the excellent way in which he conducted this conference.

III. Whereas we have been so graciously entertained by the kind hospitality and the untiring efforts of the pastor and members of the Third Brethren church: Therefore, be it resolved, that we most heartily thank them and pray God's blessing upon them, that the church may grow in Grace and in the knowledge of the Lord.

IV. Whereas there has been such a fine expression of Christian fellowship throughout this conference: Therefore, be it resolved, that we commend both the ministers and the laity of the church for the prevailing spirit of unity.

V. Whereas the messages of this conference were consistent with the "Message of the Brethren Ministry" and these messages were received with good grace on the part of the conference: Therefore be it resolved that we recommend that continued emphasis be given in our churches in this conference district to these outlined doctrines and fundamentals.

VI. Whereas the Brethren Church since its inception in 1708 has always emphasized non-conformity to this world, along with the practice of the Christian ordinances: Therefore, be it resolved that we recommend and renew our allegiance to God and to his teachings as set forth in paragraphs 8 and 9, Section 3 of the Message of the Brethren Ministry.

VII. Whereas the chief need of the hour in the Brethren Church is the exercise of Church Extension: Therefore be it resolved that we commend our District Mission Board for their faithfulness and recommend that they continue to give their untiring efforts toward the propagation of the Gospel through the church in our beloved district.

VIII. Whereas there is a growing indifference toward the Lord's Day: Therefore be it resolved that we renew our allegiance as expressed in the last year's resolutions which reads as follows: "That we deplore the growing disregard for the Lord's Day and urge loyalty on the part of every member of the Brethren Church to fully appreciate the importance of this day being observed as a day of service to our Lord and not a day of recreation, neither of business.

Respectfully submitted,
WM. GRAY,
N. V. LEATHERMAN,
J. A. RISHEL.

The District Missions Budget was read and approved. A motion prevailed that the matter of insuring all Conference funds be referred to the new conference officers and the District Mission Board. Fraternal greetings were acknowledged from the Mid-west and Indiana Conferences.

The Thursday evening session was addressed first by C. H. Ashman on the subject, "At the Feet of Gamaliel, or at the Feet of Jesus Christ," and the closing Bible Lecture by Dr. Monroe was delivered on the subject, "God's Self Disclosure to Man." Moderator-elect brought the Conference to a close with a prayer of consecration.

W. H. SCHAFFER, JR., Secretary.

MICHIGAN TO PENNSYLVANIA

Five years have passed since we arrived in Michigan to make our home with the Brethren at Lake Odessa. Our I some faithful saints among these people we thank God for the years of fellowship with them. Especially is this congregation blessed with a fine moderator in the person of Brother C. L. Henney.

We are also thankful for the Brethren Conference that is held in Lake Odessa each year. A fine program; a large auditorium; spacious grounds; a beautiful plenty of shade and space for tents; their attraction for the crowd that comes from several states. For two years I, Bible teacher, the writer used to give Chart Lectures.

But moving day came at last. (I) were spoken and the long journey to our new home in Pennsylvania began. Previous to our departure, our hearts were made to rejoice when a large part of the congregation gathered at our home to say farewell. The sorrow of separation was softened by the comforting hope that we have in Christ Jesus, that Christians will see each other for the last time.

One evening the friends of the Brethren Church in the United Brethren church gave a farewell service.

We then journeyed to Roanoke, where I had held a meeting in the past and preached alternating Sundays the summer. I was pastor of this church several years ago and was glad to meet with them this summer. A new pastor was served in the church basement.

The largest delegation (as I remember) Michigan people, attended National Conference this year. On the last night we were lodged at a cottage for prayer and fellowship.

Our trip to Pennsylvania consisted of myriads of hills and countless curves which added to the interest and pleasure of the trip. People here do not go west like we did in Michigan. Often we stopped to ask the way—we were formed to keep straight ahead although the big curve was just ahead.

We arrived in Martinsburg at 10 o'clock Thursday. Brother and Sister Eberhart gave us a good dinner for us. Not long after our arrival, the Brethren of Martinsburg gave us a reception which also included a substantial supply of eatables.

This charge consists of two churches, Martinsburg and McKee. The building at McKee has recently been painted outside and redecorated on the inside giving a freshness of appearance that befitting of the house of God. A few years ago the building at Martinsburg was repaired and rearranged. The new pastor is thankful for the wonderful way in which the W. M. S. cares for the interior of the church.

When the roll is called up Yonah Brother Cook's record is opened, it revealed that God's mighty men did live in the time of Daniel and Elijah. Satanism has a strong hold upon this community but Brother Cook, during his pastorate here, fought a good fight and was caught in the many snares that were set to draw his support of their evil schemes. "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

JACK-O-LANTERN

it was a full four days before n, Jennie King had scraped and cleaned the biggest pumpkin that she could roll in from her father's corn field; it was a matter of considerable pride with Jennie to live up to the reputation she had established for herself of having the biggest and funniest jack-o-lantern of any youngster in the River Bend community.

"I'll set a new record this year," chuckled Jennie to herself as she tip-toed to the corner of the barn whence she had hung the well-scraped pumpkin to dry. "I'll have a bigger and funnier one than ever."

In fact, it was all ready for cutting in of the face, and Jennie already had that outlined in her mind.

"What are you doing peeping in that door?" exclaimed the voice of Kittie Moore, Jennie's nearest neighbor.

Jennie swung the door to quickly and turned to face her friend.

"I know," declared Kittie, "you've got your jack-o-lantern already made and don't want anybody to see it."

"Maybe so," answered Jennie, "but I'm not saying so."

"All the same, I've guessed it," answered Kittie. "But I'm going to see it, anyway, cause I want to cut mine after the style you use."

"I haven't cut mine yet," replied Jennie thoughtfully, "and—and—and—that isn't all —I'm not going to cut the face in mine until right the last minute."

Kittie said no more about the jack-o-lantern but the rest of the afternoon was a failure so far as happiness was concerned to the girls. Nevertheless, Kittie took her departure without so much as a glance at the objects in the barn, and after she went away Jennie decided, just to make sure that nobody would catch a glimpse of her treasure, to hide it—so carrying the thinly scraped pumpkin to the hayloft she tied it carefully to one of the rafters, banked hay about it and went to the house perfectly satisfied that no one would see it, and not until late on the eve of Hallowe'en did she go near it again herself, and to her astonishment, when she went to take it down she discovered it was exceedingly heavy—too heavy, in fact, for her to hold up with one hand and untie with the other at the same time; time and again she tried to do so but failed. Then finally she climbed up and peeped into the pumpkin. Instantly a little shriek of surprise escaped her lips for one glance was enough to convince her she'd have to make another jack-o-lantern for herself because Mistress Bunny, the pet squirrel that lived in the King barn through the winter, had taken the unfinished article for a storehouse for his winter supply of nuts, so Jennie had to make another one, and because it was made so hurriedly she lost her reputation, but she found something far better—she found that selfishness was destroying her otherwise lovely nature, and then and there she resolved to change her ways. And this year—well, let's hope she regained her reputation as a jack-o-lantern maker, because she is helping her friends to make funny ones, too—Presbyterian Banner.

prohibition as the church folks. We dare not be quiet on this issue, nor imagine that there is no longer any issue to face. One advocate of Christian patriotism recently published a survey of the Progress of Temperance Reform, the opening paragraph of which is here reprinted, as it is a key to the whole situation: "The weakness of the prohibition cause is the over-confidence of its adherents. All too many of them are like the man who walks with his face turned toward the stars all oblivious of the snakes coiling and hissing at his feet. It was a bad day for prohibition when so many of its supporters hailed it as a thing of beauty and a joy forever, and then proceeded to take a holiday, when the multitudes took up the chorus: 'Yes, it's in the Constitution (i. e., the 18th Amendment written in the Constitution of the United States) and it's there to stay.' The thing which the friends of prohibition need to understand most just now is that there are far-reaching and well-organized influences that are determined at all cost to break down prohibition. It is an issue which supersedes all others in immediate importance."

Business Manager's Corner

THAT LOYALTY CAMPAIGN

Last week a campaign was launched by the special committee by the Publication Board at its Winona meeting to promote the publications of the church.

It was decided to call this a Loyalty Campaign, and to make a strong appeal to secure loyalty from all Brethren people regardless of their place of residence or the place of their church membership.

While this appeal would not want to turn any member's loyalty to any other interest of the church it is hoped that it may bring to the minds of all the Brethren the importance of loyal support of all the Brethren publications in the interests of either the church body or the Sunday school.

It is not the purpose of the editors or the business manager to cast any reflection on the present membership of the church or of our Sunday schools; but it is very plainly understood that such a campaign as the one proposed would be a waste of time and energy if the attitude of the church were one hundred per cent perfect.

How Times Have Changed

We realize it is anathema to mention "the good old days", but some changes wrought by Father Time in the past decade justify a little comparison that we may learn, if possible, whether the changes have been like the marriage contract, "for better or for worse."

Recently a spirit of investigation possessed us and we got out from our shelves our office records for a number of years past. In going through the record for our financial year of 1917-18 we were impressed with the record of the activity of the Brethren pastors in sending in lists of subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist, and believing it will be of interest to our readers we submit the following list of the pastors of that year who sent in the largest lists of subscriptions together with the amount of money they remitted.—

S. C. Henderson .....	$ 49.50
A. L. DeLozier .....	33.00
J. A. McInturff .....	40.00
H. L. Goughnour .....	208.00
E. M. Riddle .....	46.00
M. J. Snyder .....	40.00
D. A. Hopkins .....	12.00
L. W. Ditch .....	52.60

A. P. Reed .....	11.00
Z. T. Livengood .....	51.00
A. E. Whitted .....	106.00
C. A. Bame .....	22.00
W. F. Johnson .....	50.00
Geo. S. Baer .....	15.00
Chas. H. Ashman .....	124.00
G. L. Maus .....	67.00
L. G. Smith .....	115.00
G. W. Kinzie .....	24.00
Roy Brumbaugh .....	34.50

An examination of our records for the past year will not show an equal number of our pastors sending in an equal amount for subscriptions to The Evangelist. Now, do not misinterpret our meaning, as we are not meaning to state that our present pastors are any less loyal than those of former years, as this comparison may mean nothing more than that methods have changed and that this work is now being done by laymen rather than pastors, and yet the most consecrated laymen can not make a real success of an Evangelist Subscription Campaign without the cooperation and backing of his pastor.

It may be that modern methods of conducting church work and church activities make it impossible for a pastor to give his time to such work as time was given in former years, but he dare not shift his responsibility to another and expect the work to prove entirely successful. The pastor, too, must put his heart in the work, if he expects it to succeed.

More will be said about this Loyalty Campaign by our editors as well as by the business manager from time to time until next January.

Who Sent It?

During the past few weeks we have been sending expiration notices to a great many subscribers of The Evangelist, and a number have been renewing their subscriptions while another altogether too large group report their inability to renew because of hard times. We would not question the sincerity of any of these, but we do wonder if it would not be possible with a little more sacrifice to remain members of the family of Evangelist readers.

This morning we received an envelope from Los Angeles, California, with two dollars in cash enclosed, but no name either on the inside or the outside of the letter to indicate who sent it. If the sender sees this notice and will notify us we will be glad to give credit for the same.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

PREPARE to meet thy God!"

The zealot cried:

I gave a knowing nod

EDISON and God

The recent death of the great inventor has initiated many attempts to state and evaluate his views of "future life" and "God." It is one of the strange phenomena of human thought that, after the passing of any man who has attained great eminence and fame, all the various schools of thought and opinion will try to find something in his speech or writing which will enable each to claim him as a supporter of their own particular viewpoint. And so as time goes on, Edison will probably be claimed by atheists, agnostics, materialists, and even churchmen.

Doubtless, among his statements as expressed at various times and places, there may be found that which would seem to support many different philosophies. But if considered as a whole, Edison's statements would probably place him among the agnostics. The agnostics say, "I DO NOT KNOW." In his favor it may be said that he seemed to be willing to search for evidences of God and a future life, but beyond a conviction that behind the Universe there was "SOMETHING" it is doubtful that Edison arrived at any certainty. However, it must be remembered that agnostics are always inconsistent, which is to their credit. And at times Edison affirmed his belief in "the existence of a supreme intelligence," while at other times he finds it impossible to conceive anything of the sort.

WHAT is Edison's Opinion Worth?

It is a curious fact that numbers of people will feel that they themselves can believe in the existence of a God, if some one as eminent as Edison says there is one. Which leads to the query, What is the worth of his opinion?

And here is a good place to lay down an axiom, namely, that the value of any man's opinions is in direct ratio to his knowledge and experience in the field with which they deal.

Following this axiom, no man can question the worth of Edison's views which have to do with the mechanical fields in which his amazing genius wrought to the benefit of mankind. Men vastly better trained from a technical standpoint were astonished at his mastery. The explanation is that Edison actually lived in these fields; they constituted his world, the only world he knew.

Of the realm of religion, the world of spiritual realities, Edison had no experiential knowledge. Even with the literature of this field, which might have given him at least a descriptive knowledge, he had little acquaintance. Such literature he regarded of little worth and treated it rather contemptuously. As for the world of spirit, Edison could not even conceive such a world. Even his speculation regarding a future life was materialistic, not spiritual.

Suppose now a man with no experience whatever in the field of chemistry, with only a superficial knowledge of the literature of this field, and entertaining serious doubt as to the reality of the facts of the field—suppose that such a man should express some opinions regarding Chemistry. What would his opinions be worth?

Personally, I regard Thomas A. Edison as one of the greatest men that the world has ever seen, probably the greatest in his own peculiar field of work. But his very genius and specializing made him lop-sided. And the opinions of Edison in the field of spiritual reality are not worth much more than the opinions of Mrs. MacPherson would be in the field of electro-mechanics.

THE Knowledge of Experience

Voltaire, great French writer and sceptic, has been quoted as having said that no machine could attain the speed of thirty miles per hour. At that speed machinery would fly in pieces, he thought. Now it is no depreciation of the great genius of Voltaire to say that the testimony of a colored porter who rides the Twentieth Century Limited is worth more than that of Voltaire, when it comes to the question of how fast machinery can travel and still hold together.

The point is not that the colored porter is wiser than Voltaire necessarily, but that he actually lives in a world which Voltaire never entered and could not conceive, our modern world of steel and speed. The surtest testimony to the reality of facts in any field is that which is based upon personal experience. In the realm of spiritual reality, the testimony of the humblest soul who has actually entered that realm and met the Son of God in saving power is worth more than the opinion of the greatest genius who has NOT entered it.

ARE the "Freethinkers" really Free?

Edison was for years perhaps the most important member in the Freethinkers Society, which as an organization has just as much right to exist as any other religious or philosophic society. I have always questioned, however, the appropriateness of the name adopted by this group.

A true Free Thinker ought to be open-minded, free from all a priori assumptions which might hinder the discovery of truth, and willing to consider evidence from every possible source. But the members of the "Freethinkers Society" are not free thinkers in this high sense. If they were really free, you would find all kinds of belief among them, widely different. But in certain respects they have as definite a creed as any religious organization, although largely negative.

The hall-mark of the Freethinkers' Society is its rejection of the possibility of Revelation. On this point their minds are closed as slavishly as the mind of any narrow religionist. The genuine free thinkers will say, "I am willing to consider fairly the claims of any revelation purporting to come from God." But the members of the "Freethinkers Society" say, "For us this matter is settled. We will not even consider the possibility of such a thing." This is the fundamental dogma which fetters their minds in the search for truth. It is a misnomer to speak of such men as free thinkers.

It should be perfectly obvious that, if there is a revelation from God, the members of the misnamed Freethinkers Society will never discover it. The amazing discoveries and inventions of our modern world should teach men the folly of the closed mind toward any possible source of truth had adopted this dogmatic attitude of communication through space, it would never have been invented.

THE Limitations of Edison

In the field of practical physics Edison was tremendously open. Here he was willing to try any felt that all things were possible others became discouraged in it. Edison kept on looking. That he discovered so much. In his search for a new source for rubber he worked the day of his death, trying and experimenting with everything, refusing the dogma of "impossibility." In Edison was the genuine free thinker.

But in his approach to the field of actual reality, he was bound under the dogmatic presuppositions of the Freethinkers Society. They will maintain the possibility of that they can rationally conceive, forgetting that man is able to conceive depends upon what he has experienced. The old child of today is able to conceive what seemed an impossibility to a child of a hundred years ago, simply because he has turned the dial of a radio tuned to a football game being played a thousand miles distant. Experience is the primary factor in all discovery; there is nothing else to work with.

By his pre-conceptions, Edison was shut out from experience in the field of actual world. Thus we find him in the Scientific American, "I cannot conceive of such a thing as spirit. Imagine something which has no weight, no form, no mass; in a word, imagine." At this point Edison ceased to be a true scientific seeker for truth and became a dogmatic philosopher, defining the reality by the material terms "form" and "mass."

It is interesting to note the influence of electricity, with which Edison was so much concerned, upon the greater part of his life, in-great uneasiness and anxiety throughout the land, and no small excuse for it. A financial depression such as the experiencing is cause for concern. It is leaving a trail of unemployment and poverty, of hardship and sacrifice, of suffering and distress not only in all parts of our land but in every part of the world. There is much that is wrong and needs adjusting. The business world is out of order; the moral world is slumping, the political world is awry and chaotic. No matter from what angle you view the situation is serious, as every informed person knows, and it will require the leadership of the most conscientious experts in many lines and the cooperation of the peoples of many lands. Without discounting the seriousness of the situation, or the many remedies that may be applied, we make bold to say the one indispensable thing, the one thing needful, is religion. Nothing is so much needed as that. Nothing so much to clear the minds of statesmen and make possible settlement of international problems as religion. Nothing so much to bring about a re-adjustment in the field of employment and poverty as genuine religion put into the business relations of men. Nothing would do so much to stop the growth of crime and immorality and make men and women honest as the impartation of the religion of Jesus to the minds particularly of the young people of our time. Only that men and women need above everything else, and only that which will be really and permanently effective, however long it may promise, until the spirit and teachings of the religion are made the foundation and frame work of all remedies.

As serious as is the world situation today, the condition of the spiritual state of Christians individually deserve more concern. More important than anything else is it that organized religion is kept in a wholesome, vigorous condition that Christian men and women take their religion seriously in every way seek to be true to their profession. If there is the only really effective antidote to the evil and disorders at work in the world, then the agents of that religion must be genuine and aggressive, for upon them rests the responsibility of making known and demonstrating the power of religion. They are the salt that preserves the world from being corrupted by the vicious and corrupting influences everywhere at work. They are the leaven of righteousness that is destined to quietly but effectively until the whole is leavened. They came into the world, pointing men to the Sun of righteousness, to be the Light and Life of all men. The world ultimately depends on the church of Christ; if it fails, the world will fail. If it is without power in the world, if it is weak and inefficient, there is no hope for the world situation, the consummation of God's Kingdom program must tarry until we set up a people with a faith that is venturing and a loyalty as courageous, as was the case in the days of the wanderings of Israel. If the church is to be kept keen to do and powerful to achieve the great task that is set before the world, its membership must be characterized by a real heart religion.

What does it mean to have a real heart religion? Religion is not necessarily an emotional experience, though many have imagined that it is so. There are those who think they have a religious thrill, or an awesome and uncanny spell, or a religious ecstasy, or a trance, or have not lost control of their senses for a time and given themselves to unbecoming physical contortions and gyrations and unintelligible babblings, they think they are lacking the marks of divine approval. It is possible that many such religious enthusiasts have been cheated out of any real experience with God by reason of a continual emotional animation, which resulted in the befogging of their mind, so as not to be able to recognize him. It is really a sorry delusion to imagine that by working one's self into a religious frenzy, one may achieve a great and noble religious experience. In such a state it would seem quite possible to meet God and not to know him. Such people need to learn that God speaks to men not merely in the storm and stress of religious emotion—and to most people seldom in that fashion—but also in the still small voice, in the stirring of the heart, unaffectedly and sincerely, with holy intent and lofty desires. God moves the soul with the sweet and wholesome influence of his Spirit, by which the worshiper is made strong and determined to live righteously, to act graciously and to honor God with the whole heart. Such is the kind of religion that the church needs to give it vitality and power. This is not to deny the place of emotional experience in religion, for it indeed has a large place, but it is to insist that a show of emotional experience is no sure sign of genuine religion.

It is possible to have formal godliness and morality without having real heart religion. No religion would be worthy of the name that did not include these characteristics, but these in themselves do not constitute real religion, religion of the kind that has power and attractiveness. A splendid young man came running to Jesus, and kneeling before him, eagerly asked, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" All these commandments have I kept from my youth. What lack I yet?" Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him, and said: "One thing thou lackest; go sell all thou hast, and give to the poor; and come, take up thy cross and follow me." And he was sad, and went away grieved. Here was a youth who had wealth, social position, culture and moral character and was a formal religionist of his day, but he showed himself lacking in one vital element when the Master put him to the test, and that was real heart religion. That lack proved that selfishness was in his heart, that instead of loving God "with all his heart" and his "neighbor as himself", he loved self and his possessions. And that selfishness marred his character and ruined his life, which might have been filled with spiritual zeal and service.

It is possible to be given to many noble works for others and for the church, and yet be lacking in the one thing needful to make heart religion. Martha was "cumbered with much serving," anxious to have everything done in just the best manner possible for the entertainment of the Lord Jesus, but she was unmindful of the fact that it would have been better for her to have done less serving and more sitting at the feet of the Master. There are professing Christian people that way today—busy as can be about the doing of things in the name of religion and for the happiness and welfare of others, but neglectful all the while of the spiritual needs of their own lives. It is a blessed thing to be busy in the service of others, and in behalf of the church, but no amount of service rendered can make up for our failure to sit in the presence of and commune with our Lord. The spiritual tone of our lives must be maintained, or we shall soon find ourselves losing in power, lacking in poise and ineffective. They who allow themselves to become so busy and distracted with the doing of many things that they have no time for tarrying in the presence of the Lord Jesus, will find that it will prove worth while to give thought to being more at the expense of doing less.

It is possible to be good and successful stewards of the possessions of life and yet not possess real heart religion. The importance of teaching and practicing the principles of Christian stewardship needs to be stressed very much more strongly and extensively than it has been, but still there is something vastly more vital to the Christian life than principles of getting and of giving of material goods. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." He may possess "all things and abound" even in the midst of destitution and affliction. It is the love of Christ that enriches life. And it is that love inspiring the gifts that makes giving desirable and profitable. We cannot give acceptably until we have experienced "the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." For, says Paul, "though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned and have not love it profiteth me nothing." Without love for the Lord Jesus our gifts are futile, our religion is vain and we are lacking in power and vitality.

We may even be regular attendants at the services of the church without having a real heart religion. We usually look upon those who attend church regularly as being among the Lord's true and faithful, and doubtless it is right that we should do so. But mere church attendance is no absolute guarantee of heart loyalty. It

Fraudulent Relief Appeals

We are passing on a warning to our pastors and church officials, issued by Secretary Henry S. Leiper, of the Federal Council of Churches, against a group of fakirs who have been preying upon churches and Sunday schools, and have found them in some quarters "easy marks." It is no new scheme, but seems to have been meeting with more than ordinary success of late and the number of fakirs has increased. However, as we read in a contemporary publication, "for almost thirty years a set of imposters representing themselves to be from Chaldaea and armed with fraudulent documents commissioning them to collect funds for the suffering Christians of Assyria, Persia and other parts of the Near East, have been fleecing our people. Sometimes sympathetic ministers help them along with letters of recommendation, which enable them more successfully to prey upon the innocent, while few if any of the funds collected ever reach the Near East. Dr. Leiper urges all who are approached by such "Chaldean priests" to communicate with Secretary Geo. M. Lamsa, of the Episcopal National Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. There is real need in Assyria, but the Assyrian Church authorities abroad as well as in America protest strongly against the activities of those seeking such funds only for their own personal use. Why not make all your gifts through reliable and fully accredited agencies, preferably of your own Church?"

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother C. D. Whitmer, editor of the Christian Endeavor department of the Evangelist, gives the young people a very excellent article this week over his own signature. It will pay every Endeavorer to read it.

As we were going to the press the announcement reached us of the communion service to be held at Nappanee, Indiana, Thursday evening, November 5th at 7:30. Brother B. F. Owen, the pastor, says neighboring Brethren are invited.

We are informed that Brother and Sister Floyd Sibert are to take up the work at Masontown, Pennsylvania, November 1, 1931, which pastorate was recently vacated by Brother and Sister Herman Koontz, who were called to take charge of the church at Roanoke, Virginia.

Next week we will publish the first of two special Home Mission numbers of The Evangelist, printed in color. We acknowledge with appreciation the cooperation of the Home Mission Secretary in putting out these special issues. Pray for the Thanksgiving offering.

It's not a new thing, for members are frequently being added, but it continues—On the first Sunday in October three new members were added by baptism to the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, where Dr. L. S. Bauman is pastor, and to word received from their calendar.

In the Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, church bulletin, we note Brother W. H. Schaffer and his good wife are going to try their church families 100 per cent subscribers to The Evangelist. This splendid church is on the Honor Roll no ninety per cent of the families taking the paper. Mrs. Schaffer is the Evangelist agent, and we believe she is going to make one, because she and Brother Schaffer are pleased with the

In a personal communication from Brother Delbert B. who recently took charge of the church at Cerro Gordo, we learn that he and his good wife are enjoying the work place very much. Though the start was a little slow in under way, as he remarks, yet they are now gaining steady ground. He says further, "We feel that there is a great future for this place, not so much in the way of a large church, but in the way of a strong and faithful church." Thank God for the existence of this congregation.

In the Lanark, Illinois, church bulletin, dated October 1931, edited by the pastor, Brother C. C. Grisso, we read that a new member was baptized and received into the church fellowship on the previous Saturday. Their Sunday school has averaged 214 in attendance since National Conference. November is "Loyalty Month" for that congregation, and it is the aim that every member show his or her loyalty to the church by "being present at the service of God's house", including the preaching services, the Sunday school and the prayer meeting. A second aim is that every member shall make a contribution every Sunday to the financial support of the church. These are worthy aims and a church that takes itself seriously to seek to attain them will be benefited thereby.

Dr. G. W. Rensch, in a letter to the editor, making mention of the pleasure he finds in serving the splendid, responsive church of New Paris, Indiana, refers to the work he is seeking to do as "building up a New Testament Church." We like the thought and think it ought to be more popular among a people that lay emphasis on obedience to the whole word of God. It offers a goal towards which to strive. And why should not the "New Testament Church" be an adequate pattern for those who are called about building up and maintaining New Testament faith? The further away we get from the New Testament church as it was, the further we are likely to get from the simplicity and power of its faith. We are satisfied to stay by the old standard.

While the frosts of coming winter are abroad in the land, we are reminded by Dr. C. F. Yoder that they are having a very spring rains in the Argentine, giving promise of abundant crops, on which that agricultural country of the southern hemisphere so largely depends. The missionary work is going on encouragingly. Candidates for baptism are reported at Rio de Janeiro as a result of a week of meetings, and two have been baptized. Sister Sickel continues in poor health, but Brother and Sister wife is recuperating nicely from an operation. The power of the Gospel to transform the worst sinners finds demonstration in the person of one Emilio Cabo, who is said to have been a criminal, but now is spending his time going from house to house telling of the love of God.

Brother C. H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, gives us an interesting newsletter this week. The church has been maintaining its own summer Sunday evening service for several years instead of joining in the union service. The month of October was full of "specials" and they were very successful. At the Homecoming service Brother J. L. Gimpel was the special afternoon speaker, and on "Harvest Praise" M. A. Stuckey began a week of Bible lectures, which were very enjoyed. A pastor's class has been started with the two functions of teacher training and general Biblical instruction. This latter—the systematic instruction of the membership, and particularly the young people—is a problem and a challenge that is receiving more and more attention by Brethren pastors, as it should. An informed church membership is better protected against the loss of its members than an uninformed membership. Brother Ashman also speaks of the loss the church has sustained in the passing of their head deacon, Brother Edward Smith.

What About the Future?

By Dr. W. S. Bell

are days of multiplied problems and uncertainty in this material old world. The air is charged with a sense of unrest. The financial and political realms are in a state of confusion.

The masses are crying for food and shelter. In the U. S. A. we neither lack food supplies, or the means to meet the human needs. Why all this mess of confusion and the dilemma we are in?

a sobering up time. We have been pleasure mad and are now sober. Sober thinking, rational living and common sense have been thrown to the winds and we have been swept from our moorings upon a tidal wave of inflation and free money, with large credits.

After how much people have wanted more. We are not satisfied to spend money as we had, but spent our money as we well. The world is in a state of confusion, — State, City and County, luxurious dressing, high priced homes, high priced credit and by those in position to maintain the standard of living, they are for. Pay day is here. The banks cannot collect, the mortgages are in default, their claims, bonds, banks and loan are hard pressed and can do is to press the editors. Who is to blame? We all are, more or less. Human greed and selfishness have no limit. The adjustments must be made. The mills of God grind slow, but they grind even. There must be a new process, with an old process, with an old process of values; business men must find its own

Does All This Teach Us?

The value of spiritual things. The past few years during our material progress we have grown materialistic; have forgotten our duty to him. The work of the church has become less and discouraging. Pleasure and high-living have taken out the spiritual in the lives of the multitudes. Do not divorce God in his universe and succeed. Our punishment will overtake us sooner or later. It has. The theory: Give man the things to supply his wants and he will turn to God and give thanks, has exploded. Never has there been a time that people furnish homes and enjoy the luxuries of living have the past ten years. Instead of turning to God giving thanks and honoring him with their lives, people have been true. They wanted more, and too much of themselves with the gifts. Jesus well said, "Life consisteth not in the abundance of things possessed." "MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE." Eyes off of God means a derelict.

Third. When man has his own way, he fails. The combined great minds of the world today are at sea to find a way out. Never has there been a time, when education has reached such a high standard? never has there been a time when we had so many SPECIALISTS in the field of economics and political economy, and never has there been a time when we had so much machinery to care for government and to promote human welfare. I am not deploring or deprecating this, but want to say frankly, that all the combined human agencies cannot, apart from God and his laws, succeed. "Back to God" is the only way to find ourselves and back to Christ and obeying his teaching is the only way to permanent success and prosperity.

The future will depend upon our recognition of God and the claims of the Lord Jesus.

Why I Read My Church Periodicals

By Arthur R. Baer

I read and enjoy the periodicals of other churches; they are refreshing, helpful and inspiring, but regardless of their excellence or possibly at times even superior qualities; yet for my needs my own church literature is the best obtainable.

I endorse the belief and practices of my church and am vitally interested in its opportunities, its problems and progress. Through the valuable publicity given to church programs and goals I am able to ally myself with a unified and sustained effort for the advancement of Christian work. Therefore I would not be true to God, my church or my convictions, did I not keep myself informed concerning the affairs of my church by the best means available.

In business the successful man supplies himself with "Trade Magazines" which keep him in touch with the best in methods and practice and enable him to link his work with national advertising and selling campaigns. To the Christian church member his denominational periodicals are his "Trade Journals." They are as essential to his successful efforts as are the trade papers to the professional man. Among church members, as among professional men, the alert, reliable and successful avail themselves of this help and inspiration.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST OUGHT TO BE IN EVERY BRETHREN HOME

The Influence of Revivals

All great revivals have been intensely moral and have fallen with terrific impact on society, only it was the society of their own day, and not that of the twentieth century. If, in the revival that is coming, we are awakened to the injustice of our social order, to the horror of slums, the evils of competition, the organization of nefarious traffics, that does not mean that our forefathers were blind when the spirit of God came down on them in power—it means that their moral problems were not ours. Every age has its own line of battle. Every age has its peculiar moral problem. No two ages, if I might put it so, meet the devil in the same habiliments. But in every age, when there has been revival, that revival has been magnificently ethical along the line of battle God has set. Think of the influence of Francis upon Italy! Think of the influence of Luther upon Europe! Think of the influence of Wesley upon England! Think of the influence of Moody upon Scotland! Profound emotion used by the spirit of God has thrown men into the battle-line of morals and has done so when all the philosophers have failed.—From "The Turn of the Tide," the address of the Rev. George H. Morrison, D.D., Moderator, at the opening of the General Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland.

Watch well the building of thy dream!
However hopeless it may seem,
The time will come when it shall be
A prison or a home for thee.

Advantages, Dangers, Needs and Opportunities

By Charles W. Mayes

(Moderator's Address delivered at the District Conference of Brethren Churches of Southern California, at Long Beach, Calif., July 24, 1931, voted published in The Evangelist.)

(Concluded from last week)

Our Dangers

Let him that thinketh he stand, take heed lest he fall. There are multitudinous dangers before us today. We dare not as a Brethren conference close our eyes to them. "Reprove, rebuke with all longsuffering and doctrine," said the greatest of Apostles.

Briefly some of these dangers will be mentioned. I would enjoy the opportunity of going through these from the standpoint of the teaching of the Word of God, but in this address, I must merely mention them. I take it that this audience is sufficiently in sympathy with the Word of truth to take kindly a bit of warning without the scriptural expositions.

1. We must guard against formal deadness. We have, understand and enjoy the deep truths of the Word of God. But we must guard against dead orthodoxy. Some have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge, but others have a knowledge of God, but not according to zeal. We must have both knowledge and zeal. Souls are lost without faith in Christ. They are eternally doomed with no final restoration and no second chance. Shall we sit idly by and enjoy the sunshine of God's Grace, with no concern for others? We must not only be evangelical but evangelistic.

2. We must guard against the secondary emphasis upon the Grace of God in bringing our salvation. Our Gospel is a message of Grace, with salvation as the first thing to be presented to men. We dare not forget this truth. Some are confusing this, preaching a Gospel of morality, and a message of social ethics. But we must deliver the Gospel of the Grace of God, or as a church, we will lose our favor with God. If we maintain the Gospel of the Grace of God and his supernatural salvation, we will be protected from the subtle attacks of modernism.

3. There is a theory today held in some cases by dear saints of God, against which we must utter a warning. It is a theory which poses as the only right way of dividing the Word of Truth, which after such dividing removes from the church of today all of what we call the ordinances of God's house. The theory is sometimes called Bullingerism, and of course has many ramifications. Held as it is by some of our dearest friends for whom we have personally great love and admiration, the theory needs the more to be warned against.

4. The last few years has brought forth another theory which needs to be mentioned sponsored by one who seems to be a real child of God whose name is Philip Mauro. In the past, this man has demonstrated his standing in the Grace of God. But concerning his theory, a word should be said. The theory confuses the Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of God and the Church. It also claims that Christ preached the Gospel of the Kingdom when he was on earth which is one and the same thing as the Gospel of the Grace of God. The theory is not so easily detected until it attempts to solve prophetic truth. From this standpoint, the theory says that God is finished with the Jew, there is no future great tribulation, and the Old Testament prophecies concerning the future Kingdom are spiritualized. In this respect it seems to be similar to the old Post-Millennial theory slightly remodeled. The author of the theory shows much antagonism toward Scofield Bible.

5. Fanaticism is also among us, teaching that a second work of Grace known as the baptism of the Spirit, which is evidenced by the speaking in tongues, theory claims that today great signs and wonders are taking place to prove the Deity of Christ. All of the manifestations they try to justify from the passage states that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever, as though the immutability of his Person demand (an unchanging plan). They also teach scriptural healing which claims that Christ's death on the Cross atoned for the present body on the same basis for sins, and that such healing may be appropriately claiming it. Many of God's choicest saints are deceived by this theory, and however much we may love them we must denounce the theory as dangerous.

These dangers which have been enumerated are dangers from within the churches where there are many of God's true saints. Many other dangers of UNBAPTIZED MEN which attack the church from the OUTSIDE, are mentioned, but will be omitted.

This brings us to a free and frank discussion of

Our Needs

1. We need the constant feeding upon the true Word of Life which came down from Heaven, our Lord Jesus Christ. This bread we find in the Word of God. Constant feeding will bring us to know and understand the deep things of the Spiritual life. To lead spiritual lives we must constantly maintain the proper relationship to the Holy Spirit. In making progress in the spiritual life we immediately make ourselves liable to the onslaught of Satan in his plan to divide and confuse God's people. We need to learn the art of strengthening the weak by always recognizing our own weaknesses and never boasting either in word or act of our own superior spiritual attainments.

2. We need to have impressed indelibly upon our minds the pilgrim character of our lives. The Word of God tells us that we are pilgrims and strangers on this earth. Our citizenship is in Heaven.

We do not belong to this world for we have been redeemed with a price, even the price of Christ's precious blood. When Israel maintained their separation from the world around them, they were the recipients of God's blessing, but when unholy alliances were formed with the nations, God's blessing was withdrawn. As we look at the so-called church today, we see worldly lives, pagan philosophies, and Christ-dishonoring practices. The church as a whole is without power and rapidly losing it. The conduct of the mass of the church members in an array of compromises, makes it the harder for us to desire to be a "Chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a peculiar people (that is a people for God's own possession) that we should show forth the praises of God who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light."

The common unholy alliances of the churches of our day make it so much the harder for us who wish to be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. The question is before us today. "What fellowship ness with unrighteousness? and what communion light with darkness, what concord hath Christ with idols, or what part hath he that believeth with an idol? And what hath the temple of God with idols, for ye are the temple of the living God. If our Brethren, standing for the faith as they do, are to make a great impression upon the sinful world, we must heed God's command, "Come ye out from among them, ye are separate, saith the Lord." We must keep our feet from the world systems of corruption in the moral, and spiritual realms being separated from the world and separated unto God. 3. In this connection the re-affirmation of a resolution passed not long ago is most timely.

1. That this Conference of Brethren Churches for the Southern California re-affirm once more the position of the Brethren Church from her very origin, as being utterly opposed to the use of violence or any physical force that works against an enemy, as a righteous means to an end, whether in relations with individuals or with nations. We affirm that there is no possible method for the attainment of justice, or the securing and maintenance of human liberty, may at times be found among the unregenerate world-systems of the earth, but we must affirm that according to the teaching of the Master Jesus, as the children of God, do not belong to these world systems. We are in the world, but not of it, and must maintain a distinct character. We gladly offer our service, time, money, and self, if necessary, to bind up the world's wounds, or to remove arrows by any means or methods approved by our Lord Jesus Christ. Thereunto are we called.

2. We need great stress upon the life of prayer. Our churches must be impressed with the unalterable fact that, in times of testing, we advance only upon our knees. Every meeting must receive the attention and the participation of the membership of the churches. We must have prayer meetings in which the Spirit of God gives us freedom in the abundance of true testimony, praise, true thanksgiving and true intercession.

3. Every church needs a special weekly prayer meeting as a house for the problems of the church. The pastor, on this day teaching his best saints, that it is not by power, nor by might, nor by learning, nor by much wisdom, but by his Spirit. In addition to this emphasis, every church needs an occasional day set apart for prayer. It is such an unspeakable privilege to live in the presence of God, and such a marvelous blessing and privilege among the overcomers of the Laodicean days that we are not handing our victories to us on a platter.

4. We need in our churches not only the KNOWLEDGE of the Grace of God, but the Grace of God lived out in the lives of the people. Satan's only means of attacking the churches which are true to the teachings of the Word of God, is through the divisions, misunderstandings, and inharmonious relations between the members. The only insurance against these divisions and inharmonious relations between members, is individual responsibility to believers. "What glory is it, if, when ye are reproved for your faults, ye take it patiently, but if when ye are afflicted and suffer for IT, ye take it patiently this is the will of God."

5. Stewardship deserves constant emphasis. We hold the precious possessions of God. Stewardship is a living attitude toward our Lord. Let the lay members of the church emphasize these things among themselves. Let all remember that we are stewards of the mysteries of God, of time, of talents, our energies and abilities. When God gets his share we will then be happy to have the remainder and not until.

That Which Costs Nothing

By Fred V. Kinzie

When we see the word "FREE," an eye-arrester, so lavishly employed in our modern advertising, an unconscious chuckle invariably ripples somewhere on the inside of most of us.

When Araunah the Jebusite offered King David his threshing floor and appurtenances free for sacrificial purposes, David replied, "Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing."

We wonder why David was so scrupulous. Could he have foreseen the danger in that which was so generously given would eventually prove an expensive bargain—expensive in other elements than talents and shekels?

So often churches and Christian institutions boast of the "boost" they have received in the shape of "gifts" from hither and yon, and that such gifts have cost the beneficiaries "nothing."

Do such gifts leave the recipients utterly free from any obligations (tangible or intangible) whatsoever? It is a serious and timely question.

Arrangements were once made with an electric company to place one of their latest style electric refrigerators in the church kitchen for use during a certain conference. This was for purely advertising purposes from the standpoint of the company, and without financial cost to the church—"free," in other words. The "cooler" made weeks followed. One day in a local business house the electric company's manager met the church's pastor. The former had some freshly-printed posters announcing a minstrel show being staged by the American Legion. The pastor was urged to patronize. This, he could not and would not do. Then came the public rebuke: "Do you remember that refrigerator used in your church kitchen?" "Oh," came the reply, though not without embarrassment and confusion, "if we are indebted to you, issue your invoice and we'll come to the office and pay it."

Another lesson: God is not "broke!" The church of Jesus Christ need not seek support in the devil's territory. If it has come to this pass, she had better perish forthwith!

Gifts always carry certain obligations. Beware of the end of the road!

Salvation is a gift—is "free," so we fondly croon, and yet are there no responsibilities incurred in our acceptance? "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances?" "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth." "Walk as children of light." "Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you."

In these seriously perilous days of communism, modernism, apostasy, social disorder, rebellion against God and his Word, a wild clamor after fleshly amusements, a crying need for definite witnessing for Christ to the lost, and a passion for souls, might not the old prophet, Elisha, sternly demand, facing us as he did Gehazi, "Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?"

These "innocent" gifts may prove the damning of souls and the wasting of precious time in catering to a mate-realistic-crazed world going pleasure mad, and on the precipice of doom!

"For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Harrah, Washington.

STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

VI. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

Being a symbol, the Lord's Supper brings blessing only as it is understood and appropriated in spirit. Therefore it is not for children who cannot understand, or for the unconverted who do not wish to understand.

The bread of the eucharist should be made without leaven (1 Cor. 5:8) because leaven represents sin and Christ was without sin. The cup also should be of the "fruit of the vine" (Lk. 22:18). Jesus never called it "wine," and the use of fermented wine, which is the ruin of countless lives, to represent the blood of Christ, is inexcusable. The juice of the grape is a rich and healthful food, but fermentation changes the sugar of the grape into carbonic acid gas which escapes, and alcohol, which remains to curse. Alcohol can never be a symbol of the blood of Christ (Prov. 23:29-35; Hab. 2:15).

The time to celebrate the communion Jesus left to the desire of the church, unless when he said, "As oft as ye drink it" he referred to an annual celebration, as of the Passover. As a matter of fact, it was celebrated on the anniversary occasion each year, with the feet-washing, love feast and eucharist, combined, and then upon other occasions as the church desired. The celebration of Acts 20:7 was a special farewell service. We have no record of a church being founded at Troas. (Compare Acts 16:6-9). If the "breaking of bread" on that occasion requires a weekly communion, then the "breaking of bread" of Acts 2:46 requires a daily communion.

In the temple the priests washed their hands and feet daily, before ministering in the holy place. They partook of the unleavened bread once a week, and only once a year did the high priest enter the most holy place where the pot of manna was preserved as a type of Christ, the bread of life, who is now represented by the eucharistic emblems.

While these emblems should be respected and handled with care there is nothing to warrant the idolatry of kneeling or uncovering before them as if they in themselves are gods. The withholding of the cup for fear it may be spilled, as Roman priests pretend, is to dishonor him who gave it.

The body of Christ cannot be represented by dissensions and divisions. If any have a quarrel or knows that a brother has aught against him he should first do his part to be reconciled according to Matt. 18:15-20 and then partake of the supper. It is the duty of pastors to prepare the people for this important occasion.

But if a person is sincere he should not absent himself from the Lord's Supper because of a feeling of unworthiness. Medicine is for the sick and food is for the hungry.

The desire to be better is the first preparation spiritual food.

If some one does not fully understand he should be instructed. "Him that is weak in the faith receive not to doubtful disputations" (Rom. 14:1). One lacks the immersion in baptism and another lacks the trinitarian action. All lack in something, but the lack is that of love. The table is not ours but theirs (1 Cor. 10:21), and although some may come and their works shall be burned (1 Cor. 3:15), and others will eat and drink condemnation to themselves (1 Cor. 11:29) the faithful need not absent themselves on that account. Our communion can still be with the Lord and his people. If the pastor teaches faithfully there will be no one to trespass where they do not belong.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A TIMELY APPEAL

The Administrative Committee of the Home Missions Commission, September 4, 1931, authorized the following letter to the President of the United States:

"The Home Missions Council, representing twenty-seven states and thirty-three Board of Home Missions in the United States and Canada, heartily endorse your unemployment program and cordially approve of the appointment of the Council of the Churches of Christ in America as the agency through which the Protestant churches are to co-operate. We assure you of our readiness to cooperate with the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in making your unemployment program effective."

This was signed by John McDowell, President, and V. L. King, Executive Secretary.

It is the judgment of the committee that in view of the fact that the Home Mission Boards are facing a declining income and an increasing responsibility, due to the fact that many of the churches are unable to meet their share of pastors' salaries, stronger self-supporting churches and more fortunate individuals must rally to the support of our Mission Boards at this time. Unless this is done, dire calamities will happen to our Home Mission work. Unusual sacrifices must be made in these strenuous times. The work of the church is to be maintained on a going basis. Formed Church Messenger.

PROTESTANTS AND CATHOLICS IN NEW YORK

Reversing the census figures of 1920, which showed 1,000,000 Roman Catholics than Protestants in New York City, the figures for 1930 show Protestants are now in the lead by 218,219, according to an analysis of the 1930 census figures, made public recently by Dr. Walter Dill Scott, executive secretary of the Cities Census Committee. The Protestants outnumbered the Catholics by 112,748. Catholic increase followed in the next ten years. Dr. Scott's figures show the religious composition of New York's population to be as follows: Roman Catholic, 2,362,805; Eastern Catholic, 111,096; Jewish, 1,875,521; Protestant, 2,581,024. The great gain of the large Protestant gain in population, according to Dr. Scott, is due to Northwestern European increase and the increase of native whites of white parentage. The Jewish population of New York increased 232,012 between 1920 and 1930. The Negro population is 327,706, as compared with 152,467 ten years ago, an increase of 114.9 percent. There are now nearly 100 cities in the world having a population of a million or more. Mexico City, which recently annexed its suburbs, is the latest to this class. London boasts 8,000,000, New York, 7,000,000, nearly 5,000,000, Chicago 3,000,000, Moscow and Leningrad 2,000,000, etc. The cities are bigger but not better.—Protestant-Recorder.

RELIGIOUS PAPERS

Thoughtful persons recognize a real value in the religious press. Few, if any, have paid their way for many years. Benar den, promotor of a kind of magazine which most of us an enormous fortune, and can set aside five millions of dollars for a "foundation." Nobody ever made so many millions of dollars in religious papers. With few exceptions, all are subsidized by good Christians who believe in them. It is getting to be a question whether some can continue. Appeals have been made and it is to be hoped that some people will have the mind to give aid in the day of stress.—The Presbyterian.

THE INDIFFERENCE OF PRIMITIVE MAN

A primitive man in Africa is absurdly indifferent toward people he does not know, according to Albert Schweitzer in his new book, The Forest Hospital at Lambarene.

One day towards evening a wounded man had to be brought from the ward to the consulting room to have his dressings changed. Dr. Schweitzer asked a man who was sitting by the bed whose sick brother he was nursing, to lend a hand with the patient. The man pretended not to hear. On Dr. Schweitzer's making the request somewhat more pressingly he answered quite calmly: "No, the man on the stretcher is of the Bakele tribe. I am not."—From Record of Christian Work.

THE TREMENDOUS COST OF CRIME

Crime is so costly in dollars and cents as crime. When it comes to the realm of character, happiness and life, one staggers at the burden it puts on people. If only the criminal suffered and endured the shame the thought of it would be less appealing. But no man commits a crime who does not shame and ruin others.

A two-page report on the cost of crime was made by the National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement to the President. The report, signed by all the members of the Commission, "strikingly confirms the accuracy of the general belief that crime imposes a tremendous economic burden on the country."

Following specific recommendations are:

That steps be taken to lessen the economic burden which is placed on those members of the public who are required to serve as witnesses in criminal cases. (b) Steps be taken to develop accurate comprehensive statistics as to the cost of administration of criminal justice by the Federal Government in the states. (c) A comparative study of municipal cost of criminal justice with which the investigators have made much study but which they were unable to complete, be completed and they have indicated. (d) A scientific study of racketeer-organized extortion and of criminal fraud, be made.

Working out the principal categories of crime, the report shows that it aggregates a billion dollars annually.

Every recommendation is due in view of this. Moral and spiritual training must be given or crime will continue and increase. Knowledge and worship of God must be made a part of every man's life, or many will continue to steal, kill, rob and do other things of evil. We shall have to come to it or perish, that the power and teaching alone can save society, and civilization can save the individual.—The Christian-Evangelist.

It is upon what a person goes to church for, as to whether or not he goes to the house of God to his waiting soul. It was to the Psalmist that he said: "One thing have I desired, and that will I seek: that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple." "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I would rather be a door keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the palaces of wickedness." "O God, thou art my God; early will my soul thirst for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, and my heart is parched for thee, and my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, and my heart is parched for thee, and my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, and my heart is parched for thee." Such a yearning is indicative of a sincere heart, and such are they who add strength and power to the work of Christ and help it to accomplish the work set before it. Religion is more needed in the church than that men and women be whole-hearted and loyal, unreservedly given over to the service of the Christian life. The full enjoyment of the blessedness of religion demands it, and the largest efficiency and effectiveness of the church require it.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

Esther 6:1-3. There is something fascinating in the book of records kept by this eastern monarch. In asking for the book to be read he probably had nothing more in mind than being put to sleep by the very dullness of its subject matter. But "as luck would have it" (by the way, is there such a thing as luck?) they read a portion which caught the king's attention: here was the story of a man who had rendered him a great service and received no reward.

We have been told in a figure that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life, and that every man shall receive a reward for the deeds done in the body. How glorious to serve the King of kings, who is ever mindful of his people!

TUESDAY

Esther 6:4-11. The first shall be last and the last shall be first. How bitter it must have been to Haman to be compelled thus to honor the man he so jealously hated! How suggestive, too, is the reward with which the king honored Mordecai: clothed with the garment of the king, with the king's crown upon his head. We have been clothed with the robe of righteousness which belongs to God alone, the "wedding garment," and have been made as kings and priests, joint heirs with Christ, to whom every knee shall bow! Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor!

WEDNESDAY

Esther 6:12-14. Truly, there is no such thing as peace for the wicked. And who can know the tortures of an evil conscience? Haman was certainly uneasy over the turn of events, and greatly worried as to the outcome of it all. If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart. How much better even to suffer persecution with the people of God, and to know the peace of God that passeth understanding, than to walk in the paths of sin and iniquity, however high our station, and suffer the eternal tortures of an evil conscience, here and hereafter!

THURSDAY

Esther 7:1-10. The king's wrath against Haman knows no rest until judgment had fallen. In plotting against the Jews, Haman had also plotted against Queen Esther, whom the king loved most of all. He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye. Even the unjust judge in the parable of Jesus agreed to avenge his people speedily, and God says: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord!

FRIDAY

Esther 8:1-2. How hard it has been to understand the phrase: "And from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." In the experience of Haman this is well illustrated: he had only the most selfish of interests in the kingdom, only an outward show—a "hypocrite;" yet this outward show had won him a certain recognition in the eyes of men. When his selfish hypocrisy became apparent, even this recognition was taken away from him, and the king's ring was given to Mordecai. May we ever walk worthy of the king's trust!

SATURDAY

Esther 8:3-8, 15-17. Although Haman was dead, the mischief he had planned still lived on. So with the deeds of us all; our works live on, either to the praise of him who saved us, or to our own condemnation. Just as the king gladly aided in saving the Jews, so our King is not willing that any should perish. And he is able to save to the uttermost!

SUNDAY

Esther 9:1-4. We are reminded by these verses of the day when he cometh with clouds, and all nations of the earth shall mourn as they look upon him whom they have pierced; when the fear of the Lord shall be upon all men as judgment falls; when our Christ shall be hailed as King of kings and Lord of lords. May we bend our every effort to hastening that coming day, and to the saving of every soul possible before that day shall come!

HOME-MADE MAPS

By Walter Whitney

How many teachers have wished they might have a map that could be placed directly in front of the class? Especially teachers in small schools where one large map serves for all. The following is one way of solving the problem.

Buy a yard of table oilcloth and cut to the size of the map you want. If you wish, several small maps of different regions of the Holy Land may be grouped on one piece of oilcloth. Secure the oilcloth to a cardboard, the plain or back surface of the oilcloth being out, for it is on the unvarnished side of the cloth that our work will be done. Draw or trace a map or maps, as you prefer, on the plain surface. If you wish, these maps may be colored with water colors, like the original. In lettering the names of towns and districts, use a heavy black ink or black paint. When your map is completed and colored to your satisfaction, give the entire surface a coat of clear shellac. This will improve the appearance and increase the durability of the map.

This idea may be used for one small map, one large map, or as many maps on one piece of cloth as the worker desires. The size of the maps can be made according to the teacher's need. This idea has also been found successful in charts and water-color portraits or landscapes.

interest, since the work of each individual entered into the department total.

Group gatherings during the week often were engaged in reading the Bible, and these did not all stop when the contest period had passed.

INCREASING ATTENDANCE BY VISITING

"Look, Miss King," said one of the little ones in our Beginners' Department, "here are two chairs wasted."

More than ever before we have been concerned over empty chairs during these last years. How to remedy this has been one of our big problems.

We used attendance charts in our department—original ones made by two of our talented teachers. The children loved them and looked forward eagerly to the new ones each time they were changed. We also used the absentee cards. In fact, all the tried and proven methods to help attendance were incorporated in our plans and had not failed to interest the children, yet we were not getting the best results.

Finally we came to realize that many times it was not the fault of the children that they were absent. The blame lay on the parents who did not put forth the effort necessary to get them there, or they planned motor trips or other trips for Sunday without taking the Sunday school hour into consideration. So we set out to arouse the parents. The superintendent and teachers put forth combined efforts to gain a personal touch with the parents and rather place the responsibility on their shoulders.

The superintendent himself began calling on absentees. The teachers also called. What wonderful experiences they had! Many parents expressed much surprise at our visits and remarked that it was the first time any Sunday school teacher or superintendent had ever been in their home.

One of our teachers set aside an hour each week to call every member of her class on the phone. That gave her a weekly visit with every member, whether present or absent on the previous Sunday.

Did we gain anything? Indeed we did. Just letting the parents know by our visits that their own boys and girls were really missed seemed to go far in gaining their co-operation. Our attendance crept up and up. We were binding ourselves by the personal touch with these parents and bridging over a gulf between the home and the Sunday school.

Also our whole school gained by our home visiting. We took advantage of the opportunity to invite the parents also, as we had classes for all. In many cases we were rewarded by having the whole family attend. In one case a nine-year-old boy whose father er would not rise in time to drive him walked almost two miles to a street his anxiety to keep his attendance up. When we called, the father, who was not a church member, gratefully accepted our invitation to the Bible class saying must be something worth while at Sunday school that had such a hold on the boy. He is now one of our best workers.

We have succeeded in building up our department and greatly helped the Bible school by interesting the older members of these families.

To sum it all up—it is the personal touch that counts.—The Sunday School Times, Kansas City, Missouri.

Paul in Ephesus

Scripture Lesson—Acts 19; Eph. 3
Printed Text—Acts 19:8-20.

Devotional Reading—2 Cor. 1:3-11.

Golden Text—Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather even reprove them.—Eph. 5:11.

Introductory Note

Our last lesson in Acts left Paul in Ephesus, where he spent a year and a half at this time. Leaving that city he went to Ephesus for a brief stay, promising to return later. Then he went to Jerusalem to fulfil a vow; then to Antioch, thus beginning his second missionary journey. After his second missionary journey, after he began his third journey, he visited the churches of Asia Minor, and finally reached Ephesus.

Among the first persons whom Paul met in Ephesus was a little band of Christians. Paul, after traveling from Corinth to Antioch and the close of his second journey, left Aquila and Priscilla at Ephesus. The eloquent Paul came there soon after. But it was only a few weeks before Paul returned, and it was not strange that in a great city where so many small companies had not met before.

Paul found that this obscure little city, headed by Apollos, far from Palestine, had been baptized with John's baptism of repentance at the beginning of Jesus' ministry, and had returned to Ephesus. Their eloquent young leader had left them, and their Christian baptism, into the name of the Father and into the name of the Holy Spirit, it was also the prayer and laying on of hands for the coming of the Holy Spirit. Paul instructed them more fully and told them of the wonderful new experience that had come, with the result that they were baptized according to the Christian way (Matt. 28:19, 20) and the Holy Spirit came upon them as upon the first disciples. They received the spiritual transformation, power, the new inspiration of love and peace, such as they had never known before.

Ephesus stood a mile from the Aegean Sea, fronting an artificial harbor, and met the ships of all lands, and above the Temple of Artemis (Diana) stood the most magnificent building in Asia Minor, though the image it contained was only a shapeless block. Its population was principally Greek, though with an Oriental mixture. Ephesus is now a desolation, haunted by wild beasts, and its ruins are a small Turkish village.

ok.—Hurlburt. This place was visited by an American clergyman who found a human being lived in Ephesus; Ayasalouk there are merely a few huts, the inhabitants living in extreme wretchedness, dependence and insensibility. Thus the prediction of the Spirit fulfilled, that "the candlestick would be moved out of its place, except they repent." 2:5.

19:8. Synagogue. Paul always worked in the regular worshipping of the Jews of the City where he was three months he did his best to persuade the Jews before making an open appeal to the Gentiles.

But the most refused to believe, and even spoke evil of the Way to the Jews. Paul was striving to reach, try to shake it out as bad, so that it might disturb their consciousness. "The Way" was written with a capital as it began one of the names by which the Christian religion was designated. This opposition actually drove him from the synagogue and he continued his preaching in a hall of a school owned by, or perhaps by, a man named Tyrannus. In a hall of this sort he could speak as he pleased and when he wished. Here, therefore, he continued two years. He preached, made tents, went from house to house, worked miracles, and founded a large worshipping church.

But success always brings opposition. First, came the opposition of the Jews, the strolling Jews mainly, who pretended to cure diseases by means of incantations and magical formulae. In this case, it was the opposition of imitation, they sought to use for themselves the source of Paul's ability to heal, and thus either win for themselves, or belittle Paul's ability. The startling result in the case of Sceva who tried this shook the Jews, aroused great fear of the power of God, and great rejoicings among the Christians.

Practised magical arts, such as jugglery and all those things which seem to appear able to do supernatural things. Their books. Parchment or papyrus filled with incantations, recipes, formulas more or less ancient to be recited over evil spirits, and the like. Silver. A piece of silver, a Greek drachma (—a Roman denarius, worth 15c, to be the standard coin of the empire. It was at that time the day's wage of an ordinary laborer, so that the 50,000 denarii equivalent to at least $100,000 to-day was a large sum, but such books may be very expensive, and there is no indication that all the Ephesian Christians were poor.

It mightily, in proportion as superstitious, did the word of the Lord have power. It was natural, therefore, that those who still made these superstitions a source of their wealth should vehemently oppose the new religion, and Paul was under. Out of this came the riot led by Demetrius the shrine maker, verses 21-41.

Demetrius was probably the head of the whole guild of shrine-makers. There were small models of the Ephesian Artemis (the Greek Diana, the huntress), set on a pedestal over which a canopy was spread. They were of silver and terracotta or marble. The silver shrines long ago were melted up, but others have been found in large numbers around Ephesus. The business was large because these silver shrines were used all over the province of Asia, and in many ways, either carried on the person or set up in the house as protection. Some were placed in the temple as dedicatory offerings to the goddess. They were purchased by pilgrims to the temple, just as rosaries and images of the Virgin are bought by pilgrims to Lourdes.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Grew the Word of God

"So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed." Ac. 19:20. Some written testimonials will illustrate this lesson, perhaps better than any outline of exhortation. A missionary named Richardson, who had been zealously preaching the gospel in Africa, went to a village about three miles from his headquarters on the Congo. There he began to preach and gave out that well-known hymn:

"Come to Jesus, come to Jesus,
He will save you now!"

They had scarcely finished the first verse, when the chief of the village came out of the crowd and said, "White man, here are my idols and charms; do with them as you please. I can stand against your God no longer." That was the beginning of a most wonderful awakening. Some time afterwards when I again passed through that part of the country, I found flourishing there a church with over 200 members. These people had tasted of Christ and found his worth. They were not going selfishly to keep that knowledge to themselves. They took two of their people and sent them to preach Christ to their neighbors, and they supported them. That is the kind of converts we have in Africa, who when they accept Christ, accept him wholly and simply, prepared to follow the teaching of his Word. Would that professing Christians in civilized nations were the same!

Influences of Pernicious Books

"Let thine eyes look right on, . . . ponder the path of thy feet." Pr. 4:25-27. The influence of pernicious books can never be fully calculated in this world. The boy David Hume was a believer in the Scriptures until he ransacked the works of infidels to prepare for a debate in which he was to take part. It is said of Voltaire that when only five years of age he committed to memory an infidel poem, and was never able after that to undo its pernicious influence upon his mind. Thomas Chambers, an officer of the British Government, said that all the boys brought before the criminal courts almost invariably ascribe their downfall to impure reading.

What May the Young Student Believe Today?

My Dear Young Friends:

In all the many aspects of the Christian Church in our Western lands today nothing is more inspiring or more like the church of apostolic days than the splendid enthusiasm of young believers. In your ardent faith, your personal loyalty to Christ, your reliance on the Spirit of God, you are often an example to those who in mid-life have lost their first love. Yet it would be idle to assume that the Christian student finds it always easy to believe in these days of fierce intellectualism. Dark fears and haunting doubts will invade the mind and trouble the heart till you cry out for deliverance. Especially is it true that in the face of so-called "scientific unbelief" you need to meet argument and have a reason for the faith that is in you.

Difficulties within and problems from without will easily lead you to that attitude of "suspended judgment" which is so fatal to the Christian life, but instead of the mistaken method of condemning doubt as sinful we should rather seek the light which banishes darkness.

Recently a professor of biology prejudiced by agnosticism, had led his class in the dissection of a rabbit; and he concluded by declaring that, as they had seen everything in the animal, they could not longer be so foolish as to believe there was a soul or a God. When some of the students asked me the next day what I would have replied to such clear proofs, I told them that recently a piano-tuner had taken my piano entirely to pieces, proving that it consisted of nothing but wires and hammers; but he had more sense than the professor, for he did not try to convince me that there was no such thing as music or a Master Musician.

You will find an answer to every clever assault on the faith. And as an Eastern writer has put it, "Agnosticism is the insecure refuge of the shallow intellect." Ignorance often doubts; fuller knowledge brings the answer to our doubts. And when you find it hard to meet the anti-religious argument, you will certainly find it better to cling to your faith and await the fuller light which is sure to come. Today the Christian student may render magnificent service to his young friends by battling with blatant unbelief and making a study of the strong intellectual basis of our faith in Christ. The day has passed when unbelief was a sign of intelligence. The scientific world has swung right around; its real leaders are on the side of the church.

Sometimes you will need to dig deep to find a reply to the quibbles of the unbeliever. Meantime, do not allow the unsolved problem to fool you into thinking that it is insoluble. Christ is still the living truth, and Christian faith can rest in the strong assurance that fuller light and vaster knowledge is the one thing needed to vindicate our glorious faith. But while you are in difficulty you may always fall back upon the inalienable soul within you, with its unquenchable craving for the higher life and its insistent demand for God. The words of the ancient writer Tertullian still hold good. "Anima naturaliter Christiana." "The argument of the soul always holds; for everywhere and always men are conscious of the inborn forces urging them to break the fetters of sin and earth and rise above to that which is victoriously pure and vital. If we trust the guiding stars of heart and mind, freeing them from idle prejudices, we shall find they will lead us to the Savior as surely as the ancient star led the Magi of old.

It is worth while remembering that science is still in its infancy; each year it moves nearer to the perfect understanding of God's universe. But in its present half-lights there are bound to be shadows in which unbelief will thrive. Keep in the sunlight, therefore, of all the grace of the strong Son of God; for Christian experience is one of the greatest solvents of spiritual problems. And since the discovery of the mysterious forces upon which the whole science of air-telegraphy is based there are not many who would like to deny the possibility of communion with the invisible. Tune in on the radio of the trustful and believing heart, and you will hear within you the voice from heaven itself. The Spirit of God will lead you till all your fears are banished and all your doubts are solved.

If I Were the Treasurer

1. I would plan a budget. Prepare a statement of the financial needs of the society, showing how much should be given for missions, for local expenses, for Christian Endeavor work, for other purposes. Show as nearly as possible how this money could be obtained, using such sources of income as the proceeds of entertainments or sales, pledges from members, and contributions (such as are obtained in some churches) from the Alumni of the church.

2. I would secure pledges. The treasurer, working with either a permanent finance committee or certain members chosen temporarily for this work, will then see each member and ask that a pledge be made payable weekly or monthly. It is best to have signed pledge-cards to make these promises more definite and more easily remembered.

3. I would collect pledges systematically. Notify all members regularly of amounts due on pledges. Supply each member with a packet of envelopes, each bearing the identification number that has been assigned to him. Opportunity to give through the envelope system may be extended both at the weekly prayer meeting and at business meetings held monthly or bimonthly.

4. I would safeguard the society funds. All money should be kept in a bank, in the name of the society. Payments should be made only on order signed by the proper society officers, usually the president and the recording secretary.

5. I would apply business methods always. This will mean an itemized record of receipts and disbursements, a careful record of any bills unpaid, reports to the society at each business meeting, safeguarding of cancelled checks and bills or orders on which the payments were based. The accounts should be audited at least annually.

6. I would train an assistant or successor. Whenever possible I would share experience with some newer member, who might eventually be selected as my successor in this work. In any event, upon leaving this position I should feel it my duty to explain to the newly elected treasurer the books and records and the general system that has been followed.—C. E. World.

giving for any purpose seems hard. are factors in a situation which make well-nigh mandatory for us to examine motives undergirding the home mission enterprise and to consider those correct in the churches which help or hinder missionary support.

Sympathy—The appeal to sympathy one which quickly brings a response that appeal has been used widely. Things have done more to stir the heart, reach the pocketbooks of church members than photographic or verbal pictures of mountaineer log cabins, Negro shacks, congested city tenements. Human nature responds quickly to such presentation. There is reason to believe, however, that sympathy appeal has nearly served in home missions. To be sure, there is still plenty of poor people in America; the proportion is much smaller than in the past and to continue this appeal to break down the self-respect of the poor who might be included in such groups, to prejudice them against the Church since they come to feel that they are exploited for publicity purposes rather than assisted from Christian motives. An unfortunate result is the building up of the minds of church constituencies of a roughly misleading idea of what the missionary program is, with a consequent tendency to defeat the program itself. Sympathy motive is a dangerous motive to rely upon.

* From the Report of a committee to the National Home Missions Congress.

Fear—Another motive which has been used is fear. We have stated definitely that unless we Christianize certain nations they would paganize us. There has been and still is considerable truth in this statement and the appeal is an effective one. For example, can organized society exist in our great cities and will it properly be safe if we continue to neglect the generations of youth to become gangsters and gunmen with thoroughly antisocial attitudes when adequate church programs have built entirely different conceptions of the lives of the same individuals? The motive is probably an unfortunate one to use when it refers to particular national groups since it does a major injustice to the members of that group who are taking their place in the community as purposeful and useful Christians, and it creates wrong attitudes even toward the members of such groups. However, it is well for our supporting constituency to face frankly and frequently the positive results of living in communities or nations where the work now done by home-missionary agencies is neglected.

Self-Interest—Missions have sometimes been promoted on the assurance that Christian religion promotes communal well-being; it tends to improve person's wants, to build up reliable character, to promote interest in community enterprises, and in general to make life easier and more prosperous. Just as an advantage for an individual to have a home in a community-supplied church. This motive is not the best.

Christian Duty—It is quite clear that Christ had a program of expansion of followers and that he sent his disciples to carry on this work of expansion. Some very decided ideas about the nature of his kingdom and issued urgent instructions to his followers for carrying out this work. To many loyal Christians

As we read of the terrible calamities that are befalling the people in other parts of the world we are thankful that it is as well with us as it is here. The spring has been rather cold but we are thankful for the rains, as they give promise of a harvest, and this country depends almost entirely upon its harvests.

The political situation is still abnormal, as we are under a dictator, awaiting the elections which have been called for November. The rule of the provisional government however, seems to be beyond comparison better than the corrupt regime which it deposed by the revolution of a year ago.

Our missionary work is going forward as usual. A week of meetings in Rio Cuarto with Bible studies for believers has been of blessing, and there are candidates for baptism. Two more have been baptized in Cañabrera. Brother Sickel preached a week in Rosario in order to study the field there, and was greatly pleased with the outlook. Sister Sickel continues in poor health, but Sister Larsen is a good companion and helper for her. Brother Adolfo Zeche has been much occupied on account of the illness of his wife who has been obliged to spend a time in a hospital in Buenos Aires and have a delicate operation on the thyroid gland.

She is now recuperating nicely. Brother Emilio Cabo, who was formerly a notorious criminal and was converted in Laboulaye, has been holding out faithfully and now is convinced that the Lord wants him to go from house to house to testify of the love of God. He worked in this way in Laboulaye and has now come to Rio Cuarto and is working street by street, depending on the Lord for support. Many think his mind is affected, but he speaks fairly sensibly, knows a surprising lot of Scripture, and his boldness impresses the people. I wish that all believers had more of his zeal.

Why Support Home Missions?

By the Rev. Jay S. Stowell, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Changes in social and industrial realms, changes in public thinking, changes in the home missionary program itself, and the startling fact of an annual decline in missionary receipts in an era of unprecedented national prosperity and actual increase in giving along certain other lines, (Though now, nearly a year after the writing of this article, the prosperity boom is deflated and that the missionary enterprise is a tion of the program launched by helf is sufficient warrant for their ion in it.

Children—One of the most effecals which the home-missionary en-as today is the challenge of the girls of America. An amazing home missionary work is actually boys and girls and the volume of k is steadily increasing. Almost ne missionary enterprise has its school or its classes, its clubs, its religious instruction, its daily va-urch school, and other related ac-Much of the money which goes missionary churches is for equip-erve boys and girls and there is why the missionary enterprise italize this appeal for the build-igion into the life of the young the nation. Much of the appeal ar East program, which kept the of American people for years, not merely of the fact of human t of the fact that the people who ry were boys and girls. Surely more legitimate appeal and pos-more effective appeal for the pro-home-missionary interest than the things which the home-missionary enterprise has done, is doing, and ought to do for boys and girls.

Social and Individual Salvation—The main motive on which the home missionary enterprise must depend is the abounding confidence that only in Jesus Christ can the individual and society escape sin and degradation and find complete fulfillment of life. In other words, the home missionary enterprise is based upon a profound conviction of the worth-whileness of the Christian religion in the life of the individual and the nation and of the effectiveness of the Christian Church as the mediator of Jesus Christ and his religion to the lives of men.

The Challenge—To those of us who believe that Jesus Christ, the founder and exponent of Christianity, is man's chief need, that fullness of life can be found only in him, and that personal morality and social righteousness must find its basis in the religion which he taught, there can be no more inspiring task than that of going out to enlist the wealth of the nation and the rising flood of young life in the challenging task of making available to all the communities of America the Christian privileges which some communities now enjoy—The Missionary Review of the World.

You always knew where Brother Smith stood in his convictions and invariably they were right and scriptural. Our loss has been his gain. His mantle of leadership as head of our deacons has fallen upon the worthy shoulders of T. H. Kyler. We have also suffered the loss of several of our most faithful families in their moving to other cities to secure employment. May the Lord raise up others to "stand in the gaps."

In spite of the depression, intensified in many respects in this district over some others, all salaries have been met up to the present. If present conditions and trends continue into the winter, the severe test is still ahead, but "our God will supply all our needs according to his riches in Christ Jesus."

Pastor, CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

Advantages, Dangers, Needs and Opportunities

7. We need an increased passion for souls. As never before we must herald the Gospel of saving Grace. Here we face the next problem for we are always finding that THE PEOPLE WILL NOT COME TO CHURCH. Possibly this is a blessing in disguise, for it puts flatly before the church of these last days the opportunity to do what the first Christians were told to do and which Christians have failed to do.
Christ said to the first Disciples "You shall be my witnesses." In these decaying, Laodicean days, God is giving every true child of God the precious privilege of carrying the Gospel himself. It is honestly not beneath the dignity of any preacher or layman to carry in his pockets, or the women in their purses, portions of the Bible, Gospels and tracts, for the strengthening of the saints and the sending forth of the way of Salvation. If our churches will do these things, in harmony and in love, by the power of the Spirit, the Brethren churches may experience the greatest revival and blessing in all history. The challenge is before us,
WILL WE DO IT?

Our Opportunities

From another angle still, let us consider our Opportunities. We all remember that Paul under inspiration divides humanity into three classes, the Jew, the Gentile and the Church of God. Since we hold in our hands the Word of reconciliation, and are told to give it to the whole world, what is more logical than to consider the whole of humanity according to the divisions of the Word of God! We are instructed in the Word that there is a remnant of Jews according to the election of Grace. Along with this truth is the present day observation, that the Jews are more open to the Gospel today than for centuries. This is a door of opportunity. It is my firm conviction that our churches in this district should do something for the evangelization of the Jews. Many of the unprofitable Gentiles are now deaf to God's salvation. The Jews are becoming interested. It is not possible to discuss the many angles of this matter, but surely this conference should do one of two things, either consider plans for starting a Jewish work under the Brethren Church or appoint an investigating committee to determine the type of work now being done by others, endorse the same, and encourage our respective churches to assist in such work.

which the Scriptures refer, is the Gentiles. To this class we have been making our appeals and should continue to do so with all the vigor possible. More money, more prayer, more intense interest and more publicity and more confidence can well be placed behind our mission boards, both home and foreign. These boards are worthy of being remembered now in your prayers and your wills.

3. The Church or the third class of humanity, strange as it may seem, presents to the Brethren church a real door of opportunity. Many good and honest believers in the apostate churches are tired of the husks, and they want good grain. They are tired of the crumbs and want real bread. If our congregations are right before God, we will reap a great harvest in those who are seeking to hear the Word of God not only preached, but SYSTEMATICALLY TAUGHT. It is a common conviction that the Lord has raised up the Brethren Church in these apostate times for the purpose of delivering the "Thus saith the Lord." If we are not equal to the occasion, God will be compelled to provide some other means of feeding his wandering sheep.

Our churches should have a clear and united testimony and thus provide pleasant and refreshing pasture in every congregation. Our ministers should emphasize in the present days the prophetic note, giving emphasis to not only the events in the world which are now fulfilling prophecy, but the teaching concerning the closing days of this church age. Our people should be instructed concerning the future of Israel, the doom of the Gentile world powers, the rise of the false messiah, and most of all the truths concerning the Second Coming of Christ and the coming Kingdom. These are the things which people are interested in these days, and these are the things which they ought to know and these are the things which we can tell them.

As we look over the vast fields of endeavor before us as a church, how insignificant and helpless we feel. There is nothing to do but to thank God, take courage, and seek his will. In his will, he will make our few loaves and fishes feed the multitudes.

"TREE MOTHERS"

While in America I met a lady who purchases, sets out, and dedicates trees to the memory of worthy citizens. I call these plantings her "Tree Babies."

In China, mothers bring their wee ones to some fine old tree, offer the babies, and paste little prayer papers on the trees, praying that this "Tree Mother" adopt and give long life to their little ones. The tree has lived long. It, of course, can make its adopted children live as long.

These customs remind us of the more beautiful one when mothers in Christian lands dedicate their children to the Savior that they may live in him, our "Tree of Life," and prove useful in his service. The hope of the world builds big on babies.

Oh, that Christians in America would dedicate their wealth to the cause of saving the world's babies!—Rev. H. G. C. Hallock.

FACIST PENAL COLONIES

Washington, D. C.—Very little uncensored news escapes the authorities on the Italian penal islands of Lipari, Ponza, Tremiti and Lambadusa. These islands are crowded with men who are made to suffer more terribly than the meanest convicts on account of their political opposition to Fascism. Not only are these prisoners brutally treated but their physical and sanitary conditions are abominable. Many of these prisoners formerly held positions of trust and importance in the Italian Government. . . .

Authentic information has reached America which paints a vivid picture of unbelievable squalor, brutality, destitution and persecution which obtains on these dreary and faraway places reserved for political prisoners opposed to the regime of Mussolini. The following are extracts from an article the sources of which are confidential for obvious reasons:

"At the beginning of this year deportations of prisoners became so large that the Islands of Tremiti in the Adriatic Sea and Lambadusa in the Mediterranean Sea, near Africa, were added to the other two penal islands above named. On these four islands the prison life of the unfortunates is as brutal and inhuman as was suffered by prisoners during the Dark Ages. This has been especially true since the escape of Lussu, Rosselli and Nitti, from the Island of Lipari (1929). With the infliction of the horrid 'crescendo' by the Facist militia, a reign of terror exists which beggars description. At Lipari there is a garrison of 600 militiamen for 500 prisoners, under the command of a Fascist colonel and eleven officers, all of the first time 'squadristi.'

"At Lipari after the death of the deported Fillippich of Trieste, who was shot by the militiamen in a store of the town, another deportee, Sollazzi of Parma, was killed by a bayonet wound. An inhabitant of the town, a young barber, saw, by chance, the poor Sollazzi taken away by force by the Fascist militia, who beat him. An hour later, the corpse of Sollazzi was found near the walls of the fort where the barracks of the militia are. Sollazzi had been murdered.

"The following morning, the same militia arrested another deportee, father of eight children, upon the accusation of having killed Sollazzi. About twenty of the persons sentenced to deportation asked that they be permitted to testify that their comrade had been with them the entire day of the murder and that he could not have been near Sollazzi even for a moment. They paid no attention to the request. And what is more—the inconvenient witness was taken away by force to the barracks of the militia and tortured.

"Each day scenes of violence are repeated, both on the mainland and the penal islands. The deportees are beaten, arrested, insulted. Each night, hourly, the militia make calls and visits at the homes of the deported. They awaken the unfortunate beings each hour, they make them get up from their beds to answer the roll call. This occurs from seven o'clock in the evening until morning.

"Attorney Beligamini, who had been deported for two years (1926-1928) for something said previously, when he was deputy (Congressman) of Como, has again, like many other old exiles, been sent to Ponza, and this time for five years. Attorney Pelladini, and other anti-fascists, Umberto, Pagan, Scaricezzini, Parri, after a very short period of freedom, were again sentenced to the islands for five years. Just previous to his last sentence Beligamini was arrested and sentenced to three months in prison for having delayed to answer the roll call at an hour in the early morning.

"The spies and hired plotters, disgraced exiles, increase. These vile individuals always to imperil the prisoners by insurrection, false plots, and fabricated documents, and all this in perfect accord with the police and Fascist militia.

"The morale of the prisoners, in these terrible sufferings, holds high. In May of this year, the exiles in Ponza asserted themselves in the streets of the town, to the cry of "Down with Fascism!"

"All the news, which from different sources comes to us from the islands of exile, confirms the absolute and urgent necessity of an appeal to the conscience of civilization before it is too late. For death is already awaiting thousands of victims whose living death is the constant fate of thousands of the Mussolini regime."—Rite News Bulletin.

struments for using its power, has weight, form nor mass. To the end of days, he was unable to offer any notion or conception of it except that gained by observing its effects. Yet he believed in its existence, guided by experience rather than by any rational conception.

For the same reason we who are Christians believe in the reality of the world. We have entered it by the Birth and there we have met God. The Person of Jesus Christ; we have experienced his saving power as manifested in victory, peace and joy. The door of the world of reality is open to every soul. Perhaps Thomas A. Edison said it before he crossed the bar. If his reported words are authentic—"It is beautiful over there"—we may have been during those days when the earth was breaking down, his restless spirit have turned at last for research into the realm which during his busy life he neglected, the world of the spirit; there he made his final and greatest discovery in the field of Light, the Light of the glory of God in the Person of Jesus Christ."

There was time, and the great power enough to have made that time before the end.

THE BIGGEST ORANGE

Herbert was hungry, and the big golden oranges upon the table in his room seemed to invite him to take one. That Herbert would have one, of course, he walked over just to smell of them. He knew they came from Peter's uncle in California.

"Get away from there!" called a voice.

Herbert started and looked around. He was in sight, but he scampered to his seat to wait until Peter came. Peter would offer him an orange.

The one upon the top was the brightest, the smoothest, the shiniest orange that Herbert had ever seen.

Then Peter came running into the yard. "Mother said you were here," he said. "I was training my dog in the yard. Hear me?"

E TIE THAT BINDS

LE—On Saturday, September 12, 1931, at 8:00 at the home of the bride, Mr. Lawrence List, and Miss Mary Kinzie of New Lebanon, Ohio, n marriage in the presence of a large number
 n. List is employed as foreman by the McCall Dayton. Mrs. List is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. G. W. Kinzie. They will reside in Dayton, where their previously furnished home awaited them. These young people have the best wishes of their many friends for a happy married life. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, O. W. KINZIE.

SANDY-MONROE—A beautiful church wedding took place in the Second Brethren church of Los Angeles on the 21st of August when Rev. Conrad Sandy of Ashland, Ohio, was united in marriage to Miss Fura Monroe of Los Angeles.
 The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Dr. Kenneth Monroe of Ashland, Ohio, and the groom was attended by Paul Bannan of Long Beach. The double ring ceremony was read by the writer in the presence of a large group of relatives and friends. The happy couple will make their home in Ashland, Ohio, where Mr. Sandy will continue his study for the ministry. A. D. CASHMAN, Pastor.

IN THE SHADOW

MORRISON—Mr. Adelbert Morrison, the husband of our Sister Ida Morrison, passed from this life on September 13, 1931 after a short illness following a stroke. Having been born on May 9, 1854, he was aged 77 years, 4 months and 10 days. Brother Morrison was a retired engineer. He spent many years away from Christ, but it was a delight to see him grow in grace after making his decision for Christ. A genial man and a faithful member of the church has gone from among us to be with the Lord. We pray that the blessed Holy Spirit will comfort the bereaved widow, the three sons, two stepchildren, grandchildren, two brothers and a sister. A. D. CASHMAN, Pastor.

RUTLEDGE—Laura C. Rutledge, daughter of Ezra and Elizabeth Gilbert, was born in Maryland, August 6, 1880, and was called home June 24, 1931, at the age of 50 years, 10 months, and 18 days. As a small girl, with her parents, she came to Ohio and lived near West Alexandria, Ohio. On October 20th, 1898 she was united in marriage to Wesley Rutledge. Since that time the home has been in Dayton. Sister Rutledge came of faithful Dunkard parentage and united with the First Brethren church of Dayton. In spite of her long illness she remained very faithful to her Lord. Surviving her are the husband, a son by a former marriage, Pearl Benner, one grandson, Harry Rausch and many friends. Funeral services were by her pastor. R. D. BARNARD.

NEUMANN—William A. Neumann was born August 10, 1876 and closed an earthly life which in the last years had much of suffering on July 3, 1931, at the age of 54 years, 10 months, and 23 days. He was united in marriage to Sarah Beechly on March 6, 1902. Two daughters blessed the home. As a boy Brother Neumann united with the Lutheran church, and it was only on May 22, 1930 that the pastor had the happy privilege of seeing the home united in the fellowship of the First Brethren church. Besides his life companion, he leaves two daughters, Dorothy, and Mrs. Florence Taylor. There is also one brother and two sisters. Services were by the undersigned. R. D. BARNARD.

KLEPINGER—Jennie Mae Klepinger, daughter of David and Elizabeth Miller, was born September 13, 1872, and was called to the Father's home July 17, 1931. Her age was 58 years, 10 months and 4 days. Thirty-nine years ago she was united in marriage to Daniel W. Klepinger, who preceded her in death in 1926. In early life she made the good decision for Christ, and over 20 years ago united with the First Brethren church. For many years she had been a deaconess in the church and gave of her best in spiritual service. Surviving are two sons, Troy and Robert, and two daughters, Miriam and Evangeline. There is one grandson, Richard Garber Klep-inger. Death followed some years of ill health, and a year of serious illness. Through it all, hers was a testimony of cheerfulness and trust in God. The pastor conducted the last sad rites. R. D. BARNARD.

MILLER—Matilda M. Miller, affectionately known as Grandma Miller, was born in Darke County, Ohio, on January 21, 1842. On August 1, 1861 she was united in marriage to William Miller. Two children were born. The son, Charles, passed away 27 years ago. It was in the home of the daughter, Mrs. Ollie Gibbons, that Grandma Miller made her home.
 It was here she passed away July 28, 1931 at the age of 89 years, 6 months, and 7 days. From early childhood she was a member of the M. E. church in Ft. Jefferson until her removal to Dayton when she united with the First Brethren church. Grandma Miller's was one of the sweetest Christian spirits I have ever known. Few have through so long a life had so marvelous a Christian faith. The burial was in Ab-bottsville Cemetery, the pastor having the last sad rites.
 R. D. BARNARD.

SEELEY—Elva Jane Seeley, who departed this life August 16, 1931, at the age of 77 years, 3 months and 19 days, was the daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Marris. She and her husband, John Leonard Seeley, were blessed with 8 children.
 Only 2 remain—Mrs. Rose Justice, Marshallville, Ohio, and Mrs. Corda Fravert, in whose home the closing days were spent. It was the pastor's privilege just a few weeks before the end to bear Sister Seeley re-affirm her faith and express her desire to be baptized and be received into the church. She suffered a long illness before the end came. Services by the undersigned assisted by Rev. W. A. Gearhart and Brother Roy A. Macher. R. D. BARNARD.

HOUSEKEEPER—Aaron C. Housekeeper was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, January 16, 1853, the son of Aaron and Magdalene Housekeeper. Death came on August 16, 1931, aged 73 years and 7 months. He was united in marriage to Surrilda Bradford in 1879. The home was blessed with 7 children of whom 3—Chas. D. Housekeeper of Dayton; Cal-vrio Housekeeper of Clayton, and Mrs. Magdalene Ott of Brookville—remain. The life companion, one brother and one sister remain. Almost 20 years ago he united with the First Brethren church of Dayton, having made the decision for Christ as the Savior many years before. He was a quiet man, but of very great faith. Funeral services were by the pastor.
 R. D. BARNARD.

BRUMBAUGH—Miriam O. Brumbaugh, youngest daughter of George and Frances Beach, was born in New Albany, Indiana, May 26, 1876, and was called to her heavenly home in her 55th year. On April 21, 1931 she was united in marriage to Prof. G. W. Brumbaugh, who remains to know the loss, with the daughter—Mary Elizabeth Brumbaugh, and one sister—Miss Cornelia Beach of Louisville, Kentucky. Early in life Sister Brumbaugh became a Christian and was faithful in the worship and work of Christ. She united with the First Brethren church of Dayton in 1921. She was very active in all church activity, giving service through the Deacon Board like unto the service of that New Testament woman, Dorcas. Death came suddenly after there was apparent convalescence from an illness of several months and a serious operation. It was in this home where the undersigned was first entertained when he came as pastor to the city of Dayton, and the friendship in Christ was very close indeed. May God bless these and all other sorrowing friends. Funeral services were in the pastor. R. D. BARNARD.

MILLER—Venola Catharine Miller, daughter of James and Lavina Ward, was born July 21, 1859, and departed this life
 September 3, 1931, at the age of 72 years, 1 month, and 12 days. All her life had been spent in Knox county, near North Liberty, Ohio. In 1881 she was united in marriage to Melvin Miller. A short time after their marriage she became a member of the Brethren church of North Liberty. Her suffering was long and very intense, yet in it all she was kind and loving. She is survived by the husband, one son, Don Miller of North Liberty, also one granddaughter, one sister, and many other relatives and friends. The undersigned was her pastor some years ago, and a close friend of the family.
 We are sad with the family, still we rejoice in her triumphant faith. R. D. BARNARD.

CUMMINGS—Forest R. Cummings was born in Fort Scott, Kansas, December 20th, 1908, and was accidentally killed at West Plains, Missouri, October 9th, 1931, at the age of 22 years, 9 months and 19 days. He leaves to mourn his untimely death his wife, Mable, and son, Richard Dale, one brother of Neodesha, Kansas, one sister of Knightstown, Indiana, and a host of other relatives and friends. His parents died when he was but a child.

Forest had made his home with an aunt and uncle, Mr.
 and Mrs. Carl Cummings of south of the city of Fort Scott.
 On March 5, 1928 he was married to Miss Mable McDonald of Denver, Colorado. To this union was born the one son, above mentioned. Forest had been in Dallas, Texas for some time, employed at the Texaco refinery. He returned 4 months ago and has since made his home in Fort Scott, Kansas. His sudden death has been a great shock to relatives and friends.

The funeral was conducted from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, October 13, 1931. Beautiful floral offerings were made and the body laid to rest in the Clarksburg cemetery.
 Service by the writer. L. G. WOOD.

ELLISON—Miss Sarah Keesling was born in Indiana, on August 12, 1843, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. M. Hope of Peck, Kansas, October 9th, 1931, at the age of 88 years and 27 days. Miss Keesling was married to I. R. Ellison May 5, 1864, in the state of Indiana.
 To this union were born seven children, four of whom preceded her in death. Her husband, I. R. Ellison, also preceded her by about five years.

The following survive: Mrs. W. M. Hope of Peck, Kansas; Mrs. W. E. Cooper of Enid, Oklahoma; and J. S. Ellison of Minco, Oklahoma. She is also survived by five grandchildren and five great-grandchildren, also by two sisters: Mrs. L. L.
 Bristol, and Mrs. Sant Cummings, both of Indiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellison came to Kansas in 1880 and settled near South Haven, where they resided until death. Mrs.
 Ellison spent the last eleven months with her daughter. She united with the Brethren church about 20 years ago, in which faith she remained faithful until death. The writer was an old friend of the family and was their pastor for 9 years.
 The Ellison home was his home when in that community and a very close friendship was established.

Mrs. Ellison was a very devout Christian woman, whose life was characterized by a very quiet modesty which claimed the respect of all who knew her.

The funeral was conducted from the Christian church of South Haven, Kansas, Sunday, October 11, 1931. Many beautiful floral offerings were made and the body was laid to rest beside that of her husband, in Rose Hill cemetery.

EBY—Sarah Catherine Eby was born 71 years ago near Dayton, a daughter of Abraham and Catherine Beechly. After manifesting a most enviable Christian resignation and com-posture through a long illness, she fell asleep the evening of September 28th, triumphant and rich in hope. Two children survive her—Earl Elsworth Eby who returned from Europe after a four years' absence in time to be with his mother during the last several weeks of her life; and Virgil Eby Koons, also a granddaughter, Helen Louise Koons. Four sisters also survive Mrs. Eby, all residing in the vicinity of Dayton. From early life, Sister Eby has been closely identified with the Brethren church, first at Bear Creek, and later in the Dayton congregation. Because of a long and intimate friendship with Sister Eby and her family, being her pastor at two different times, the writer said the last words over her mortal remains in the Dayton church. Brother Russell Barnard, the pastor, rendered sympathetic assistance. The passing of Sister Eby marked the close of a beautiful, devoted, useful Christian life. She left to her children a rich legacy in sacred memories of her exemplary life and tireless service.
 I here repeat what I said on the day of her burial: The Christian life is worth every effort and sacrifice it may cost just to be able to die with such priceless hope as sustained Sister Eby up to the end. Her children, the church, her large circle of friends are poorer because she has left us; but she has gone on to enter upon the larger, fuller, unending life. This is a source of greatest comfort to those who loved her most. WM. H. BEACHLER.

KELLER—William Keller, son of John and Maria Keller, was born in Ashland, Ohio, October 12, 1869, one of a family of four sons. He answered the summons of death while at his work at the Tappan Store Works, at Mansfield, Ohio, on Monday afternoon, October 5, 1931, at the age of 61 years, 11 months and 23 days.

In the year 1900 William Keller was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Beckley, of Ashland, with whom he spent a happy married life until some five years ago when the union was broken by the death of the wife. For the past two years the deceased had made his home with his brother John Keller at Mansfield. The esteem in which he was held by his employers and fellow-workmen was demonstrated by the presence of his employers and fellow-employees in a body at the brief services held at his home before taking the body to Ashland.

Brother Keller leaves his two brothers, John and George Keller, as the only remaining members of his immediate family, his mother and father and one brother, Orlando, having preceded him in death. A large circle of nephews and nieces and other more distant relatives remain.

William Keller was a member of the Ashland Brethren church, having placed his membership here several years ago. Funeral services were conducted at the church on Thursday afternoon, October 8, by the undersigned as pastor, and assisted by Prof. A. L. DeLozier. Burial in Ashland cemetery.

DIYOL BELOTE.

BEHNER—Jennie Behner was born January 26th, 1855, in Huntington, Indiana, and came to the end of her earthly career September 23rd, at the age of 76 years. Her husband, David Behner, preceded her in death 26 years ago. She became a Christian early in life and later united with the Brethren church of Warsaw, under the pastorate of Dr. C. G. Carpenter. She was very regular in attendance and a faithful laborer in the church, as long as health permitted. For the past several years she has been a great sufferer. She leaves one son, Charles Behner. Her funeral services were conducted from the First Brethren church in Warsaw, Sunday afternoon, September 27th, by her pastor.

E. M. RIDDLE.

KEMP—William Edwin Kemp, son of A. F. and Sarah Kemp, was born on July 27, 1874, near Leon, Iowa, and passed away Sunday morning, September 20, 1931, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Nancy Prather at Marion, Iowa, at the age of 57 years, 1 month and 24 days.

On October 13, 1931, he was united in marriage to Mattie A. Garber. To this union two children were born: Bert F. Kemp of Sutherland, Iowa, and Nancy M. Prather of Marion, Iowa. Besides his loving wife and two children, he leaves to mourn his departure, his mother, Mrs. Sarah Kemp, of Des Moines; a sister, Mrs. Ella Woodard, of Leon; two brothers, J. Lee Kemp, of Augusta, Georgia, and F. H. Kemp of Des Moines, six grandchildren and many other relatives and friends.

He united with the Christian church in Leon at the age of 14, transferring his membership in 1895 to the Brethren church at Crown chapel. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Brethren church in Leon, and much of its early growth is due to his efforts. He spent most of his life in Christian work, serving as evangelist-singer, evangelist, pastor and lecturer. He held pastorates at Mt. Etna, Udell and Des Moines, Iowa. During the last years of his life he served as pastor of the Christian church in Leon, placing his membership again in this church. Thus he completed his life's work amid the scenes of his boyhood, enjoying that rare privilege of being a prophet who received honor even in his own country. It can truly be said of him that he fought the good fight, he finished his course, he kept the faith. The crown that he will receive as a reward for this faithful service will be studded with many jewels representing souls that have found the abundant life through his ministry.

Funeral services were held in the Stewart Funeral Home in Leon, September 22, 1931. Each of his fellow ministers in the city assisted in the service. Rev. B. Frank Jacobs reading the scripture and leading in prayer. Rev. Howard

P. Young reading the obituary and an original poem. Rev. Miles H. Taber delivering the sermon. Burial in the Leon cemetery.

MRS. MATTIE E.

STEINBRAKER—Suddenly on October 11, 1931, residence, Mrs. Emma E. Steinbraker, beloved wife of late Charles Henry Steinbraker and daughter of Emma, the late John H. Goss, passed to be with her Lord. She had been for a number of years a member of the First church of Washington. She had suffered much before her departure and this Home-going truly was an earthly "rest" for her. Surviving her are: her mother, E. daughter, Mrs. Minnie Funk, two brothers, Arthur and Goss, and a sister, Mrs. Florence Totten. The funeral service was in charge of her pastor, the undersigned, home, and interment took place at Glenwood Cemetery.

THE Attack of the Atheists

Brother Wood, pastor of our church in Fort Scott, Kansas, sends me a sample of the literature which is being distributed in his city. It is a four page affair, printed much in the style of a newspaper, entitled "The Bible in the Balance." All its contents are devoted to an attack on the Bible, rehashing hundreds of the old charges of infidelity, such as alleged "Contradictions," "Improper Literature," attacks on the character of Christ, and charges of "Diabolism" against the God of the Bible.

I went over the entire publication carefully, and among the many charges against the Bible I found not one that is new, not one that has not been answered again and again. Infidelity seldom digs up anything that is new, but repeats the ancient shibboleths. To an untaught generation, not acquainted with the curiosities of historic unbelief, these things may seem to be new and unanswerable. This is their danger.

HOW shall We Meet the Attack?

One way is to invoke old laws, or work for the passage of new ones, which will forbid the distribution of such literature. Much as one may deprecate the scattering of such material, to invoke the law against it quite often works in its favor. When fined or jailed, its writers and distributors become "martyrs for the cause of truth," and this is a role they love to play.

The better way is to take up the charges and answer them, showing their stupidity and vulgarity. The way to meet wrong ideas is with right ideas. The trouble with the Church is that, having answered these infidel charges many times, she forgets that every new generation needs to be taught. Especially is this true of the present generation. Theological training, which used to be a part of the training of every Christian family, is now confined for the most part to preachers. And even some of the preachers are untaught, the schools which they attend being in charge of "play-actor Christians" who themselves are in doubt as to the truth of the Word of God.

The various churches, and the Brethren Church especially, should have its ablest writers preparing defensive tracts against this infidel literature, couched in popular instead of theological terminology. And such literature should be made available to every pastor and church free. Then the pastors should organize groups of their children and young people to distribute the literature. Why not? I believe that the church has young men and women who are just as courageous as any set of atheists. When the unbelievers hold a meeting, let them stand at the doors and hand out the truth just as the unbelievers hand out untruth at the doors of the churches. With great crowds gathering at theaters and football stadiums and other public places, what an opportunity to scatter the testimony to the truth. The unbelievers are not missing these opportunities.

The Truth is stronger than error. All it needs is a chance at the human mind. I hope from time to time, in this department of the Evangelist, to answer some of these arguments from the camp of unbelief. But there is a great deal to write about these days. And time and space are limited.

THE Testimony of a "Muckraker"

The other day in Cleveland a reporter asked Lincoln Steffens, who has exposed more civic graft and corruption than any other living man, whether there is as much graft in business today as in the past.

Steffens answered, "Much more."

The truth of Mr. Steffens' answer may be found in the present situation of the second largest city in America, almost literally bankrupt because of the plundering by politicians. And "racketeering" has reached proportions unimaginable a few years ago. And the worst of the matter is that people are apparently willing that it should be so.

Of course, just now we are feeling very virtuous because the mighty Capone has been sentenced to prison. And some simple minds will suppose that now the problem of "racketeering" has been dealt with. The same minds during the war thought that if the Kaiser could only be hung, the troubles of humanity would be fairly well over.

The conviction of Capone is doubtless a cause for rejoicing, but looked at from one standpoint the accomplishment should cause us to cover ourselves with sackcloth and ashes and appoint a day of mourning.

After conducting for years the greatest criminal syndicate of modern times, ruling with machine guns, snuffing out lives with brazen impunity, Capone is finally sent to prison for eleven years for evading the payment of his income tax! That is certainly an ironic commentary on American government and justice. Our Lord would describe such procedure as the swallowing of camels and the straining at gnats. Still, we should be thankful for small favors.

IS a Boy worth more than a Monkey?

Brother William Schaffer, in his lively Church Bulletin, tells of a peculiar incident which took place at Belle Isle near Detroit, Michigan. It seems that a man tossed some cigarettes into the monkey cages and was promptly arrested!

Monkeys cost money.

Boys and girls are not so important in our scheme of civilization. The world needs to be taught the Word of the Lord in these matters. "How much then is a man of more value than a sheep?" (Matt. 12:12)

Doggedness

During the late awful war, a soldier was asked to explain the possibility of continuing longer to hope for victory under the fearful conditions that prevailed and against the enormous difficulties that were opposing an advance. His answer was, "It's doggedness that does it." By grim determination, with faces set like flint, victories were won. It is so in this earthly life and on the whole field of human endeavor. A war is on between evil and good. A contest has to be waged regarding every one of our interests. We can have victory if we want it enough, but it cannot be fully gained without coming apparently insurmountable obstacles and defeating enemies stronger than ourselves. It is doggedness that does it, we get down into the trenches of evil, or out upon the waste of "no land," in the dangerous dark and with the support of feeling. Will has to hold when all else fails.

This will is a furnishing that is supplied by God. The whole scheme of creation in view the manifestation of the image of God. The dark mystery of evil was a veil to roll in upon Paradise in order that the light of the glory of God might rise in splendid contrast upon it. In the face of the history of Jesus Christ, the personality, the character, and the power of the eternal Spirit were to be declared to the world. Thus human history upon this sphere has been and will be advanced upon the will, the infinite determination.

But not without human determination. It is not enough that we should behold the image of the glorious God in the marvellous and lovely incarnation of him in Christ. It is manifested in the history of his church. ... Because Christ lives, we live. Because Christ works, we work. Because Christ overcame the world by a prayerful determination, so do we. In his extremest trial, Christ being in an agony, prayed earnestly. So must we. Deserted by friends, in the hands of his enemies, yet to realize in the gloom the nearness of Christ yet held on in dogged determination until he could cry, "It is finished." So we.

But, when the battle is no more than a slight skirmish, how prone we are to give up when we are but a little sick, how easily we give up; if Christ, who always comes to our help, does not come immediately to our help, does not come immediately to our help.

Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory! Christ won it for us, and will win it in and through us. He will make us and faithful servants, soldiers able to endure hardship and take wounds in the only good fight, the fight of faith. So, then, never accept doubt and fear, let go of the Savior, always be ready for cheer, come what may. You may be sometimes to doggedness, but it does not mean defeat. Rev. C. G. Hazard, in The Presbyterian

Far-called our navies melt away—
On dune and headland sinks the fire—
O, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

drunk with sight of power, we loose,
Wild tongues that have not thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use Or lesser breeds without the Law—
O Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

On the Wrong Path: Germany

Twenty-five years ago, a handful of German militarists, England's naval supremacy, conceived the idea of making a great naval power. They saw that England's unmastered mastery of the sea might be a check upon the expansion which they dreamed. Hence they laid plans to develop a great naval fleet. Andrew Carnegie, the kindly and far-seeing citizen who included the promotion of peace among his aims to benefit humanity, addressed a strong remonstrance to the Kaiser, declaring that "Germany was on the wrong path," and that such military expansion could spell only disastrous consequences. Germany's increased armaments, he said, would breed jealousy and suspicion among the other nations, and they, too, would increase their fleets; and thus would result an enormous waste of human energy, an enormous waste of money, and a less prosperous world.

Heeded not this wise counsel. You know the rest:

"In Flanders field the poppies blow Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark the dead."

Many built a great navy of frowning battleships, cruisers, submarines, and what not. By lying propaganda, and brow-beating, the warlords imposed their naval program upon the unsuspecting German people. They likewise trained an imposing army so that the world trembled at the measure of the mighty host. But on a certain fateful August a gathering storm of fear, hate and suspicion broke,—culminating in the most costly and calamitous war recorded on the pages of history. * * * Navies, armies, preparedness for peace and prosperity, but death, devastation, debt and

On the Wrong Path: Russia

Like the other nations of Europe, the great Russian Empire created a great army and a considerable navy. For a long time she ground her people down under the iron heel of a military autocracy, kept 75 per cent of her people in abject ignorance, organized them into a great military machine. When the untold disasters which the Russians suffered in the Great War, the Russian people rose in rebellion, overthrew the military aristocracy, and set up a socialistic despotism. Religion, profaned and discredited by a haughty and a religio-militaristic aristocracy, is rigidly excluded. This degradation of religion, the sacrifice of ten millions of Russian in the Great War, the waste of vast resources and materials, the chaos, starvation, and disorder, are convincing proofs that the military neither promote nor guarantee "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

On the Wrong Path: The United States
We are enthroning

"The heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard."

When millions are asking an opportunity to work to live, when men commit suicide rather than starve, when mothers murder their children rather than longer keep up the unavailing fight for food, when missions are abandoned for lack of funds, we are spending three-fourths of our national income on a military budget, and are now projecting a 740 million dollar naval program, giving us a huge fleet demanding $500,000,000 yearly for maintenance. As in former Germany and Russia, the same arrogant militarists are demanding a navy equal to the greatest and an increased standing army. We are on the wrong path. We are employing trained scientists and skillful craftsmen to create dreadnaughts, cruisers, submarines, torpedo-boats, armored tanks, machine guns, airplanes, Zeppelins, destructive gases, and other murderous machines and devilish concoctions to kill and to destroy. We are training men for bayonet charges; to struggle like brutes with feet and hands and knives and clubs; to trample on the faces and mangled limbs of wounded men; to lie for hours between the lines at night, themselves tortured while listening to the screams of the tortured; men to hang in agony on barbed wire fences; to have their lungs shot through, their faces torn away, their limbs blown into pieces. This is the wrong path, a delusive path, followed a thousand years; the path along which lie the wrecks of mighty nations, and the bleaching bones of countless thousands of men, defenseless women and little children.

Down which a groaning diapason runs
From tortured brothers, husbands, lovers, sons
Of desolate women in their far-off homes,
Waiting to hear the step that never comes!
O men and brothers! let that voice be heard.
War fails, try peace; put up the useless sword!"
"Put up the sword!" The voice of Christ once more Speaks in the pauses of the cannon's roar,
O'er fields of corn by fiery sickles reaped
And left dry ashes, over trenches heaped
With nameless dead; o'er cities starving slow
Under a rain of fire; through words of woe
Waiting to hear the step that never comes!

On the Right Path: Sweden

A recent meeting of the Swedish Congress voted not a dollar to promote military equipment.

On the Right Path: The Fifty-eight Nations that signed the Kellogg-Briand Pact

This treaty provides:

Article 1. The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the name of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relation with one another.

Article 2. The High Contracting Parties agree that the SETTLEMENT OR SOLUTION OF ALL DISPUTES OR CONFLICTS OF WHATEVER NATURE OR OF WHATEVER ORIGIN, WHICH MAY ARISE AMONG THEM, SHALL NEVER BE SOUGHT EXCEPT BY PACIFIC MEANS.

On the Right Path: The New Freedom!

The recognition that this is a new age; the realization that invention and discovery have created a new heaven and a new earth, and made impossible the old isolation and unbridled individualism of former years; the fuller understanding that the path of progress and peace has been and must continue to be through the increasing organization and cooperation of all, by all, and for the common good of all. This means international peace conferences, international fellowship, a World Court, a Parliament of Man; a time such as Tennyson envisioned in these wonderful lines:

"When the common sense of most Shall hold a fretful realm in awe,

And the kindly earth shall slumber,
Lapt in universal law."

The Right Path: Organization, Disarmament, Peace

Such is the logic of fact, the logic of truth, the logic of history. "You cannot stop war." How false this statement is seen to be when judged in the light of facts! Thousands of wars have been stopped. Garibaldi and Cavour organized the numerous warring Italian states into a liberal commonwealth and stopped the numerous wars. Frederick the Great and other leaders united the 300 perpetually warring divisions of old Germany into a great and prosperous nation, and wars among them disappeared. England and Scotland warred until they were organized under one government. Later Ireland was added; and Canada, and India, and Australia, and New Zealand, and South Africa, and Egypt, and the Islands of the Seas; so that now throughout the vast expanse of 14 million square miles of territory, embracing 450 millions of people of every race and color and language, the far-flung force of British organization prevails, and there is, except for minor insurrections, continuous peace. Who says the world cannot be organized for peace and war avoided?

Our own United States is an illustration of the tremendous value of a super-state, a federation, an organized world. The Revolution drove the Colonies into a loose confederation. This was supplanted by a federated republic under the constitution with a unique division of powers which guarantees peace among the states but allows the largest individual liberty for experiment and progressive action. This is the model after which the world may be organized, disarmed, and a new era of cooperation and peace secured. Imagine what the history of this country would have been had not this happy federated unification taken place. Imagine instead of our 48 states 30 or more individualistic nations; each striving for its own selfish advantage; each with a string of fortifications along its borders; each in perpetual fear of being invaded, over-run, pillaged, and despoiled; each groaning under a crushing burden of debt, mourning over the dead and maimed in past wars, and fearful of coming ones. Such a picture brings to one the immense difference between the great American Commonwealth organized for peace, and the warring, divided, anarchistic, unhappy nations that might otherwise occupy this broad expanse of fertile territory.

The Day of Glory: Armistice Day!

In France, November 11, 1918, a salvo of cannon was to announce the end of the war at eleven o'clock if—if the armistice were signed. Mourning men and women waited while the clock hands

Our Publications Loyalty Campaign

Two words should stand out big in the religious life of every member of the Brethren church—PUBLICATIONS and LOYALTY.

Publications are absolutely essential to our separate denominational existence; we cannot possibly get along without them. They were born out of a great need and they can never be disposed of so long as we feel that we have a place to fill in the world. Our church paper and our Sunday school publications have no other reason for existence than to serve the church, and the service they render is absolutely indispensable.

Loyalty is the other important word, and it represents a quality that counts big in the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. In fact, he founded his religion on loyalty—faithfulness and devotion voluntarily given. He compels no one, but he appeals to every man. He bases everything on loyalty. And the church, in its effort to do the work that Christ has committed to it, can adopt no other measures—it must depend on loyalty. We are relying upon that quality in our effort to promote the large service of our publications. We would not attempt anything else. We want the support of every church and pastor and layman, and we are making our appeal on the basis of loyalty. You have delegated us to do a task. We want and need your hearty cooperation in the doing of it. And the thing for which we are absolutely dependent upon you to do is the putting of our publications in the hands of those for whom they are being made. See that your church paper is in every Brethren home and your Sunday school literature is used by every Brethren Sunday school.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Christian Endeavorers have an interesting message in this department this week written by Miss Helen Garber, who is in charge of Week-Day Religious Education at Nappanee, Indiana. "The Church and the Church" is her theme and it will pay every young person to read this arresting and challenging message.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, general secretary of the Sunday School Association, has published in this issue the report of a district Sunday school institute, including the church at Western Pennsylvania, to be held at Johnstown, November 10-11. The splendid program has been arranged and with a good attendance there ought to result a revival of Sunday school interest in the district. This is a real service that the Association is rendering.

Miss Lyda Carter, consecrated and courageous little missionary of Krypton, Kentucky, called upon all who love the Lord Jesus Christ to share in sacrifice for the extension of the Gospel of salvation and insists that "no sacrifice is too great to make for the good of that cause." She does not in so many words make a definite "call," but simply tells her story of the rejoicing and the effort at expansion in that needy field, and we are to feel the "call" by fellowshipping with her zeal. This is both to hear and to heed the call to that field, and to make home mission fields, in a very real way.

Brother C. D. Whitmer, pastor of the Brighton church, Kansas, writes that the work at that place is moving forward and all departments are alive. The Sunday school has reached an attendance of seventy-five in attendance and on Rally Day and Homecoming there were one hundred and forty people present. The pastor is helping out the Christian Endeavor meetings by conducting them of Bible studies, in which he is tracing the history of the church from their beginning to the time of Christ. Brother Whitmer is serving his fourth year as pastor of this church.

The Mid-West district conference is reported by Brother Deeter, who was the retiring moderator and is the newly elected secretary. Speakers from out of the district were Dr. W. H. Rev. S. M. Whetstone, Rev. R. Paul Miller and Miss Estelle. The conference was well entertained by the church at Fort Kansas, where Brother L. G. Wood is pastor. It is worthy to note that the district mission board burned the mortgage on the Scott church property, having paid $1,160 during the past year. Brother J. S. Cook is the new conference moderator and the next year's meeting is going to Portis, Kansas, where he is pastor.

Brother C. C. Grisso writes of the progress of the Lord's work in the church at Lanark, Illinois, where he is the faithful pastor. His meetings mentioned, and previously commented on, are to be primarily a means of indoctrinating more strongly the folks and his instruction was much appreciated. Since the beginning of the meetings six have been added to the church by baptism. We have previously noted from his church calendar, Rally Day, a big day for the Sunday school and the average attendance reached a high mark, and this can be said of church affairs also. The success of the Love Feast was a further evidence of the high spiritual state of this church. Brother Grisso states that he is privileged to conduct one revival meeting for some churches during his services.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

"Mrs. C. L. Maus, wife of our pastor at Roann, Indiana, went to a major operation, Thursday morning, October 29th, at the Huntington hospital. We ask that her many friends remain in prayer each day, that if it is the Lord's will, in due season she may regain her health."—Mrs. Rager, Corresponding Secretary.

Pray for the people of the brotherhood that they may be able to do the cause of Home Missions during this Thanksgiving season that they have never done before.

Brother Frank G. Coleman writes: "We are starting our new weeks' meeting here at Hagerstown, Maryland, on Sunday, November 1st, with Harry E. Richer and wife as helpers. We are praying for the prayers of the brotherhood."

CH DEPENDS ON OUR OFFERING FOR HOME MISSIONS

o Much Depends on This Year's Offering

L. F. Stuckman, President Home Mission Board

ev. H. F. Stuckman

Have you ever been extremely desirous of gathering your friends around you and making known to them the secrets of your innermost heart? If you have, then I think you can sense the feeling of the Home Mission Board, as the Thanksgiving time arrives. For some time there have been features of our work which we ourselves prayed about, and wrestled with, without making them known to the Brotherhood of Brethren churches. I presume this is always true of any Board, but been especially true of ours. Perhaps we have much alone with these problems, but we did it in honest conviction that it would be better for us as a whole and for individuals involved. Our thanks for granted that the action of Conference is in the minds of all our Brethren the wisdom of the Board's movements with regard to the Kentucky change. We are hopeful that this change of policy with regard to that phase of our work will not in any way hinder whole hearted giving to the support of our work. The Lord is leading into a phase of work down at has been upon our hearts from the beginning: organizing Sunday schools throughout the mountain establishing evangelistic centers thereabouts. We are still believing that the work down there can be done by God and the Church, who have made it possible. We hope you to have the same faith with us, and give us accordingly.

We have definitely in mind the doing of a three sided work through our Board. First the rehabilitation and dying churches, second, helping pastors to get proper leadership, and finally to establish as rapidly as we can, new work, where prospects warrant the beginning of such a work.

The Lord has marvelously blessed our Secretary in the line of our endeavor, that of giving encouragement to the weaker and dying churches. No less than five churches have been revived by visits and wise counsel from our Secretary during the past year. Some of them have been so for a long time, and discouraged, and had in fact given up entirely. Some had even gone this last year. Brother Miller going in and remaining with them for several meetings, and helping to procure a pastor and to help them, has done an invaluable service to the cause. We are hoping that soon, we can set him out on the program of encouraging the weaker churches throughout the Brotherhood, and thus close one of the big sources of help in our membership through the years. To go at the right time, to contribute a little of money, sound advice, and most of all wholesome encouragement, has been the means of gratifying every member of our fraternity who happens to be acquainted with our success in this respect.

Every one knows that there are ministers and churches who are looking for an opportunity to make new connections in pastoral leadership. Sometimes, men of the ministry have gotten into an environment which is not conducive to good work for them. I remember distinctly of one of our Brethren of the past decade, a fine minister, a wise leader, and yet a man who could never succeed well in a western pulpit. This brother soon learned that he was not at home in a western pulpit and confined his work to eastern churches. Not always are churches and pastors able to make an amicable change that will be beneficial to all concerned. Not always do pastors want to make known their desires, neither do churches always want to advertise openly for a minister. In all such cases, much harm may come for lack of the proper means of bringing about a change. Our Board through its office is carrying on correspondence in its work, with every church in the Brotherhood, likewise with every pastor, and stands ready, in fact, has functioned along this very line satisfactorily to churches and pastors in bringing them together in pastoral relations. We do not want to assume the place of bishop, neither do we want the impression to go out that we are desirous of placing ministers in various pulpits, but we do want to be understood, as being more than ready and willing to bring all such dissatisfied ones to a solution of their problem. All such work is done confidentially, between the parties concerned. We are not picking pastors for certain churches, only making known to those on the lookout for leaders, such men as may be available. Our office is a clearing house for these problems. We ask each one concerned to use us in this way in the future.

I wish I might have encouragement to say more about the latter phase of our work, that of organizing and establishing new churches, but one cannot be too optimistic in these days of depression, in this direction. In spite of conditions, we are certainly to hope that soon we can launch out into a very aggressive, and constructive campaign of building up new work.

Finally let me warn against the tendency to slight the Lord's work because we may feel the need of keeping our money intact for our own needs. Times are hard, stress is great, discouragements are coming to us thick and fast, institutions and ideals of the past are tottering and falling on every hand, but this great organization of the Church has stood the strain of every wind of opposition, and will continue to do so, even in these days, because she has in her the elements of the Divine. Furthermore, our need of such an institution was never so great as it is at the present time. The very foundation of our denomination rests on a sure and steady growth of our home base, and a conserving of the resources we now have. This is why so much depends on our offering for Home Missions at this Thanksgiving time.

May our giving be characterized by real sacrifice, and may it be in the sums and total commensurate with our needs, and our ability to give.

Successful Progress of Our New Administrative Program

By Freeman Ankrum, Vice President Home Mission Board

Rev. Freeman Ankrum

Manufacturers of a certain watch are stressing the value of a minute wheel that turns continually from side to side. The name of this wheel the watch maker has termed the balance wheel. Yet there are forces which must relate themselves to this wheel in various ways in order that, the partial revolutions may be translated into that which is known as time. The comparison of a missionary program with the working of a watch may seem far fetched, but nevertheless there is much in common. The New Administrative Program which was launched a few years ago is now gathering way and in the very brief time that it has been in existence shows that the Board was justified in launching out upon such a plan. The Board is only before the National Conference a short time each year. Much of that time is usually taken up in reports. There is a possibility that the average attendant at Conference is hardly conscious of the fact that there is such a Board and that it does such an important work.

There are a number of forces which will contribute to this New Administrative Program. It is not necessary that they be stated in order. Taking one of perhaps the newer phases of the work, we have The Brethren Witness which is now rounding out its first year. It has been indeed a successful year for this magazine, though it was launched in a time that would at least be deemed peculiar and difficult. This magazine has accomplished more than many dreamed, and we have sufficient grounds to feel that its work is just beginning. It has been a visitor that quietly comes into the home, and in its visit renders due consideration to the intelligence of those who constitute the household. The number of Annuities it has secured and the many friends made otherwise have indeed been a vindication of the launching of such a project. While this is the Official representative of the Home Board and has visited many homes it is the desire that it become a welcome guest in even more homes during the year before us.

The new Program has taken in special consideration the growth of points. It was decided that in order to inspire those being helped, that a time limit be set to the period that they may expect the Board to furnish funds for them. It is a question as to the advisability of pouring funds into a work that stands still for a long time, when other points are clamoring for funds and promise growth.

While the time period has been set at five years, less time will make it possible to transfer funds to some other point in need. It is hoped, with the proper supervision of men and the field, to make the time a church needs help before it becomes self-supporting as short as it is conveniently possible to do so.

The office of the Secretary has also become a house for pastors and churches. Pastors have been plied to many pastorless churches. Churches that been uncertain as to their ability to call a pastor to support him have been aided and advised, thereby taking new life. They have launched out with new hope and courage. In the lack of this in times past the Brethren Church has been the loser. Other denominations long ago sensed the value of this and have availed themselves of such help and benefit. A church however, will suffer without a pastor. It is suicide for the churches to even attempt to get along without a pastor. Our growth as a church depends upon every church having a pastor and every worthwhile pastor having a church. The Program of the Home Mission Board is that of preservation as well as advancement. It is imperative that we save that which we already have.

The locating and the shepherding of the isolated member has been a place where the Brethren Church has labored heavily. In our office at Berne, Indiana, now we have a very large list of isolated Brethren with whom we are able to get in touch in various ways. This is one of the peculiar places where the magazine has been of great help. There was a time when a few members isolated made the nucleus of a new Brethren church, but times have changed and this cannot be so readily done. The Secretary's course of his travels has been able to visit many isolated folks and encourage them. With a connecting link between the members who have moved where there is no Brethren church, and the office of the Home Mission Board, it is possible not only to save many who have been lost to the Brethren Church, but to save them from drifting away from church altogether. An example in numerous instances have manifested a desire to help the work.

We also face the proposition of founding new churches if we as a church expect to expand and grow. The lack of finances at the present time prevents us from going into fields where we have been asked to come and help. There are places long over due but the peculiar conditions through which we are passing have forced us to delay expansion. The men that are each year asking for a place to work will look and ask in vain, if the Home Board becomes static.

There is no other Board of the Brethren Church which they can look for pastorates. New fields have been investigated; others are awaiting the visit of the Secretary. Only a lack of funds prevents us from laying out in these places where investigations have been made. There may have been a time when a consecrated man could go into a promising field and with just a little initiative build a church without any outside help. Day and age has passed. Therefore as the Program of the Home Mission Board succeeds, so advances all the interests of the Church. As it stands, so must all other interests eventually stand.

A church top-heavy in any auxiliary is at a disadvantage. It soon becomes an overdeveloped liability on an insecure foundation. It is not the desire of the Home Board that our new Program detract from any of the Brethren, but that it be the means of promoting growth that all other parts of the church make a more accurate advancement. The man who would thwart the Home Mission expansion, which has for its aim the aid of many active congregations to those which we have is indeed shortsighted to say the least. He is cutting off the source from which he himself may in future years. Any pastor who says by word or that he has no sympathy with the aims of the must in a sense be saying that he expects to spend tire pastoral life in the congregation where he is act-pastor; and that he will never be open to a call from other congregation.

Home Board has no desire to become dictatorial or autocratic. It is just your servant working for you to do direct and see fit for it to do. Its members feel the Brethren Church has a message, and not only but knows that there is a field for the message. It need desirous that the church awaken to the latter is every member of the Home Mission Board covets prayers of the Brotherhood that great progress shall be in giving THE WHOLE GOSPEL to the greatest number of people.

the National Sunday School Association Interested in the Success of Home Missions

W. I. Duker, President of the Sunday School Association

ev. W. I. Duker

We, who work through our respective organizations, often attempt to find our particular field of effort. We search to find that task which is distinctly our own. We trust that in the main we are successful in our findings. Each organization surely has one certain task that will identify its efforts. This must be true, or else we cannot perpetuate each organization as such.

However, the Lord Jesus, whom we serve and whose we are, has so arranged our tasks that there is a constant overlapping of efforts. No field in Lord's kingdom is distinctly a field of its own. Con- y are we reminded of the efforts of others. Always r interests dependent upon the efforts put forth by in other fields of service. For example, foreign ns are dependent upon home missions. Home mis- are dependent upon local churches in their respec- organizations, as such. In turn we feel quite decided- t our local organizations as local churches are de- nt upon foreign missions and their constantly puri- influences.

this has been said to indicate a perfectly normal st held by the National Sunday School Association ne Missions. We, as an association, realize that we t one of the many cogs in the Church of Christ. Our to function properly is wholly dependent upon the r functioning of other cogs. When one fails to meet her at the proper place and time in the revolution e wheel of effort, then there is a grinding of steel steel and harm is done to both the wheel and its con- revolution. While just now we are thinking rela- to the Home Mission effort, all that we are saying is y true of any other institution within the church. all boards come to this realization there will be in- y more harmony, and consequently a relatively r amount of success for all.

We would like at this time to call your attention to the source of the funds of the Sunday School Association. We must depend entirely upon the Sunday schools of our land for our funds. If they are interested in our efforts and generous in their gifts, we will have money to do our work. If they do not care for the work we are attempting to do, or if they are selfish with their funds, we in turn are unable to go forth with our projects. We must have their sympathy and well wishes or we cannot go on with our work. So we are wholly dependent upon the source of revenue. Certainly, we are speaking of our resources as they relate to the efforts of men.

Now it is plain to see that our Sunday schools are entirely the outgrowths of the church. We realize that here and there the school and the church seems to be two rival concerns. One of the most unfortunate situations is found when the members of the Sunday school feel that their task is finished upon the conclusion of the school period and go home. Equally unfortunate is that situation in which officers of the church, or others for that matter, come in sedately with the Bible under their arm after the conclusion of the Bible school hour. The two are one in origin, purpose and rewards.

A church today in which the Sunday school does not have its rightful place in its plans and purposes, is doomed to failure. A Sunday school which does not respect and care for its church will soon wither and fade. The two are one.

From time to time we have found a certain coolness in some quarters relative to our National work as such. This coolness must of necessity be the result of a lack of understanding of the entire scope of work rather than the result of a lack of vital interest. We, at least, trust that this may be so.

Now we have reached the place in our meditation in which we are considering the necessity of the Home Mission effort relative to the local church. When we drive over our fair land, from town to town, and see the deserted churches and the partially filled audience rooms, we are made to realize that something needs to be done. Here and there are abandoned and partially abandoned churches. Among them are those churches that have changed the number of days in the week and have but one Lord's Day in fourteen days. Some of our people are greatly distressed with respect to the efforts of the "Seventh Day" people. I am not as greatly disturbed about these Brethren as I am about our "Fourteenth Day Adventists." One of the most distressing experiences which I have witnessed recently was a rather active and aggressive attitude displayed by a brother in one of our "Fourteenth Day Advent" churches towards a church of the seventh day advent Brethren. Churches have decided here and there that there is just one Sunday too many and they set about at once to remove it from their field of worship. "Cut rate churches" is the right designation of such. They have cut one Sunday out of their program and purposes.

Yes, what we observe, if we are at all observing, indicates the tremendous need of Home Missions to our field of effort. After several years of service in the field of the Sunday school work we have come to the conclusion, and we have never been far away from this same conclusion, that our only hope lies in strong and functioning churches. Take away the church and you have dealt our Association a death blow. Build up a strong local church and we have a new source of support. If the Home Missions lag, we will lag with them. If they go on to success, we too will take on new life. May we, one and all, feel as never before our inter-relation. It might be well for us in the conclusion of our article to call attention to the one who slew his brother and then attempted to defend himself by denying responsibility. We are our brother's keeper. His success is our success. His death means death and expulsion for us. May we one and all remain in the Garden to work in perfect harmony and love. You bring the fruits of your own particular field and we will bring in the fruits of our field and together we will offer to the Lord our "best." As we kneel at our altar, may we glance across to our brother's offering and be pleased that he too is bringing his offering to the Lord. May we carry that picture of the two boys at their altars and attempt to avoid the mistake made by one so many thousands of years ago. Surely with the coming of Christ and his subsequent sacrifice, and then two thousand years of Christian experience, we ought to be able to avoid the mistakes of long ago. May we go forth as never before, one church, one body, and one purpose—the glory of God, the beauty of his Son and the Salvation of souls.

The Ashland Theological Seminary and Home Missions

By Professor Melvin A. Stuckey

Prof. M. A. Stuckey

There is no distinction in the Scriptures between the missionary movements men are pleased to call "home" and "foreign" in our twentieth century. That our modern age has set up superficial, unwarranted, and perhaps unholy distinctions at this juncture the judicious and sane Christian will not doubt. When Jesus sent men forth to evangelize the world he asked them to begin at home and extend the borders of the home territory. They were to begin in Judea and then preach in the entire world.

Hear the Great Harvester speak of his harvest. It is to be "plenteous", world-wide; "great"; it is to be his, not the devil's. He urgently requests that we pray to him in the all important work of thrusting forth laborers into his work. Men of "gifts" and "grace" are needed and wherever we find them we may be sure the Christ has selected them. Men lacking "gifts" and "grace" are not needed in his field. Such men or women should never be trained, nor sent out as preachers and shepherds.

To the laborers he has a word of kindly counsel and encouragement. The wheat and the tares are to "grow together until the harvest." This, by the way, is the first and last word on the much debated topic "Is the world growing better?" Jesus settled it. Laborers who do not know that fact ought to be willing to let their Savior's words suffice. They are authoritative and wise in spite of the frequent fume and loquacious sputter which we hear on every hand in Christendom. To aid us will be angels whose business it will be to burn up the tares and finish the task we could not ever hope to accomplish. The "wheat" shall be gathered into barns. What excellent provision has been made for us!

In the part of that great field—Wesley's parish—in which the Brethren have been called to labor, there are certain things to be kept in mind. We should not be guilty of farming in spots. We need to sow everywhere, cultivate everywhere, and reap everywhere. We should never leave untilled the old fields in preference to the new ground. When the reapers rob the old acres and the new fields, they must remember that the old fields shall have to be restored to their original fertility once more. Jerusalem was vacated and destroyed and it always had to be rebuilt.

Now, the writer is aware that all of the laborers of the labor in every portion of the Brethren field. That would be quite impossible and certainly our Lord would not do it so. But neither does he wish that we shall have an interest in certain parts of the field that we are blinded to the needs of the remaining parts. Every one should manifest a healthy interest in the whole work. No part of the field should lack attention and every financial support. Every pastor of every church, every lay member of every church should be interested vitally in every movement within the church.

Let me illustrate my point. In the long run, if things being equal, a neglected and decadent church at the home field means a decaying church on the foreign field; a thriving and aggressive church at home assures a successful missionary movement in foreign territory. All pastors and all churches should be evangelistic, devotional, and missionary in spirit. The home church in every nation and every clime need regeneration and spiritual nurture.

I will be pardoned for making myself amazingly long in the next sentences, to further illustrate. No church should lift an offering for their own pet interest at the expense of the other interests of the church. No pastor should allow the interests and support of the board of the denomination with which he is directly connected to blind him to the interests and support of other boards, as good as bad as his, and certainly, as worthy and as needed. If such were not the case, we would not hear such remarks as this one: "Pastor So-and-So and his good people support 'certain' interests in the church." That, I think, is not a healthy condition; it is strictly unhealthy. Let us observe the rules of health. Or, again, "a little time saves nine."

Now the Ashland Theological Seminary, so far as the present writer is concerned, has no desire to minimize or overemphasize any agency of the work of our denomination. At seasonable times our interests may be presented to our people. At this particular time it is the all important work of Home Missions. The call thus lies in the direction of building new churches in proper fields. In that project or series of projects our Seminary is most definitely interested and there are several reasons why this should be so.

1. For one thing, we need new recruits for the ministry. Each year several aged ministers pass on to reward, several more retire, some drop out of service for a large variety of reasons. Who will take the place of the vacant regularly by these pastors? There is only one answer. Men from the home churches in the main are trained in our Seminary. There ought to be six graduates to supply the demand each year. Every year, in the midst of this depression, several churches were vacant. They were small churches. Few people really desired them. But right now they are being supplied by former students of our institution. They were trained as well as we could train them and they began at the bottom.

2. For another thing, our denomination needs laymen who at least shall have been partly for service within the church. Our pastors complain that lay leadership is lacking in so many places. By what means a competent and helpful lay leadership could our churches not enlist young men and women with sufficient training for lay evangelistic and missionary service? Is this not the work of Home Missions? Is it not the Seminary and the Home Board, and other agencies of the church cooperate here?

For yet another thing, several new churches established each year will certainly not be too many for us to sustain as a fraternity. In fact, ministers, old or young, not located anywhere and are deemed fit by the church for such service, have here a challenge from the Lord to do real and interesting work for him. The Secretary of the Home Board at general conference last August evinced plainly what was accomplished during the past year. It was a splendid piece of work that should grow more and more as the years pass. The Seminary is ready to encourage and lend a hand to the church and its hard working secretary.

Finally, our Seminary is willing and ready at any time to send Gospel Teams to needy and struggling churches during the winter and summer seasons respectively. Last year nearly forty souls found the Savior through the evangelistic and personal work of our preachers and graduate students. During the summer these young men held revival meetings in places where they were considered dying or nearly defunct. One of them, to say nothing of the others, held a very successful meeting in one of our small churches. The Lord truly used him and blest his ministry.

Keep on praying and working in our common cause, redeeming the heathen everywhere. Let us invoke the Lord of the harvest daily for strength and help in all as we try to do his will in our home fields. Since we are his, and his is our work, why should we not take heart? "Others have labored," and we are honored in their service, and we are "entered into their labors."

Ohio.

THE UNITY OF THE LORD'S SUPPER

Now let us look at the three parts of the Lord's Supper. It thus forms a symbol of the spiritual communion of its source in Christ, a symbol of its presence in the church, and a type of its fullness in and with the natural life, the Lord's Supper with footwashing, agape and eucharist, corresponds to the three essentials: hygiene, exercise and food. Which of these should be neglected with safety?

and with the Passover the Supper corresponds to the Passover, the feast of unleavened bread, and the Sabbath. The law did not permit the absence of any of these parts. Is the law of Christ less important than the law of Moses?

and with the tabernacle the Supper corresponds to the tabernacle, the twelve loaves of shed bread, and the pot of manna—the symbols again of holiness, fraternity and love. Which of these three is superfluous?

Compared with one another in their origin, the footwashing, the agape, and the eucharist were associated as equal parts of the same institution. They were equally preceded by the declaration of authority and each one accompanied alike by the necessary explanation of its spiritual significance, and sealed by the authority of precept and example, and are alike accompanied with blessing in their observance.

In their meaning as memorials they represent the infinite love of Christ. The footwashing represents his love in humiliation, the agape represents his love in the preparation of his bride, and the eucharist represents his love in his vicarious death for her.

In the significance of the supper as a symbol of the Christian life the footwashing represents our union with Christ in separation from sin and sinners; the agape represents our union with Christ in the royal priesthood of the church, and the eucharist represents our union with Christ in self-denying works for others.

In its significance as a type the footwashing represents holiness, the wedding garment of the saints; the agape represents the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the eucharist represents the union of Christ with his bride, the church.

Which of these things lacks importance? Which of them may be omitted without destroying something of the beautiful imagery of the sacrament, or robbing it of something of its blessing?

And if God has provided for the teaching of essentially these things to his people in the Passover and the tabernacle as types and shadows, and now in the Lord's Supper for the church, ought we not to think very seriously before casting aside or neglecting any of the symbols which he has given for our good?

If none of the things represented may be lacking, then none of the things that represent them should be lacking. The symbols and the things symbolized should correspond in all parts. If any part be lacking the symbol is incomplete or distorted. Let others take the responsibility of changing the ordinances; the blessing of God is for those who faithfully observe them.

But, after all, we must remember that there was only one who did the will of God perfectly. We all must learn more and practise better. Let him who is without sin cast the first stone at his sinning brother or sister. The great mass of Christian believers do not know the facts about the ordinances. If pastors teach them they may expect conflicts and troubles. The way to unity in practice is not easy.

We close therefore, as we began, by expressing the conviction that the evangelical churches should build upon the principle of loyalty to Christ in all things fundamental and known, granting liberty of conscience in the rest.

The commandments of God are for liberty and not for slavery. They give a life that is more ample and not more limited. The ordinances are means of grace, and their neglect is punished by spiritual loss to the person who neglects them. Those who have never observed the Lord's Supper in its original form, may easily scoff at those who do, but those who so observe it know that it is well worth while to do so.

The greatest danger is that those who have inherited this blessing of fidelity to the apostolic forms, may yet come to lose the spirit of them, and therefore to observe them mechanically. That would be a fatal mistake. It is better to have a partial observance in the right spirit than a complete observance in the wrong spirit.

In these last days of apostasy in the church, and growing anarchy in the world it is necessary that Christian believers should more than ever keep their "eyes fixed upon the author and finisher of our faith" that they may inherit the promise, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience I also will keep thee from the hour of trial which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10).

A Permanent Armistice

crept laggingly forward, their beating hearts telling off the minutes. Finally the great moment was near. Would the announcing cannon speak? The suspense was terrible; the quintessence of moral torture of four nightmare years! The cannon did speak, shaking the windows, the houses, the very sky, with its glad news. The war was over! The accursed guns had ceased tearing to pieces the fathers, the husbands, the sons. There was no woman who did not feel scalding on her cheeks the blessed tears—tears of joy! The horrible weight upon their souls was dissolved in the assuaging flood. They wept. They poured out, once for all, the old bitterness, the old horror; but they felt coming back sanity, faith and hope, the dear possessions of the old days. After the first tears of deliverance were past, they flowed out into the streets to mingle their thanksgiving with that of their fellows in one exultant, throbbing, rejoicing humanity, singing,

"Come, children of our country,
The Day of Glory has arrived."

A Greater Day of Glory: A Permanent Armistice

Some day the announcing cannon will proclaim a Permanent Armistice. Some day the nations will fully awake to the folly, the futility, the colossal stupidity of war. Some day "the common sense of most" will sweep over the earth like a mighty tide creating a new Day of Glory, dissolving the ancient feuds and the mass murder of war. The articles of faith and the organization to accomplish this happy consummation are, in part, already perfected. It is your privilege and duty to help. Write to your Congressman, to your Senator. Talk to your minister, to your neighbor. Help put the irresistible force of public sentiment back of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, back of the disarmament movement, and into the creation of an organized world. Know and use your power to create public sentiment, as Abraham Lincoln expressed it:

"Public sentiment is everything. With public sentiment, nothing can fail; without it, nothing can succeed. Consequently, he who moulds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes, or announces decisions. He makes statutes and decisions possible or impossible to be executed."

"Then the war drums throb no longer,
And the battle flags are furled;
In the parliament of man,
The federation of the World."

RACIAL ATTITUDES ARE NOT LIKE THE LEOPARD'S SPOTS

People change their minds about almost everything in this world, including the Negro. And the younger one is, the easier does one find it to revise his opinions. In a Philadelphia high school a class in "Problems of Democracy" discussed such questions as "Is a black skin a sign of inferiority?" "Are white men more energetic than Negroes?" "Do you object to living next door to a Negro?" At the end of the course the class, who happened to be girls, were asked to write on the question, "Has your attitude toward the Negro changed?" Here is one of the testimonies: "Heretofore I really never believed there was a worthwhile Negro. I always associated them with crime, vice, etc. I always thought that Negroes did not have enough brains to go through school. Now I think that Negroes are equal to whites. I have never realized that Negroes had not been given a square deal. I never knew that if you educated a Negro that he was an asset to the community. I never thought that Negroes were human and could give us great writers and great singers, instead of people to fill our jails. It is through this study and some extra reading that I find there is good and bad in each race."—The Congregationalist.

MONDAY

Esther 9:12-19. For the enemies of the Jews were days of terror and judgment, but for the they were days of deliverance. So at the coming of Lord Jesus Christ it shall be a time of terror a judgment upon the nations of the earth, but for people it shall be a time of final deliverance, and shall dwell together with their God for ever and in the blessed light of his face. Is it any wonder the Christian looks upon all this as a "blessed hope?"

TUESDAY

Esther 9:20-32. By many, this passage is thought to express the purpose of the entire book of Esther, setting forth the origin of the Feast of Purim. How as we have considered the deep spiritual significance and typology of other portions of this book, we only feel that here as elsewhere, "ALL scripture given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

The Feast of Purim was primarily a feast of thanksgiving because they had passed from death unto life. We too have passed from death unto life, and shall render unto God and his people our undying gratitude.

WEDNESDAY

Esther 10:1-3. We see Mordecai here as a type of Christ. After much tribulation he takes his place as king over a great people; he was finally accepted of his brethren, and strove to advance the kingdom of God every way, and to bring them peace. How we look forward to the time when Christ shall at last take his rightful place as King over the nations of the earth, and shall rule his people in justice, and his peace shall reign throughout all the earth. May we ever love and serve our blessed King!

THURSDAY

Psalms 1. Mordecai was an illustration of the man who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, standeth in the way of sinners, but his delight is in the law of the Lord. We have seen how God promised him, both temporally and spiritually. He has not failed always to reward us with temporal things in this present life, but we may enjoy his spiritual reward here and now, and in that coming day all things shall be ours.

FRIDAY

1 Cor. 3:1-7. Haman was fearfully jealous and conceited, and he is still only too well represented among our churches, even as he was in Paul's day. "For whereas there is among you envying, and fighting, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as carnal men? Our own reward at the hands of our brethren is so important after all: the only things that matter that we go on with our part in the planting and watering, that God may give the increase, and that God may receive the honor for it all. "And every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor. Remember that Haman received his reward just as truly as did Mordecai."

SATURDAY

1 Cor. 4:1-5. Applying this passage to the story of Esther, we are reminded that Mordecai's success resulted from his faithful stewardship over the throne of his king and his God. Haman judged before the king, but at last the hidden things were brought to light and he received only condemnation while Mordecai received the praise of his king and the favor of his God. We too be faithful stewards over all things that are placed in our keeping in this life, whether of material things temporal, or things spiritual.

SUNDAY

1 Cor. 6:8-11. Haman was not more wicked than the unrighteous sinners referred to in this passage. We are told that none such shall inherit the kingdom of God, but we are reminded that some that have been such have been washed and are now sanctified. What a wonderful thought, that even a man as vile as Haman can be washed and made meet for the Master's service! What a message of hope to a sin-cursed world! We delay with the message?

The Occasion of the Mob

ws from Ephesus saw Paul in the t where Gentiles were forbidden to come. They had also seen one of the Ephesian Gentile Christians walking with Paul around the city, and perhaps in the Court of the Gentiles in the city. Putting these two facts together "they supposed"— imagined—that Paul had brought this Greek Gentile into the forbidden court; contrary to fact. This shows the danger of basing action on supposition.

"Paul's every word and act at this moment of supreme danger evince remarkable courage, coolness and self-possession. His one thought now was to seize the occasion of speaking to the people, when he had a great crowd before him, with their attention fixed on him.

Paul was brought before the Sanhedrin and, charged with crimes he never committed, denied them in toto. This was no time for confessing any failures of reaching absolute perfection before God, as in his letters to the Ephesians (Eph. 3:8) and to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 15:9). All that would have been entirely misunderstood.
Paul had no mock humility. He stated the simple fact.

To the high priest "this assertion of a life so utterly unlike his own seemed almost like a personal insult." He ordered his officer to smite Paul on the mouth. It is not probably that Lysias allowed this insult to be inflicted.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Paul's Indignant Reply

Paul's whole nature burst out in fiery indignation at this insult and injustice in a court of justice by a judge on the bench.
"God shall smite thee," is about to smite thee. Not a malediction, or a wishing of evil upon the high priest; but like Christ's woes against the scribes and Pharisees, an expression of his belief that such conduct would be and ought to be punished. Within two years this Ananias was deposed, and four years later he met a terrible death.

The Possession of a Temper that can flame in indignation against wrong is essential to perfect character. "With all the abuses, the crimes against justice, the frauds, deceits, shams and mockeries, the cruelty and oppression of weak individuals or races by the strong, the exploitation of those who cannot take care of themselves, the nameless crimes against human health, happiness and virtue that selfish individuals and combinations perpetrate—with all these there are causes enough to justify all the anger in the world; and if all the anger in the world were directed against such abuses, it would not take long to drive most of them out of the world."—Ibid.

Youth and the Church

By Helen Garber

"That in all things he might have the pre-eminence."

In many respects this is a youth-centered age. Youth predominates in educational circles. The average age at which the higher degrees are received is lower than ever before. Youth has found rather prominent places in political circles. The aim in social life is to be young and to look young. Even so, in religious life, we have come to center our attention upon youth. Though the ultimate end of many youth programs in the churches is legitimate, we believe that many means used to accomplish that end have been a great detriment to youth and to the church.

In the midst of this situation, it is the task of the church today to center the interests of youth on Christ and the church. He should be led to make the spiritual values of life supreme. Here we have a most sacred responsibility of the church which, if met, will bring a return of many precious blessings.

When youth comes to face life today, he finds it full of turmoil. Everything has turned topsy-turvy. On every side there are problems and great perplexity. Those who are experienced in the affairs of life know not which way to turn. What will youth do to unravel the tangles? We may determine the answer by the way we help them to meet these great needs: namely, faith, an anchor, and a purpose in life.

One whose ear is tuned to the heart throbs of youth must recognize the great need of faith in their lives. According to God's plan this is the age of faith, but man's theories have turned it away from that to a great extent. In certain educational circles, faith is mocked as being a sign of puerility and ignorance. We are taught to accept only what we see and know with our senses.

Faith, we are told, leads us to mysticism and superstition. For a course in religion in a leading eastern university a student wrote, "Truly religious men must learn to depend more on the authority of experience and reason than the authority of the church or the Scriptures." Should Christ walk among us today, he would surely exclaim,
"O ye of little faith."

The second great need of youth is a safe anchor for their life. There are many who have faith, but have it toward the wrong thing. When the storms beat upon their life, they find they are anchored in shifting sand.
Reason is one of the false anchors to which many hold today. In times of crisis the anchor often gives away to suicide or insanity. Many people set their trust in humanity, holding full faith in the power of man.
This anchor, too, proves false in the test.

The third great need of youth is the establishment of the proper goal in life. Does youth understand where he is going? Does youth comprehend the great purpose of life? Too many are satisfied with standards of selfish pleasure and intellectual freedom.
Gratification of personal liberty is the purpose of life in many cases. But when they have sipped the cup to the dregs, they find no hope. Many a student in our universities lives from day to day without a goal for his many activities. Though this may be the case, we do not believe that they are satisfied in it.

Fifty years ago Francis E. Clark pioneered for youth and planted the seed which is now grown into the great Christian Endeavor movement. For a half century Christian Endeavor and youth have worked together, and today we find it meeting the three great needs of youth. The call of the church comes to youth in the Christian Endeavor pledge, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him I will strive to do whatsoever he would have me do." In this statement we find the answer to our needs, for in it faith is declared, an anchor is found, and a purpose is set.

Trusting is the principal foundation of Christianity. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Faith toward God is the highest expression of the individual personality. In Christian Endeavor youth takes his stand with those who trust.

This expression of faith is made operative, for youth trusts for strength. He realizes that without this strength he can do nothing, but through it he can do all things. It is daily strength that is supplied—for service, for daily duties, for overcoming evil, for all things.

Christian Endeavor calls youth to find Christ the anchor for his life—"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ." He trusts no longer in self, in man, or in reason. The eternal Rock of Ages becomes his anchor. He need no longer search for God, but may meet him face to face in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. We need to lead youth to anchor to God by accepting Christ as his Savior. We need not fear going adrift then, for Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. The storm clouds may fill the sky, the floods of life may come, and hope may seem to flee as our frail bark is baffled in the angry waves, still the Anchor holds and the Lord speaks, "Peace be still." Are you pointing youth the way to this Anchor?

But life is not meant to be anchored motionless. The goal is set in the pledge—"To do whatsoever he would have me do." Life reaches its highest purpose when patterned according to the will of the Giver of life. The daily routine means the most when Christ is the center of our living. Many people question whether God has a definite purpose for each individual life. We need to teach youth that God has a place for each one and that his greatest happiness will be realized when he finds himself in that place. The purpose of life then will be to do only those things which will be for his glory.

Christian Endeavor means Christ Enthroned "that in all things he might have the preeminence." This must be our passion for youth. Christ must be enthroned in the adult life of our church first, then there will be a vital concern for our youth. It is a sad situation to find a splendid group of young people drifting from the church because no adult is willing to make the sacrifice of self in order to lead them.

The challenge comes today—GIVE HIM THE PREMINENCE IN ALL OF LIFE. This is the program presented to youth in Christian Endeavor. Born in the spirit of evangelism, its first emphasis is to lead others to know Christ. What a blessing it would be to our churches if youth received this training in Christian Endeavor. The Quiet Hour is next with its emphasis on the personal devotional life. How we need it today! The training in stewardship which youth should get in Christian Endeavor would prove a great blessing to our churches. The work of the pocket Testament league, the emphasis on citizenship, and the interest in world peace add elements which are invaluable in the training of youth.

In all these various activities of Christian Endeavor, the great slogan of youth is "For Christ and the Church." I present to you the challenge which Christian Endeavor brings to youth today. I trust that the prayers and support of parents and friends may be united in leading youth to meet the challenge. May we see Christ Enthroned in the hearts of youth through Christian Endeavor.

MISSIONS AND THE SUPERIOR COMPLEX

In the column, "A Woman's View" by Mrs. Walter Ferguson, which is cited in the Scripps-Howard news, there recently appeared the following: "The missionary idea causes us too high a valuation on our own excellence. This is far keener criticism than is directed at missions, and very much thinking about. It was probably true fathers and missionaries could be dis today to whom it might apply. I things can well be said. The portion American public which supports it has far less of a superiority complex than the portion of the public which scoffs at missions. Our church people generally seeking a finer appreciation of others. They are not as smug in their attitudes as the man on the sidewalk. It comes to missionaries themselves the various circumstances and training and agree in which they penetrate into the where they work regulate the way which they put upon their own excellence. When a man faces an alien environment a superficial way, he comforts himself dwelling on the superiority of his and the beds back home. Most tour business men, and some missionaries into this habit. But when an individual to both understand and help those him, he soon becomes terribly conscious the limitations of his own power, he blink the shortcomings of our Christian civilization. By taking out into a foreign setting we discover it is really good for. The incidental in which we are likely to take part often roughly used, while the real of our religion is often revealed in a real. In actual practice, missions are an antidote for our national superiority complex.—The Congregationalist.

The Call from Krypton, Kentucky

When one loves his work, to him no cause in the world is more worthy than his own. No sacrifice is too great to make for the good of that cause. Particularly is this true in Christ's work. For we know that he is right with us, caring even more about the work and the people than we do. His heart broke for them; ours can only ache and ache! So "if God be for us, who can be against us?"

Since we care so much for Christ, his work, and the people, it is most natural for us to rejoice in Thanksgiving and praise when we find that other Christians all over the land also care for our little corner of the vineyard. Certainly it is blessed to know that they care to the extent of giving of their means for it.

The gifts of Christian people are making it possible for us to have a faithful pastor who is God's fiery prophet proclaiming his Word boldly in the ears of the people. This pastor has taken upon himself a good many of the burdens which formerly had rested upon our less competent shoulders. For this we are thankful. The return of Miss Bertha Banks to our midst makes it possible for our pastor to do more visitation and extension work, and yet have two teachers attending to our school.

We want this visitation and extension work to grow. There seems to be an opening on one of the creeks, several miles away for Sunday school and church services. We also are helping in a Sunday school held on a nearby creek.

We are so thankful for our school. It is the boys and girls, for the most part, who attend school day after day under Christian influence that come to take a definite clean-

tly preached and it fails to win lks, then we know of nothing Other methods fail. This one. brethren, in these days when so rning away from the Word, let anew.

ber 8 we expect to have Brother Joseph Foster with us. We are looking forward with pleasure to their coming. This church is deeply interested in missions, so much so that we are supporting one of our missionaries on the foreign field. May they prove a real blessing to all our churches as they go from place to place.

My church is granting me the privilege of conducting a revival meeting away from home again this year. If any church not having arranged for a meeting yet would desire my service I would be glad to offer a date. These ought to be great days for the church. If ever we faced a great opportunity it is now. If we let this day slip by we shall never face another such opportunity. What should be our attitude in a time like this? Certainly we should be alert and alive, full of love and zeal, ready to help, offering a cure for the conditions that surround us. "If my people which are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sins and heal their land" (2 Chron. 7:14).

BRIGHTON CHURCH

Although you have not heard from the Brighton church for several months, we have been doing things for God.

The church is progressing very well. All departments of the church are very much alive. The Sunday school is averaging about seventy-five. The Christian Endeavor is now working again after the lull for a time. The church services are very well attended.

We have a very fine class of young people in the Sunday school and many of them are members of the church. We are very proud of our young folks, because of the fact that they are always willing to do whatever they are asked to do. This makes it very pleasant for us.

In order to break up the monotony of Christian Endeavor, the writer each Sunday evening gives a short Bible study for the benefit of the young folks. Many of them have expressed their appreciation of this series of Bible studies. I am tracing the life and workings of the children of Israel from their beginning of history up to and through the time of Christ, and then hope to extend the series in the beginning of the church. I am using maps to make the study plainer and more thoroughly understood. Many of them appreciate the work.

The Women's Missionary Society is very much alive under the leadership of Mrs. J. L. Mast. What would we do without the consecrated services of the women of our churches?

Last September, the church extended a unanimous call to the writer for another year as their pastor. This is the beginning of the fourth year with these loyal people. Everything is going along so very harmoniously, that it is a pleasure to work with them.

We have not yet made our final arrangements for our winter campaign for souls, but we feel sure that God will provide a way for us to enter upon a glorious meeting for him.

We held our Rally Day and Homecoming on October 18th. It was a wonderful day for all of us. In the morning, our Sunday school was well attended. One hundred forty people were present. Then we had preaching by the pastor on the following theme: "Every man in his place, or back to the work." Judges 7:21. At noon, we had a basket dinner at the school building. This was an elaborate affair, as these good people always make it. Tables were laden with everything imaginable. In the afternoon, we had a splendid program of music and recitations, also two addresses by the judge of the LaGrange County Court and by the County Superintendent of Schools. This was a day long to be remembered by all of us.

We have also planned for our regular Fall Communion to be held on Sunday evening, November 1st.

We trust this short article will be of interest to many of our friends. Pray for us that we may be used by him mightily to further his work in this community.

A BRIEF REPORT, MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE, FORT SCOTT, KANSAS, OCTOBER 6, 7, 8, 1931

The first conference session opened on Tuesday evening in the First Brethren church, at Fort Scott, Kansas, with Moderator W. R. Deeter of Carleton, Nebraska, in charge. The hymn of praise, "Come We that Love the Lord" was sung, and Mrs. Docia Wygal of Mulvane, Kansas, read the Scripture, and Mrs. Anna Wood led in prayer.

Rev. L. G. Wood, pastor of the local church, extended words of greeting and welcome to all delegates, making them feel they were going to enjoy their stay and hospitality with the local people.

Out of district folks—Dr. Bell, of Ashland, Ohio; Miss Myers, of Africa; S. M. Whetstone, of Waterloo, Iowa, received special recognition and each responded to the message of welcome, along with the regular delegates representing the respective churches of the district.

L. A. Myers, pastor of our Morrill, Kansas, church, delivered the evening message, from Isaiah 39:6, 7.

Wednesday Morning, October 7th

Conference opened at 9:30 by singing "Love Lifted Me", after which Moderator Deeter led in prayer. The minutes of the business sessions of last year were read, and the Treasurer gave his report, both of which were accepted by Conference.

The Credential Committee reported showing the total official delegates numbered nineteen—six ministerial, and thirteen lay, with delegate fees amounting to twenty-two dollars.

The new organization resulted in the following elections—Rev. Jas. S. Cook, of Portis, Moderator; L. A. Myers, Morrill, Vice Moderator; W. R. Deeter, Carleton, Secretary-Treasurer and Statistician. Rev. Cook then took charge and some few committees were appointed.

At 10:30 Rev. W. R. Deeter delivered the Moderator's Address on the theme "Will the Christian Church Last?" Certain few of the pessimistic minded folks like to harangue and make a lot of noise about the stability of the Church. But some of these very opponents in days gone by and the cause they espoused have faded away and are scarcely heard of any more. The Church will LIVE and is a power and force in the world today.

At the 11 o'clock hour S. M. Whetstone, field worker for our National Church School Association, gave an address on how we might lend ourselves to more fully propagate the Brethren cause by making use of our splendid literature. This was followed by a general discussion period. At 12 noon, luncheon was served in the "upper room" of the church, and all were "filled."

Wednesday Afternoon

At 1:30 o'clock, session opened by Moderator Cook, and using Hymn "More About Jesus", and "I Am Thine O Lord." Mrs. Elda Deeter had charge of all the conference music and singing. Miss Estella Myers read the Scripture, Isa. 55: and led in prayer.

The Moderator then introduced Dr. W. S. Bell, who recounted some of our outstanding mission achievements, and the growth of our church in many sections of the United States, Africa and South America. It must be by the power of Jesus Christ, and not our wisdom, that will bring the ultimate victory for our church. And we must not fail to bring glory to his name, by doing our best.

At 2:15 Rev. Whetstone again spoke, using as a theme, "The Needs of the Brethren Church." Some of his opening statements were, "Sometimes discontent is the soil from which the future crop is to come. One of the bright hopes of the future is the fact that we are not satisfied . . . We need to re-value the purpose of our work, that we might render the BEST service we can. Co-operation is the secret of success in any church program. Let us build in our church work, by using our heads."

Wednesday Evening

Hymns "He Lifted Me" and "Hide Me, O, My Savior."

Greetings by telegram from the Pennsylvania Conference in session at the Third Church in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, were read. Motion made and seconded the return greetings be extended by Night Letter. Carried. Motion made and seconded that we also send greetings to the Illiokota District Conference in session at Dallas Center, Iowa, and same to be carried in person by Rev. Whetstone when he returns there tomorrow. Carried.

The appointment of a Resolutions Committee was made: D. G. Lemon, Portis; Docia Wygal, Mulvane; H. H. Freese, Falls City.

Mr. Lemon read the Scripture and gave the evening prayer.

Miss Myers in her address told of the Mission work among the dark people of Africa, and showed a number of curios. She said the "Good News" we carry to those people is found in Matt. 28:18 "Go, and teach . . ."

Miss Nina Palmer sang a special, "This is My Task."

Dr. Bell then spoke on the work of the college. He says: "We are living in an age when our young people are going to be educated, and unless we as a church have an institution where they can go, besides to State schools and universities, we cannot expect to have a coming generation grounded in the faith we love so well. We MUST have a place where they are trained to have this in their heart and life. . ."

Thursday Morning, October 8th

The morning session opened by singing "Harvest and Reapers."

L. A. Myers read the Scripture, Psa. 46 and 47, after which he led in prayer.

The business session consisted of the reading of previous minutes, and all were passed upon by conference, with the understanding that the completed report would be given at this evening's session.

Two new members were elected on the Mission Board, which now consists of the following names: L. A. Myers, Chairman; N. P. Eglin, Secretary; D. G. Lemon, Treasurer. Samuel Flickinger was elected to succeed himself as a member of the Board of College Trustees. Member of the Executive Committee, L. G. Wood. Member Ministerial Examining Board, H. H. Rowsey. Director of Church Schools, J. G. Dodds.

Invitations for the 1932 conference were announced with a decision to go to Portis, Kansas.

N. P. Eglin then gave a report of the mission work in the district. Apportionments from the various churches for the closing year were announced as follows:

Hamlin, $75.00; Carleton, $100.00; McLouth, $27.00; Falls City, $150.00; Gift, D. B. Clum, $50.00; Beaver City, —; Portis, $125.00; Morrill, $110.00. Total $637.00.

Those who paid in advance for the coming year are Hamlin, $75.00; Portis, $125.00; Falls City, $150.00; Morrill, $110.00; Total $460.00. Grand Total $1,097.00. Paid for trustee expenses to board $37.00, leaving a balance of $1,069.00.

One of the outstanding things done Mission Board was the paying off $1,160.00 mortgage on the Fort Scott property. This was made possible by us above balance and by one good brotting on a new note for $155.00. I have the exact figures of the interest in a short and appropriate service on day afternoon the pastor, L. G. Wood, Eglin, and R. Paul Miller conducted "Mortgage Burning" in a very touching and glorious way, after which audience joined in singing, "Praise from Whom All Blessings Flow."

Thursday Afternoon

Rev. J. S. Cook gave an address of work, followed by an address by Miller who represented the Home Board. Space forbids telling of the good things he mentioned about our home fields. At best the work merits, self-denial, prayer and faith.

In the absence of Raymond B. Beaver City, Nebraska, N. P. Eglin briefly on "Constitutional Extension." This was briefly by J. S. Cook speaking on the tactical side of the question.

Thursday Evening

The closing session was entered in spirit and enthusiasm. J. S. Cook read the Scripture and offered prayer followed by the song "Will There Be Stars in My Crown?" Mr. and Mrs. Deeter then sang a duet, "I'm Going Are You?"

A public offering was received to defray general expenses; the Resolutions Committee reported, and a "finish-up" minutes by the Secretary was had.

Paul Miller delivered an inspiring address after which the local people rendered playlet "The God of the Pill Bottle."

Goodbyes were said, and good night offered and all went away feeling the predictions of God upon all our work.

W. R. DEETER, Sec'y., Carleton

ANNOUNCEMENT

FREMONT, OHIO, COMMUNION

Non-resident members of the Brethren church are hereby notified Communion Services Sunday evening November 15th, and are cordially invited to attend. REV. WM. S. CRICK, Minister.

TITHING IN HARD TIMES

Now you can plan A Tithing Campaign and save money by using the church bulletins we furnish, including one written for this hour: "Tithing in Hard Times." The Layman Bulletins, no matter what number, are printed in the regular church bulletin size, with two pages for your own Bulletin material. It costs one-half of your printing cost, not the cost of paper.

Send for price list and samples, include pamphlet, "Teaching the Church to Tithe," containing full directions for a 4 weeks' program of silent, church-wide education at trifling expense. Non-partisan, non-sectarian, non-legalistic, but simple and workable.

Please mention The Brethren Evangelist also give your denomination.

THE LAYMAN COMMISSION

What We Mean by Loyalty Campaign

The gist and the content of our meaning concerning a Loyalty Campaign is that we hope to so entwine about the hearts of our Brethren as to make them investigate what we are making at the printing plant and so, obtain their loyalty to our publications. The end of our desire may be said to be: that we may be of larger service and also, that by an increased loyalty, we may increase the number and better the output of our publications.

Imagine, if you can, yourself sitting down to create literature and at the same time be conscious that there are people—even whole organizations of Brethren—who use almost none of that output. Could you do your best with this conscious feeling of rejection while you are writing? Of course not.

The Best?

We do not claim to make the best literature or to have it dressed up to the standard of the most beautiful; but we do claim that it is best for Brethren and have abundant testimonials to that fact. It is not fine testimonials we are coveting; it is better support.

How?

At a recent State Conference, I said if two of our Sunday schools would give us their full support and buy all the materials possible of us, we could immediately put color on the "Primary Bible Stories." I believed that, but spoke more truth than I knew. I had hardly arrived at the office until I was shown that by the outlay of no great sum, the thing would be entirely possible. Yet we do not have the sum and the thing can not be done. This is a crying need; loyalty will satisfy it.

Clear Profits in Loyalty

Nearly all the increase we can hope to make by the Loyalty Campaign will result in profits. Of course, all who understand printing in the smallest measure know that the great cost in printing is the wages, upkeep, and getting ready for the first copy. The remainder is comparatively small. In other words, the first cost of every piece of literature we make is the heavy cost. If we can make our people see that increased loyalty would make a fine showing in profits and thus in betterment of our productions, I feel sure that we would soon get a Loyalty Result that would make the faces of thousands of our people wider and brighter. That's what we are hoping for. That's what we mean by Loyalty Campaign. Find a place and a way for your Sunday school, church, class or department to align themselves more fully and completely with the efforts of your editors and printers. Loyalty is the word!

We Can

I am assured that the thing is wholly possible and probable. Our people have always responded to a cause well represented and needy. I remember how it was said in this year's National Conference that the largest offering the college ever obtained from the churches was during the Bicentenary Movement when each church in the Brotherhood gave a very few, had presented to them the great need of Loyalty to that institution. They saw the need and supplied it. Now, we appeal for another needy project upon which all others depend—the Publications. Good literature and nice printing are the backbone of our structure and none can deny it.

Look Around

Now, brother Pastor and Superintendent, Teacher and Deacon Board or Trustees, will you not make yourself a committee of one to see the places in your organization where your group can make an improvement in loyalty? Where you can displace some literature that could better be filled by some your own editors make? Some increase in subscriptions that will both do good to your constituency and as well, your Publications? I feel sure that you can and that you will get busy to get it done.

CHARLES A. BAME,
Sunday School Editor.

Your Church Paper

the Official Organ of the Brethren Church, and is dedicated to the service of the entire brotherhood and to every district and congregation and individual member. It can be counted on to bring you the news of all the churches, contribute to the spiritual life and strengthen the faith of all the members, promote mutual love and fellowship, and support loyally all the interests of the brotherhood. It ought, therefore, to be in every Brethren home and deserves the loyal support of every member of the church. The success of the denomination depends in a large way upon the wider circulation of your church paper and your loyal cooperation is needed in order that this may be accomplished. Every boost to The Brethren Evangelist is a boost to the cause we love. Let's have a Booster Committee in every congregation. "The Gospel must be published."

SPECIAL EVANGELIST RATES

$1.35 for One New Subscription for One Year.
$3.00 for one New and One Renewal for one year. (This is your Christmas Gift opportunity).
$1.50 for Renewals if you aim to put your church on the Evangelist Honor Roll.

Sample copies to be used in the campaign will be sent to churches requesting them.
Also samples of Sunday School literature for a month's trial will be sent free upon request.

This page will give recognition from time to time of churches and pastors cooperating in our
PUBLICATIONS LOYALTY CAMPAIGN.

FACTS FOR YOU

THERE IS NO BRETHREN WORK OF ANY KIND BEING CARRIED ON THIS YEAR AT LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY. Riverside Institute as a Brethren School is not open this year. BY DECISION OF NATIONAL CONFERENCE it was closed till an evangelistic program could be established in place of the former school work.

BUT—

THE WORK AT KRYPTON is going right on.

Two fine established churches that nearly collapsed last year are now receiving emergency aid from the Home Mission Board and will be saved if we are able to stand by them throughout the year.

Ten other growing works and fourteen sacrificing workers, LOYAL TO THE BRETHREN CHURCH, are utterly dependent upon the approaching offering to be taken up in all our churches

AT THANKSGIVING TIME!

---

What Are We Trying to Do?

We are trying to save churches in danger.

We are trying to go forward with the whole gospel into new fields.

But we cannot make bricks without straw! We needed and asked for $850 at National Conference and received $500.

---

Our Needs Are Greater Now!

We cannot continue to meet losses in face of increasing burdens thrust upon us without closing some of the churches dependent upon us.

DEPRESSION, DISCOURAGEMENT AND DESTRUCTIVE criticism are uniting to destroy the finest Home Mission program the Brethren Church has ever had.

LOVE, LOYALTY, PRAYER, AND SACRIFICE alone can hold the advances we have gained.

THIS THANKSGIVING OFFERING WILL DECIDE.

What part will YOUR PRAYERS AND SACRIFICE HAVE IN IT?

Signs of the Times

A REMARKABLE Broadcast

Coming home rather late last night (Sunday), I sat down at the typewriter to finish some material for this department, but neither a rather weary mind nor the machinery seemed to work very well, so I tuned in on the radio at about the hour of eleven and heard the nation-wide broadcast of President Hoover's organization for the relief of the unemployed this winter.

It was a remarkable broadcast in a number of particulars, not the least of which was the technical accomplishment. The entire country was linked together in one gigantic hook-up, the announcer was in New York, yet he introduced speakers who spoke from different places all over the country. Kathleen Norris spoke from San Francisco, someone else from Washington, and a gentleman sang a couple of songs from New Orleans. The others delivered their parts from the New York studio. And not a second was lost between the announcer's introduction and the beginning of each speech or piece of music.

ALL Things are Possible

It is my belief that in the next world, when the Christian is equipped with the Resurrection Body which is not subject to the present limitations of space and time, we shall be able instantly to communicate with each other from any part of the universe. And also see each other. Why not? Certainly, man, as God intends him to be some day, will be superior to the gadgets of machinery. What is going on now is but the earnest of a greater future.

Doubtless, my suggestion would be met by incredulous smiles from the agnostics of this world. But that does not bother my faith. Furthermore, I read something recently which causes me to smile at the agnostics.

Here it is: In 1875, one year before the telephone became a reality, a man was arrested in Boston for attempting to raise money with which to promote a machine which he alleged would carry the human voice over a wire from place to place. A Boston editor, commenting on the arrest, wrote as follows—"A man about 46 years of age, giving the name of Joshua Copper-smith, has been arrested for attempting to extort funds from ignorant and superstitious people by exhibiting a device which he says will convey the human voice any distance over a metallic wire so as to be heard by the listener on the other end. He calls the instrument a 'telephone' which is obviously intended to imitate the word telegraph and win the confidence of those who know of the success of the latter instrument. Well informed people know it is impossible to transmit the human voice over wire as may be done with the dots and dashes of the Morse code and that, were it possible to do so, the thing would be of no practical value. The authorities who apprehended the criminal are to be congratulated."

If you smile at the cocksureness of this Boston editor, writing less than sixty years ago about the "impossibility" of things about which he knew nothing, then you should also be able to smile at the dogmatism of the present-day sceptics who declare with great solemnity that God, Immortality, Resurrection, Prayer and Miracles are "impossible."

CAN we get along Without God?

I have already suggested that the above mentioned radio broadcast was remarkable in several respects. For one thing, although the program was quite well proportioned in its various elements, it contained nothing religious. There was no prayer offered, no Scripture read, no thanksgiving rendered. In fact I heard no mention of God at all.

Perhaps this was wholly an oversight. Still it was an ominous omission, characteristic of a widely prevalent attitude. Men are feeling that they can solve the world's problems without God. Some have gone so far as to say that the bringing of God into these matters only handicaps the work of solution. Even Daniel Poling, rather strangely, declares that the prohibition movement must be taken out of the realm of religion in order to succeed. God, it would seem, has become a liability instead of an asset in human affairs, a cause of embarrassment in the house of his professed children.

ONE Omission I enjoyed

During the entire program, lasting one and a quarter hours, there was not a single presentation of jazz music. And better yet, there were no "crooners," none of these ubiquitous tenors who sing through their noses.

Perhaps the sponsors of the program realized that any listeners who might extend any help to solve the problem of relieving the needy would have at least a semblance of intelligence which it would not pay to insult. At any rate, if this be a sign of the times, we should be devoutly thankful for it.

SOMETHING Else They Might Have Had

I noticed also that all those who took part in the broadcast would be classed among the rich in this world's goods, having either a goodly fortune or a large earning capacity. There were none among the exhorters or musicians who are at present feeling the pinch of want and hunger.

Perhaps this also was a bit of strategy. If you can enlist a rich man to speak on behalf of your cause and to ask others to give, consistency will demand some giving on his own part. So it is a good thing to enlist the rich as speakers at such a time.

But I wondered, as I listened, whether it might not have been an improvement if somewhere in the program we could have heard from a poor man, someone who is having some personal experience in the matter under discussion. It would have been interesting to have heard from some farmer paying more in taxes than he makes from his farm, or from some man who has actually lost his job and cannot feed his hungry children. Our Lord could have spoken on the subject, having had "not where to lay his head."

HE Will Speak Some Day

While listening to the array of famous men and women speaking from the various cities of this country, it occurred to the Son of God himself will speak world some day from the city of Jerusalem and tell the world how to solve its problems. The speakers last night, great as they were, had no solution to offer. They asked for money, and then they were done. They did not tell how to abolish poverty and unemployment, or war which is the cause of our troubles. When Christ speaks from Jerusalem he will solve our political and economic difficulties. On this point see Isaiah 2:1-4.

And do not forget that Christ is already present in the poor here and now. An expectation of his approval, you cannot shut your eyes to their need. For when Christ comes to speak to the world a second time he will have something to say to those who have a deaf ear to the cry of the poor.

HE Has Spoken

On this last point we need not wait for the Second Coming of our Lord. He has already spoken in the Word, and here is the thing that he has said:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold is cankered; and the rust of it shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped together treasure for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth—" This is the Word of Christ to those who have piled up riches by exploiting the man who works.

And here is his Word to those who are men who have been defrauded by the present system under which the economy has been trying to run; "Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." (James 5:1-7)

Some Fundamental Missionary Motives

There are many and varied motives that influence men to engage in missionary activity, but there are a few that are fundamental and universal. None can escape their force or get away from them. They operate alike on the heart of him who goes and him who gives; they cause the feet of the missionary to hasten to those who know it not and they cause the hands of those who remain at home to contribute of their funds to such missionary work possible. And they never cease to operate. Other motives operative for a time, but with changing conditions they lose their force. These remain ever the same, upon every Christian of every age the sacred obligation to deliver the message of God to the unevangelized people of the world, at home as well as abroad. Not one of us can escape the responsibility imposed by these considerations.

We are faced with the definite command of our Lord Jesus Christ: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature"—that part of the world that lies next door as well as that which is far distant. As we face that command we feel the weight of the obligation to obey, for commands require obedience. It is especially does he who sincerely acknowledges Jesus Christ as the Lord of his life recognize the necessity of obedience. It is something decidedly inconsistent with the confession of the Lord of Christ without the giving of obedience to his commands. Jesus himself said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" The very acknowledgment of his Lordship lays upon us the obligation to obey. And there is no more necessary or urgent command than to "make disciples of all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." We are faced with the necessity of obedience right now. The Home Mission Board of our church is calling for the funds which will enable it to carry out the commission of our Lord, and it stands us in hands to bear the burden of that appeal is not to be treated as of the authority of a man. It is the program and call of God and we dare not turn aside. The Home Board is but the agent and instrument of Christ to carry on his work, and we shall be held accountable for the response we make. It is a serious thing to refuse to do a known duty, or to turn a deaf ear to the clear and authoritative word of God. Let no man be deceived by the voice of condemnation; allow himself to be overcome by the spirit of criticism, of selfishness, and thus caused to fail of obedience. The spirit of God is not the spirit of confusion and of division and of disobedience, wilfulness of way, but of submission and of love and of obedience. Let us respond to this call as unto the call of God, laying down our carnal imaginations and selfish exaltations, entering into captivity not merely every unsanctified thought, but every unconsecrated dollar "to the obedience of Christ."

We are constrained by the love of Christ to do what we can to carry the gospel in its entirety to those who have it not. We set away the reluctant, yielding to the word of command and in its place the joyous giving of self to the doing of that which is well pleasing to our Lord. The spirit of the Psalmist begets the spirit of every Christian when he is faced with the responsibility of missionary activity—"I will delight to do thy will, O God." However driving and urgent may be the command, the true missionary will go forth not because he must but because it is a privilege to go. He obeys because he loves, even as all men would do: "If a man love me, he will keep my commandments. That is a lofty standard, but it has been found to be true in the longest missionary experience. The language of the great missionary of all time was, "The love of Christ constraineth me." Other motives may have had their place in the life of a man, but the preacher, he was not unmindful of the restlessness of the heart, the harmfulness of sin, but over and above everything else he was constrained at every step by the supreme love of Christ in his soul to obey the specific command to take the gospel to the ends of the earth. That is the spirit that should actuate every Christian heart, every soul who knows and prizes the saving grace of God. That love should constrain not merely those who go with the Gospel message, but those who give as well. Every layman and minister alike ought to be able to say, "The love of Christ constraineth me," as he faces his part of the Home Mission task of the church at this Thanksgiving season.

There is a third, not necessarily the last that might be mentioned, among fundamental motives, but sufficient for our purpose, and that is, that we are moved by our fellowship with the sufferings of Christ to give the knowledge of salvation to those who have it not. When we realize that it was sin that caused the suffering and the death of our Lord, that he died that men might have life and that his heart is even now yearning for those who are without the knowledge of his saving grace, we will be driven by the very fellowship that we have with those sufferings to do something to save the lost. Paul was ambitious not merely that he might know the love of Christ, but also the fellowship of his sufferings. A young student volunteer had reached this height in his religious experience when he quoted to some fellow-students: "There is only one religious problem in the world today, and that is the problem of sin, and only one religious solution, 'God in Christ taking the sin upon himself and bearing it away.'" When one gets upon his consciousness the lost condition of mankind and the realization that Christ died for man's sin and that he is the only sufficient remedy for sin, he is fellowshipping with the sufferings of Christ and that fellowship will cause him to do everything within his power to the end that the world might come to know and accept the Savior of men. The Home Mission challenge is just that, and the only question is whether or not we have entered in any measure into the depths of that sacred fellowship. To the extent that we have, we will count no sacrifice too great that we may forward the cause of Christ as it has been visualized for us in the Home Mission program of our church.

AT LAST

The Christian Standard says that, when he attended a football game between Northwestern University and some visiting organization, Al Capone was "booed" so persistently that he and the bodyguard that always attends this "hero" were finally compelled to leave the stadium.

That is something like it. Society needs to get to the place where it will feel soiled when it comes into contact with that sort of character. When a group of college people and their followers at a sporting event refuse to tolerate the presence of such a scoundrel, we are on the way to a cleansing process.

Possibly this experience of the vice-lord of Chicago explains why he came into the United States court a few days later whimpering like a whipped cur. He, a bloody-handed assassin, is being tried on the charge of stealing taxes from the United States, and he protests cravenly that he is going to suffer because he has been held before the public as the villain that he is.

We have always maintained that these gangsters are cowards. Get them in a corner and they show how yellow they are. And that is one reason why society is now ready to disown them.

Some of these days society will get to the place where it will also refuse to be soiled by contact with the banker who helps an Al Capone store away his tainted money in trusts and bonds, and the lawyer who teaches him how to defeat the law, and the papers, like the Chicago Tribune, that create the atmosphere of contempt for law in which his kind can thrive.

All these ought to be "booed" out too.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Our daily work, the constant occupation of our life, needs to be done in God's presence, and to be shone through and through by him. Often it is the hardest part of our religion.—Phillips Brooks.

Publications Loyalty Campaign aims to make it easier for churches, Sunday schools and individuals to put into practice the spirit of loyal support of our own denominational publications, which they in their better moments fain would show forth.

Brother R. I. Humbert writes of his campaign recently held at Raystown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Earl S. Flora is the pastor. The attendance and interest were good and encouragement was given by the presence of delegations from nearby churches. The meetings closed with a baptismal service, but we are not informed as to the number baptized.

One pastor wrote in his last October church bulletin: "Get ready, for its coming! The annual drive for the Brethren Evangelist begins next month. Only subscriptions will be accepted; no excuses nor alibis." That pastor has got what we call the loyalty spirit, and his people are getting it and will get it yet more. Loyalty is contagious. Will not every pastor help spread the contagion?

Brother E. M. Riddle, national president of the Brethren Christian Endeavor Union, writes a message to the Endeavorers this week. He makes an announcement of special interest to Indiana societies, the willingness of their district secretary, Brother C. D. Whitmer, to be of service to them. He also makes suggestions of interest to all societies regarding their activities for the months of November and December.

Mission page is given this week to two splendid articles dealing with Home Missions, one a story by Brother Steffler of what Home Missions has accomplished for the Third church of Philadelphia and the other is an appeal by Brother N. C. Nielsen for a revival of missionary passion. And these men exemplify in their own lives the missionary enthusiasm they would have others possess.

President E. E. Jacobs reports the regular enrollment for Ashland College at 304 and 86 Saturday students, the largest number of students of college rank that the institution has ever had. The college is doing a real service to the local community by sponsoring a lyceum course, consisting of three musical numbers. If the first is a fair sample of the course, it will be a real credit to the college. The Homecoming football game will be played on November 14. It would be encouraging to see a goodly number of former students and other friends of the college present on that day.

From the bulletin of the Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, Brethren church we learn that Brother W. H. Schaffer and his people are planning to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Brethren church in Conemaugh in 1932. Not all of our churches will be able to do that, but we shall be glad to learn of others which already have completed or soon will complete fifty years of service. Doubtless other churches have, or will have, under way plans for similar celebrations. Let us hear of them. We shall be glad to have reports of such events when they take place and will give first page space to the pictures of churches so celebrating.

Thanksgiving season is the time to make your offering for National Home Missions, and there never was a time when a large offering was so necessary and urgent. Every one interested in the church's future ought to be ready to give, not his "bit" but his best. It is one's best that brings the blessing from giving and it is the very best of every member that is needed to enable the church to do the task before it. It may be necessary to sacrifice this fall in order to do all that we ought to do, but the cause is worthy and the church needs to do some sacrificing in these days. Send offering to R. Paul Miller, Home Mission Secretary, Berne, Indiana.

The first known fruit of our Publications Loyalty Campaign came from a good sister in Long Beach, California. Mrs. Alice

Ward, who has been taking the Evangelist for many years and declares she would not be without it, sends $1.35 for a new subscription to be sent to another party living far distant. Sister was a sister to our late Brother Ira D. Slotter, and she believes the Evangelist will carry a needed message to the soul of some one who is not a member of the Brethren church. We appreciate expression of confidence in our church paper and this fine testimony to missionary work. If the paper is good for others, it is good for our own people. We are counting on our readers' interest and cooperation in helping to put it in the homes that need it much.

Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, who has so ably and faithfully carried the "Family Altar" column for a number of years, writes that he is leaving Chicago and moving his family to Washington where he has a government position in the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Among other reasons for the move, he says, "We will especially appreciate the privilege of worshipping in a Brethren church again." Such denominational love and loyalty is refreshing and suggests one fine way of solving the isolated membership problem—get the isolated members to locate where there are Brethren churches already established. If we should urge this up to people and get the idea into their minds and hearts, we would meet the needs in every situation. Many of our people would find it necessary to move into communities where there is already a Brethren church. For them, and for many others who are for a whole Gospel church, we must give ourselves earnestly to the task of church extension.

It seems necessary to remind our readers that those who wish to obtain a copy of the forthcoming new missionary book, by Dr. Florence N. Gribble and entitled "Undaunted Hope," get their subscription in the hands of the Foreign Mission Society officials before the first 1,000 subscriptions are completed. All who subscribe after that time will pay the full price of $2.50. Those who wish to get in on the $2.50 price should not wait long, as Dr. Gribble thinks there is danger of some doing so. A misunderstanding she has met with of the Foreign Board's declaration that subscriptions for "Undaunted Hope" close in April. If there are those who are wanting a book and are delaying placing their order, thinking the pre-publication price will still be available in April, they may be disappointed. It has been definitely stated that the pre-publication price of $2.50 closes with the 1,000 subscriptions. If that number should be gotten before the first of the year and you should wait till April to send your name, you will be too late to get the book at $2.50. Therefore, send your subscription promptly, to avoid disappointment. Louis S. Bauman, 1925 East Fifth Street, Long Beach, California. No money is needed till the 1,000 subscriptions are obtained; you will be notified.

Brother I. D. Bowman gives us a communication this week in which we learn that, though Mrs. Bowman has undergone much suffering in recent months, she is now recovering, for which we are thankful. He reports the addition of three new members to his church in Delaware, two by baptism and one by relation. He announces himself open to calls for evangelistic or Bible lecture work. Bowman's remarks about establishing more churches are timely and we believe it is well to have our churches reminded that there are many opportunities to do definite home mission work in our communities. While the establishing of new churches is more difficult than it once was, and while the financial burden of adequate buildings for newly organized congregations is greater than any one church can assume alone, especially in our larger cities, and therefore should not be undertaken without the consent of those others which are likely to be called on to help to bear the burden, yet it is true that our churches and pastors of today well afford to be more wide-awake with regard to opportunities for new mission work near at hand, and more ready to make individual and congregational sacrifices to promote such mission work. We honor our pioneer and older ministers, such as Brother E. J. Bowman, whose initiative and passion resulted in the founding of some of the good churches we now possess and only wish that the missionary spirit prevailed in the heart of every member of our church of our brotherhood.

No Success Without Sacrifice

By R. Paul Miller, Home Mission Secretary

R. Paul Miller

From Eden to the Millennium, sacrifice is written across every real achievement that has blessed the human race. No matter what the nature of the thing has been, some one paid for it in the coin of sacrifice. When God would save this world of sinful men, he could not do it without making a sacrifice that tore his own heart to shreds and robbed Heaven of its fairest treasure. When a mother would bring a sweet babe into the world she cannot do it without offering herself and sacrifice is written across her life till death. When you behold a upstanding family of boys and girls blessing the if you will but look closely you will find a toil worn are marked father and mother standing near with ord written across their lives—it is "sacrifice." the days of the Apostles, the Church of Jesus Christ ed and triumphed by sacrifice. It was begun at a n calvary where the Son of God sacrificed himself Ever since that day the Church of Jesus Christ atinued in the sacrifices of those who have been dis- of that same Lord. In the track of the Christian you will find fortunes given up, homes left be- smoking embers of the burning stake, prisoners hing in prison cells, the bleaching bones of those tacked forest and deserts of sin-dark lands to carry ss on and on.

ou were to discover the facts of every church and gation that stands to the glory of God and as a pro- for the children, you will find quiet folks living in ofashioned home without many conveniences, driv- a old automobile far out of date, wearing clothes e faded and worn.

ARIFICE! SACRIFICE!! SACRIFICE!!! Where e as bee no sacrifice there has been no blessing. The ragation and pastor who know nothing of real sacri- Christ, know little of blessing and joy in Christ.

ong ago I was in a home where every convenience resent, the most modern of furnishings, a grand o the latest model automobile, they wore the finest eand ate the rarest foods, made the most attractive e trips possible. But, I found that they were ers to the great struggle of the church in Home is, foreign missions, our seminary and other things. ve nothing to these works. They told me they t afford it! In this home they read no Bible, had uly altar, attended no prayer meeting, and went to once on Sunday when there was nothing else to do. id they didn't see much future for the Church!

days later I entered another home. It was old- ed, few modern conveniences were there, the liv- s simple and quiet. But there was an open Bible y stand and table in the living room and parlor, the bureaus in the bedrooms; they always prayed g and evening, they talked with me for hours about new churches in the home field, about Kentucky, about Africa; they knew the missionaries by name and personal acquaintance; they showed me their rainbow certificates for hundreds of dollars given to Home Mis- sions. The brother said to me, "We don't have as nice a home as some folks have. We found we could not give to the Lord's work freely and build a new home too. Most of what we have had is over there in the church we love." And I thought, "Yes, brother, and in the Heaven you are going to."

What has this to do with our Thanksgiving Offering for Home Missions? Just this. An offering that will save the work we are now doing and enable us to build new congregations as a monument to our love for Christ and loyalty to his Word, CANNOT BE REALIZED WITH- OUT REAL SACRIFICE. We know it cannot be! We don't expect it to be!

Before it can be done, some will go without new auto- mobiles, others will do without new overcoats, and dresses, still others will forego pleasures they had planned. Many women and young folks will earn extra money in order to have a part in it.

THERE IS NO OTHER WAY BUT BY SACRIFICE. IF WE REFUSE TO SACRIFICE, WE ARE LOST. WE FAIL OUR LORD IN A MOST CRUCIAL TIME. WHEN OUR LORD RETURNS MANY PEOPLE WILL have a hard time explaining the gold they hoarded, and property they held more than they could use. They have taken the blessings he gave them to use for his work, and sel- fishly held it in a miserly greed. It should have been used to preach the gospel. While sin broken souls reached out pleading hands for the Bread of Life these have hugged bank books and deeds and let the souls die.

Never has our Home Mission Board faced such a tre- mendous strain. Never have we had such rich opportuni- ties offered us. Never have we had such a hard time in which to seek gifts for Christ's work. Never have our Board Members been in prayer for the work as now. We are facing a crisis.

We appeal to every loyal Brethren heart, both among pastors and people, to join us in an offering of sacrifice for the work of Christ. That will be a real Thanksgiving Offering on earth as well as in Heaven. It will make the Lord's heart glad.

Home Missions--Foundation Builder of the Brethren Church

By Dr. C. L. Anspach, Member Home Mission Board

Recently I stepped into a bank in the northern section of Michigan and noticed a sign which had been used for purposes of advertising. A husband and wife were shown with a copy of the city paper before them, which indi- cated that the largest factory in the city had been closed and that thousands of men were without employment. The wife after reading the notice in the paper, was pic- tured as turning to her husband and saying, "I am very glad that we still have our bank account." The picture and the caption impressed me, for just several hours be- fore my visit to the bank, I learned that several more banks had failed in our state. I was also aware of the fact that about five thousand or more banks had failed during the last few years. I have also been informed that there are seventeen hundred business failures a month.

Dr. C. L. Anspach

Each day we are more concerned with the state of the world. It seems that the entire universe is in a state of war, depression, pestilence, or political confusion. All forces, economic, political, and physical seem to be in revolt. The old standards to which we were able to tie and which have given us a sense of security are being questioned, and discarded. In view of this we are asking, where shall we find security and contentment? Through it all, we seem to hear a voice saying, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

Without a doubt many of the members of our church have lost as a result of the depression and near panic which is upon us. We have trusted in material things, and the moth has corrupted and the thief has broken through and stolen. Now comes an appeal which permits us to fulfill the last part of the saying of Jesus, "but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through and steal."

Builders of the Past

Home Missions and home missionaries have always been builders for the Brethren Church. BUILDERS OF THE PAST. Some weeks ago while on a trip through the northern part of the state of Michigan, I understood the conductor on the train to call a station, "Brethren." The name interested me, and inquiry revealed the fact that the town had been named for a group of Brethren who had settled there years ago. I have found, as many of you have, that the name Brethren is known throughout the United States. Our history of education recognizes the importance of the church in the educational development and consciousness of the great states of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, and other states. BUILDERS OF THE PAST. Pioneers who have gone out and built in the name of the Master, "making disciples of all peoples." For a period of several years, we have had in the columns of the Evangelist the life histories of the early builders of our church. It is impossible to read those accounts, written by Dr. Shively, and pass lightly the tremendous sacrifice made by the early fathers. Sacrifice, zeal, and a conviction that the Bible must be preached and the doctrines of the church emphasized gave us a church. BUILDERS OF THE PAST—if there had been no builders in the past there would be no present for our church. Home missions and home missionaries in the past have made for our present.

Builders of the Present

The new churches that have come within our time have been those established through the unselfish effort of men who have been, for the time being at least, home missionaries. Dayton, Long Beach, Washington, and others—strongholds for Brethrenism—did not come into existence because of some act of magic, but they represent many hard hours of toil and prayer. Certainly there must be other centers just as receptive to our teachings as those mentioned above. BUILDERS OF THE PRESENT. I am sure that there are many men, of ability and conviction, ready to go into centers and preach as Paul into Corinth, if we but send them. I am sure there are many men in the cities ready to hear the message as the Ethiopian, "How can I understand out a teacher?"

Our Seminary at Ashland is training as fine a group of young men as can be found in any denomination. Of them? Possible builders of the future, but we must find funds for the opening of new points their future is jeopardized.—not only their future but the future of the church. Shall we keep faith with them? They are a life—a thing very precious but worth little unless opportunity is given to use it: opportunity for the development of the best. Their lives, so freely given, can count much for Christ, but a great deal more if we make it possible for them to go into needy fields and work for the Master. BUILDERS OF THE PRESENT—what shall we do with them?

Builders of the Future

The term is only a useless gesture unless we do something for the present need. As the present depends upon the past so the future depends upon the present. If the present fails there will be no future. If we continue to squander up treasures that are swept away through bad judgment of business and neglect the safest of investments by mortgaging the future.

Every person is looking for a sound investment, one which will pay the largest of returns. It has been the opinion of the many ages before ours that the best investment paying the largest interest is life. We pay money to support schools that our children may be given a good start, but neglect to provide other institutions, especially the church, to assist in building that fundamental—character—the absence of which always makes for defeat. We have been shortsighted in our policy. If we invested our monies in new points we are not only building more Brethren Churches, we are also making it possible for more young lives to find eternal salvation, for it has been written, "What profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Investment—what investment will pay a dividend than a redeemed individual?

Each year Home Missions have appealed to the church for help. The church has responded. This year is no different from the rest as far as the Home Mission Board is concerned, for it has no other source than the gifts of friends interested in its work. It, as similar organizations, is hard hit this year and if its activities are curtailed, you will be curtailing the work of the Lord, not of the Board. Money must be raised if the work of the past years is continued and more money must be raised if expansion work is to be started. A complete program has been outlined for the year and you are being invited to participate in this great movement of our denomination. Shall we break faith with the builders of the past and of the present and thus make impossible the work of the future? The answer rests with each and every member of the denomination.

Ypsilanti, Michigan.

No one has success until he has the abundance of life. This is made up of the many-fold activity of energy, enthusiasm and gladness. It is spring to meet the day with a thrill at being alive. It is to go forth to meet the world in an ecstasy of joy. It is to realize the oneness of humanity in true spiritual sympathy.—Lillian Whelan

Co-operation the Need of the Hour

W. C. Benshoff, Member Home Mission Board

W. C. Benshoff

As we approach the Thanksgiving season we are reminded of the goodness and love of God who has richly blessed his believing children. If there is depression, if many are in need, God is not to be blamed who has caused the earth to bring forth an abundant harvest. Out of gratitude to our heavenly Father we should give to the cause of Christian missions as we have been blessed and prospered by him whose we are and whom we serve. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he pur-in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of thy; for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:6, 7). Conditions existing today are a challenge to our and liberality. If many are in need of material the spiritual impoverishment is far more general astrous. Many are walking in the darkness of the of sin, and need the light of the Gospel; many are g their spiritual nature, such stand in need of the l meat and drink. "Waves of sin and misery, as never before, are sweeping over the earth. From rection are heard the cries of the world's perplex- pain and sorrow. The Christian, as a steward of and love and wisdom and salvation that the Gos- als, should endeavor to look out upon the world of d women as the Gospel declares their dangers and At this hour of the world's distress it is our high e to do all that we can to acquaint mankind with d's remedy" (Don O. Shelton). Now we who are t Jesus, who walk in the light of his blessed Word, ve tasted of the joy of salvation, and have the e heaven are indebted to those who know him not ardon of their sins.

ugh the medium of the Home Mission Board the n church is engaged in a great work of church n. That much has been done goes without say- e needs no argument. Many thousands of lives n won to Christ, and the church has been more sely and more permanently established. But if the o Board is to carry on in the face of tremendous op- o from the world it must be backed by the whole Our claim to being a Whole Gospel People is allenged. The Brethren Church must accept the ion of her Lord, or fail in her mission.

ecret of success in any enterprise is cooperation. e is this truer than in the sphere of religion. "All d always at it," was the motto of Wesley. This cooperation is seen in all of nature, as with the each moving in its particular sphere, but in har- th others,—no clashing, no disorder. The same n plant and animal life, without which coopera- n life would perish. In all institutions and organ- among men where there is success, the spirit of ion prevails. So it must be in the church, each g a task and all laboring together in the carry- e the Lord's work. This implies like-mindedness.

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." All must see and believe and think the same thing. Under the Holy Spirit this is possible. There must be a yielding to him.

The early church affords a striking illustration of the results of cooperation. The disciples accepted the commission of their Lord, and zealously proclaimed the principles of the religion which Christ came to establish. They went forward as one man in the face of tremendous opposition. They witnessed in the midst of a society that was morally corrupt, and spiritually destitute. They gave themselves and their possessions without reservation, possessing the spirit of sacrifice. "No man said that ought of the things which he possessed was his own." There was singleness of purpose, "This one thing I do." Everything else was subordinated to the one thing, witnessing for Christ. The results were phenomenal, the Gospel was preached from Jerusalem to Rome, multitudes were converted, the faith was established.

Such faithfulness and cooperation will make for similar results today. Two words of the Gospel must be emphasized and reiterated. "Come," and find life; "Go," and disciple others that they too may have life. Christ has provided for the world of sinful men eternal life. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so." Let all the redeemed say it. Conditions challenge us to a greater degree of sacrifice. Our financial gifts must be increased, our testimony more pronounced. But some will say that conditions compel us to give less. But it is just here that the sacrifice comes in. The work we are doing for our Lord is so vital in importance and so lasting in its consequences that it must be the last thing to suffer. Conditions must not be made an excuse for doing nothing, but let each one give as God has blessed and prospered.

The missionary work of the Brethren Church is not the work of the few, but of the many. The offering of this year should equal, if not exceed that of a year ago. Let us not say it can't be done. Let us believe it can, and back our faith with our gifts. Here is a chance to prove ourselves. We gain nothing by pushing these opportunities aside or treating them indifferently. Responsibility for the missionary work of the church rests first of all upon the ministry. WE MUST BE COMMITTED TO THE FACT THAT, FOR THE PRESENT, HOME MISSIONS IS OUR SUPREME TASK. After a prayerful study, there must be a clear and forceful presentation of the cause. Through sermon and announcement, through pastoral letter and personal visitation, the entire membership is enlisted. But a like responsibility rests upon the laity. Let all auxiliary organizations and Sunday school classes respond. And may the blessed Lord lay upon each heart a sense of personal responsibility in meeting the need; and may he open our eyes to the exalted privilege which is ours in contributing to the cause of church extension. Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Women In Home Missions

By Mrs. U. J. Shively, National President W. M. S.

The following paragraph is taken from an article written by Mrs. Orrin R. Judd, in an issue of The Missionary Review of the World.

Some years ago a painting was on display in the show window of the headquarters office of the Western Union Telegraph Company on lower Broadway, New York, which called the attention of the passerby to the various methods by which through the centuries men have communicated with one another. The scene was a lovely landscape, in the foreground of which a severe storm was raging. Driving rains lashed the trees and laid low great fields of ripening grain. Torrents of rain, sweeping toward the earth, beat upon the form of a man at work among the wires of a telegraph pole, and upon his companion standing below holding a receiver to his ear in order to catch the first indication of restored connection. In the golden sunlit background beyond the storm was seen, as against a luminous screen, a phantom procession: a runner straining every nerve, a chariot with eager steeds leaping at the master's command, a lone rider—the pony express of a century ago, and the friendly stage coach that succeeded it and was superseded by the mail train. The picture needed only the radio and the airplane to bring it down to date. No less arresting was the paragraph beneath it which read in substance: "In all ages heroic men have defied hardships, dangers, and obstacles of every kind in order that the message entrusted to them might be delivered to those for whom it was intended and who were waiting to receive it."

Mrs. U. J. Shively

It is a vividly symbolic representation of the missionary enterprise. All missionary history is the story of heroic messengers who have delivered the message of the Gospel of peace to those to whom they were sent regardless of the hazards to be overcome on the way. But though there are many methods the purpose is always one—to get the message through."

The history of women in Home Mission work is most interesting, but too long to be given here. From the founding of the early colonies to the present time, theirs has been no small part in carrying the Gospel to Indians, Negroes, Orientals, Spanish-speaking peoples in the Southwest, and immigrants from a score of countries.

The first Women's Home Mission Society was formed in Chicago in 1877. Twenty years later the leaders of the several boards being drawn into close fellowship of mutual helpfulness introduced an interdenominational day of prayer for Home Missions. In 1908 nine women's boards united to form the Council of Women for Home Missions. During the years there has been a tendency to include more than the home field in the Day of Prayer, so in 1921 began the cooperation with the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions in the preparation of a program to include both Home and Foreign Missions. This continued until in 1927 the invitation was extended to women round the world, many of whom had for years observed such a day. Since then the first Friday in Lent has been annually observed as a World Day of Prayer. In this World Fellowship of Christian Women thirty-five countries had a share last year.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Brethren Church has always been very much interested in Home Missions, in fact, the object of this society is "to promote Christian culture, to do mission and church work: to raise funds for enlarging the borders of the church: to disseminate the principles of Christian religion and to advance Christian womanhood."

Ever since the beginning of our society when the women, by faith, undertook what seemed a gigantic task for so few, up to the present day, these women have a large share in supporting home missions. The influence of the women stimulated the churches to increasing exertion in the extension of the home mission enterprise. Many churches, who in the past have been the recipients of the W. M. S. gifts, have become self-supporting and are now helping others.

It may be of interest to note that from the year 1877 to the present time,—a period of 54 years,—our Woman's Missionary Society has given aid to seventeen churches amounting to $19,725. This plus the amounts contributed to the Seminary, College, and Foreign work brings totals to many thousands.

Then shall we ask—are the women of the Woman's Missionary Society interested in Home Missions, and are they willing to endure hardship, give of their time, money, and themselves to get the Gospel through to those who are waiting to receive it? to those who need it?

Many cities and towns need the Gospel and the many opportunities now for the Brethren Church to enter and occupy. Let us make it possible for the Church to go forward, carrying the wonderful "Good News" to those who are lost and need salvation.

This Thanksgiving time, let us come forward with our offerings as never before, laying large gifts at the Master's feet. He will abundantly bless the giver and multiply his gifts to his own glory.

Nappanee, Indiana.

What the Brethren Church Owes to Antiquity

By Dr. K. M. Monroe, Professor in Ashland Seminary

Paul's Debt

"I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians, both to the wise, and to the unwise." These words are to be found in Romans 1:14. The absence of any connecting particle between verses 13 and 14 is a clear indication of Paul's feeling and energy bursting into expression. One writer paraphrases the verse thus: "I feel that I owe myself to all that is called Gentile."

Obligation is expressed to men of every race and culture, "the wise and the foolish." In accordance with this acknowledged obligation Paul declares himself obligated to preach the Gospel "to you that are at Rome also."

This 14th verse cannot be interpreted to mean that those in Rome had conferred any special favor on Paul and thus obligating him to make this return. This is that Paul felt obligated to preach "the power of God unto salvation" wherever possible. This obligation arose not from man but from God. He was an elected vessel of God, chosen to bear his name before the Gentiles (Acts 9:15). By the grace of God he was redeemed; his intellect, feeling and will turned from work of destruction to work of construction, from destroying the church to building it up, from a hater of our Lord to his apostle. Paul's debt to God was of gigantic magnitude and he

Second, God has indeed favored us h Paul, we are obligated to preach the Gospel y possible. We have an open door of opportunity to build up our churches by winning men to the Lord and in our teaching ministry to build them up in the Word.

The Home Mission Board is our official representative in extension work. They have heard the "Macedonian Call" of American communities where there is no Brethren church or where our church and pastor in a community need advice, encouragement and financial aid. Their ability to answer the call is determined by the Brotherhood at large.

The Message of the Brethren Church is needed in this day. We believe in the Authority of the Decalogue, the Authority of the Bible and the Authority of our God. America needs our message more today than ever before. We have men ready to preach our message. Are you willing to send them forth into the field? Will the Brethren Church continue to recognize its debt to God and, with Paul, be ready to preach the Gospel wherever he opens the way?

25. What basis does the Brethren church offer for Christian unity?

The Brethren Church

Although it is the hope of the author that this treatise may be useful to anyone interested enough to read it, yet it is meant specially as a handbook for members of the Brethren Church.

Unity in faith and practice should come about, not by forced submission to a creed prepared by some one else, but by the intelligent study of the Word of God which will bring to light the same truths for all.

It is not to be expected that unity of faith shall extend to every detail of thinking. It is enough that there be unity of spirit so that there may be cooperation of the one body, guided by the one Spirit.

Historically the Brethren Church is part of the fruit of the pietistic movement which followed the reformation in the seventeenth century. But it tries to go back of all modern movements to Christ and his Gospel as a basis for faith and practice. It believes that there is a good reason for all that Jesus commanded.

There is a basis for union of all believers in Christ in the two words obedience and conscience.

First, obedience. The church should provide the opportunity to obey all that Christ commanded, that there may be no need to form another group in order to obey what is lacking in the church.

Obedience is the key to truth (Jn. 7:17-, the proof of faith (Jas. 2:26), the expression of love (1 Jn. 5:2), the secret of communion (Jn. 15:10), the true meat for the soul (Jn. 4:32-34), the acceptable sacrifice (1 Sam. 15:22), the indestructible foundation for the church (Mt. 7:24-27).

Second, the conscience. The conscience is an attribute of personality (Gen. 3:22) so precious that to save man from the ruin which he chooses in sin, God does not destroy the conscience, but educates it (Tit. 2:11). This method Jesus also followed (Jn. 8:9). It, the conscience, is the law of God to them that are without law (Rom. 2:15), and should be respected in those who are weak in the faith (1 Cor. 8:7). It is the response of value in the act of baptism (1 Pet. 3:21). It is the glory of the true Christian (2 Cor. 1:12). Therefore liberty of conscience is necessary to Christian character. It is fundamental to the true church. Let the church observe the precept of Rom. 14:4, "Who art thou who judgest another's man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth", then there will be no occasion to form groups apart to escape the tyranny of self-imposed dictators to the consciences of others.

The Brethren church therefore seeks to provide the opportunity for complete obedience, together with the liberty of conscience which individual students of the Bible should have in following truth. It has confidence that the Scriptures themselves will fulfill their mission for such sincere students (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and will bring conviction to those who are not sincere (Heb. 4:12). It believes that Christ is the living, present Head of his church, and that his Spirit will, as his only Vicar, continue to lead into all truth all those who are willing to be led. It is for us to remember, finally, that we are ministers of the new covenant, not of the letter but of the spirit, for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life" (2 Cor. 3:6).

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Luke 18:1-8. We need not go back to the days of Christ to find an unjust judge: crooked politicians are still very much in evidence. Just bring sufficient pressure to bear upon them, ask them frequently enough, give them no peace, and we may obtain almost anything we wish. But God is no unjust judge: we do not need to plead with him, nor try to force him to do our will, but he loves to give good gifts to them that ask him, and that right speedily. Men ought always to pray, and not to faint. Lord, increase our faith!

TUESDAY

Luke 18:9-14. Why God hears our prayers. The Pharisee pleaded his own goodness and upright character; the publican pleaded his own sin as the sure proof that he needed a God who could save. Let us not despise personal righteousness and upright Christian character, but let us seek the cleansing power of God, which alone can enable us to live such lives. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy."

WEDNESDAY

Luke 18:15-17. There must be no pretense in prayer. When we wish to commune with God, we are not to go into his presence with great swelling words, as though we would impress him with our wisdom; neither are we to mouth over inherited phrases that have little or no meaning in our own experience; but we are to commune with him in childlike simplicity, in straightforward thought and word making known our joys and sorrows, our difficulties and problems, or our request. "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

THURSDAY

Luke 18:18-27. We should never approach God in prayer without first realizing his essential goodness. All things that come from him are good, and aside from him there is nothing good. There is none good save God. We should also try to see things in the light of their value before God. Even the richest man, who had scrupulously done every good work from his youth up, could not of himself enter the kingdom of God. Yet by God's grace he might do so,—and so might the vilest poorest sinner! Lincoln said he was often driven to his knees by the realization that there was nowhere else for him to go. This has many times been the experience of every true Christian, for he has found that "things that are impossible with men are possible with God."

FRIDAY

Luke 18:28-30. The disciples represented the life which Jesus had called the rich young ruler. Truly they had left all to follow Jesus, but they had found in him their all in all. In their new-found peace and happiness they had received far more than they had ever given up, "and in the world to come life everlasting." Who can measure the value of life everlasting! How small the price we are called upon to pay! Let us praise him for his goodness.

SATURDAY

Luke 18:31-34. The Bible has a large place in Jesus' plan for our devotional life. It was while he was discoursing on prayer that he began to explain to the disciples the writings of the prophets. Just so in prayer does he make plain the hidden truths, and when we read the word we hear his voice speaking unto us, even as he spoke to them of old. What a blessed privilege.

SUNDAY

Luke 18:35-43. We are all beggars. We have nothing to offer Christ, we have everything to gain from him. Too often we only groan and beg for mercy, but do not make known what it is we wish. One of the greatest lessons we may learn from Bartimaeus is that Jesus wants us to be specific in our requests. It is that he doesn't know our needs, but that he can supply our needs so much better when he has made us know what our needs really are.

An Evening Sunday School Service

A monthly meeting that has helped increase Attendance

By J. E. Harris

a field for Gospel ministry at the most churches in the homes of Sunday scholars whose parents attend. Such scholars usually make contact with the church only through the Sunday school; they never come to congregation. To get such parents under the influence of the Gospel and to get such children to attend church services are all face in our work. And because we may be set a third, prevailing widely in large sections of the United States and Canada, the problem of attendance at the Sunday evening service.

work we have recently adopted a plan, though it is no complete cure, does promise to be one worth-while to be used in dealing with children. On one Sunday evening we are holding a combined Sunday school and the congregation in the church auditorium at the hour of the Sunday evening worship with the purpose of attracting to such a service both Sunday scholars who do not go to church and incidentally we increase the Sunday attendance for that night, and by thus introducing the idea of church on Sunday evening to folk that time in less profitable ways come such into the habit of Sunday worship. Above all we are trying to get a larger number of people to attend a service where they are represented in his saving sufficiency.

that people like to see children in their own—taking part in a service where they have the scholars themselves participate in this special service. The scholars are impressed the fact that the school from the Junior's up to lead the singing for the service every night. The Primary and Beginner's are not brought into the service being too young to join in an evening. But the rest of the school sing hymns to be used on the special two Sundays preceding the service so as not to interfere unduly with the program of the school such singing takes the place of the regular singing in the school on these days. In this we select boys and girls to sing or choir taking the place of the regular choir for our "Church and School" service we call it. This scholars' choir is a special singing of a simple nature in the practice periods held for two Sundays, preceding the set day, the school session and also on the night just before the Sunday.

g folk may participate in other singing. One may read the Scriptures. They may take part in response of Scripture reading. Recently the musical part of our Church Night take the form of a "Fanny Crosby Service," a suggestion gleaned from the columns of the TIMES, and on this occasion one of the older scholars briefly narrated the story of the life of that hymn writer.

The young folk are especially recognized on this Sunday evening by a children's talk not more than ten minutes long. This may be given by the pastor or by some well qualified children's speaker. We have found for this purpose much that is suggestive in chemical experiment talks and object lessons that ran for a time in the columns of the TIMES a year or two ago. This talk does not eliminate the sermon, but requires that it should be shorter than usual.

In addition to strong announcements from the pulpit and the superintendent's platform, we advertise this special service by attractively prepared mimeographed sheets put into the hands of the scholars at the session of the Sunday school on that day of this special service. These convey an announcement to the parents that "Tonight is Church and School Night, at the S—H—Baptist Church." Then there follow details as to the program intended to arouse interest, and an appeal such as "Come to Church with the Young Folk Tonight," or, "If you appreciate the work we are doing for your boys and girls, show it by turning off the radio and turning out to church with them tonight." Such an announcement, reinforced by a personal appeal from the children themselves, is effective in bringing to church that night a good number who do not usually come.

Throughout we keep three things in mind as essential to success. They are simplicity, variety, and spirituality.

Simplicity is necessary because we could not prepare anything elaborate every month without unduly interfering with the regular work of the school and undertaking something that would eventually prove too burdensome to maintain as a permanent monthly feature. Moreover we are not aiming at the spectacular, but at a simple presentation of Gospel truth. Then, too, the presence of children who are to be interested throughout the entire service requires that simplicity be a keynote in everything.

Variety is essential to maintain interest. Coming as often as once a month such a service as this would soon lose its novelty, and sameness about the program from time to time would mean that the special interest would be lost. We therefore are constantly alert for new ideas that we may use so as to keep the spice of variety at work. We find that THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES often yields suggestions that we can carry out or can adapt to our own purposes.

As to spirituality, that we esteem the supreme essential. Remembering that the flesh profiteth nothing, and aware that such special programs often afford an outlet for merely fleshly energy and enthusiasm, we are careful to bring much prayer to bear upon this feature of our work, seeking the guidance of God in all our planning and the sanctifying presence of his Spirit in the execution of the programs adopted from month to month. We are careful not to let the need of variety entice us into using devices or attractions that the Holy Spirit of God would not sanction. We seek in all things to give to our Lord the pre-eminence, and trust in the drawing power of the uplifted Christ as the ultimate means of realizing the spiritual blessing we crave for people through this service.—The Sunday School Times.

Paul in Rome

Scripture Reading—Acts 25:1-12; 28:16-30.

Printed Text—Acts 28:16-24, 30, 31.

Devotional Reading—Isa. 2:2-4.

Golden Text—I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me.—Phil. 4:13.

Introductory Note

"From Jerusalem to Rome," expresses in a word the movement of the Book of Acts, particularly the last eight chapters. As soon as the gospel was forced beyond the limits of Jerusalem, its further progress was largely entrusted to the Apostle Paul. Through his labors the good tidings were carried into many lands. His bold and intrepid spirit was always pressing forward to the "regions beyond." 2 Cor. 10:16. In the purpose of God Paul "must witness at Rome," 23:11. The persecution of the Jews and the unjust trial of the apostle before Felix and Festus were the human means for accomplishing this Divine purpose. Thus God made "the wrath of man to praise him." Ps. 76:10. It was fitting that the apostle to the Gentiles should carry the gospel to the centre of the Gentile world. 28:30, 31.—Pardington.

Paul's Roman citizenship and his appeal to Caesar made it inevitable that he should be sent to Rome. After a short interval (possibly three weeks) spent in preparing for the journey, and in waiting for the ship, Paul, with other prisoners began the voyage to Italy, under military guard. The first part of the voyage was pleasant, but about the middle of October, when sailing near Crete, they were overtaken by a hurricane.

After long tossing on the angry waters driven they knew not where they finally ran aground in a bay on the island of Malta (Melita) where there was a sandy beach to which the passengers swam or floated on pieces of board. During this time Paul was a tower of strength, through his faith in God.

The Prisoner in Rome

Marco Polo was a prisoner when he wrote his famous book. Sir Walter Raleigh turned the weary hours of a dweller in the Tower of London to the happy hours of a busy writer. The prisoners of the world have spoken to the world's mind; they have reached the world's heart; and sometimes they have mastered the world's will. Among the great prisoners of the world Paul occupies a very high place. He had a keen eye for strategic places, and Rome was the most strategic spot in all the world. He was most eager to bring the imperial faith to the imperial city. But it seemed incongruous enough that the religion which was mightier than the Caesars came to the city on the Tiber in the mind and heart of a man in chains. It has proved true over and over that chains have been upon the wrists of the real rulers of the world. Samuel Crothers once set out to show that Rome was the contemporary of more significant events than any other city of the world. But at no moment in its long life had anything more far-reaching occurred than at the moment Paul the prisoner entered its gates.—Church School Journal.

Paul's Work During These Two Years

He received all that came unto him. The fact that they must come to him, because he could not go to them, created a sifting process, through which only the earnest and serious inquirers would come to him, and no time or strength was wasted. Paul preached to the soldiers to whom he was chained. Tradition says that the great statesman, Seneca, was among the converts to Christianity by the preaching of Paul. He wrote four Epistles during these years. Doubtless Acts was completed at this time.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

C. D. WHITNER, EDITOR

SOME SUGGESTIONS FROM THE NATIONAL PRESIDENT

Endeavorers:

This brief message will be of interest especially to the Indiana Endeavor societies. Our Publicity Superintendent, Brother C. D. Whitmer of South Bend, Indiana, has been elected by our district conference to be the Young People's Secretary for this conference year. The amount of service he may be able to give will depend much upon how you desire to use him. Brother Whitmer has a fine following and the loyal support of his young people in his church at Brighton. He is ready to visit any Christian Endeavor society within reasonable distance and give inspiration and help to the work. Societies will do well to plan a social meeting during the week, soon, and invite Brother Whitmer to bring a message for part of the evening's activities.

November and December

This is the time for a Loyalty campaign in your society. Start it now and allow it to go over into the next month. You might observe Armistice Day in some measure. Plan to ship a mission box or bag to Krypton, Kentucky. Then with these efforts, have plans in the shaping for December as Stewardship month. Study the subject. Have an address bearing on the topic. Make plans for real Christmas giving. Sing Christmas Carols. Hold a Watch-night party and prayer service New Year's Eve. These are a few suggestions. The program of Christian Endeavor is flexible, so you may add others to fit your own needs.

Finally, for this time, remember that Christian Endeavor week is just around the corner, and you will want to be ready with a program that will challenge your community and church.

Revivals and Missions

Christ's last and great command was to "GO teach all nations." His followers are his ambassadors to bring the glad tidings of salvation and reconciliation to God.

Beginning at Jerusalem—"HOME"—there are thousands in our homeland who have not heard of this blood-bought salvation. Millions have only heard it in a modernistic social gospel way. This is partly due to the German philosophy teaching of higher destructive criticisms, evolution, "devil-ution," agnostics, leading them to think they were "Supermen," which resulted in imagining they could conquer the world.

God thought differently. The Defender published an article by Col. Moses Greenwood of Montclair, New Jersey, "Modern Miracles," or, God's Hand in the World War." I will quote from the third one of these seven mentioned. "It was four o'clock on the afternoon of April 22, 1915, that the Germans at Ypres released for the first time their deadly poisonous gas on the allies. It was entirely unexpected, and the allied armies, all unprotected, fell in windrows, entire battalions were piled up like bloated cord wood, and it seemed now that all that Germany had to do was to march through, take the English Channel and the world was hers. Why didn't she do it? And why was this particular time selected to release the gas? It was not the military, but the meteorological authorities that fixed the hours for the gas attack, and Dr. Schmaus, the head of the meteorological department, advised the German general in charge that the direction of the winds was fixed and settled for thirty-six hours to come, and that these winds would surely carry the gas far over the allied lines, but suddenly and without warning the wind whirled and flung those poison gases back over the German army, and that army, gasping, strangling, staggered by the tens of thousands to its death. Dr. Schmaus, in his official record, said, "In forty years of the meteorological records of the German Government the wind had never acted so peculiarly before," and the doubly strange and striking thing was that wind whirled and changed only in the small area where the gas had been released. In the story of Jonah we read "Jehovah prepared a great wind" (Chapter 1:4), and "He commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind" (Psalm 107:25). "He bringeth the wind out of his treasury." And Germany lost!"

Henry G. Allen, Governor of Kansas, has just returned from a personal visit to Germany. In a Los Angeles Times Editorial he states that the World War has brought Germany into a most miserable condition.

Various schemes such as the dole, all sources of taxations, lowering of wages, etc., have proved impracticable. This depression has started a movement to combat the commercial and economic gloom—cursed with the burden of an unmerciful foe. "The movement is distinctly infectious," reports Governor Allen. Its influence is expanding and it is doing an undeniable good in lightening the darkness of Germany's depression." Already the churches are sending religious revivals to spread the word of spiritual regeneration and many thousands are seriously considering it.

During and after this war millions in this country became millionaires. Everybody was pleasure mad, living in luxury and luxuries. This has brought the condition we are in today; for God and the Faith of our Fathers, doing away with all kinds of crimes, resulting in depression; for which our country, Germany, is trying to find an economic remedy.

There is but one real remedy—BACK TO GOD." The signs of the times according to God's word are that Christ soon come for his Bride. Many people are praying for a world wide revival before he comes.

If in God's plan such a revival is then the Brethren Church, believing the fundamentals, obedient to all commandments and church ordinances, a real responsibility. With this faith we have something for which to proclaim to a lost world. To help in this revival.

Let every pastor and every member be much in prayer for a real true revival spirit. At this Thanksgiving offering Home Missions let every one give as much as possible, as if it were to place the Lord's hand. If the Lord has blessed the body with some money to spare, these times would please the Lord and receive rich reward.

Our Home Mission Offering should be large or larger than the Foreign Offering. If we could get the true mission spirit in our home churches, we could expand our missions by building new churches, tabernacles, leading to building regular buildings later. (Sinners prefer tabernacles rather than church buildings.) New churches full of life and active members inspire some of the older churches. Men, catch the spirit and join in the mission. The home churches full of the loving, missionary spirit would double, triple our Foreign Offering, and help to support more missionaries. Even in the Brethren denomination should have a revival this year. Let pastors pray about, and if such changes cannot be made let the pastor hold his own revival. Members should back their pastors to the best of their abilities. All pastors should be evangelists but they can "PREACH THE WORD," praying for the power of the Holy Ghost for conviction and conversion. The salvation of precious, blood-bought souls, that this may be the greatest year in our history.

In these depressing times, "Men are failing them for fear, and fearfulness after those things which are coming upon the earth" (Luke 21:26).

Statesmen and leaders in every land are in perplexity, not knowing what to do, nor what to look for. This is a portentous time to use the gospel!

The Third church is keeping herself from union with the world. God's Word is strong for separation—the Devil is strong for union. There is good food for serious thinking here.

bers who are not afraid to sacrifice for the Lord. We must have such people for the Third church of Philadelphia is carrying a burden few other churches are carrying. It is necessary to average about eighty dollars weekly to meet current expenses. The sac- rificing members, together with the splen- did help from the Home Mission Board, makes this possible.

During the past year over forty came into the church, the majority accepting Christ for the first time. We had a new organ in- stalled. This was made possible mainly by contributions from organizations and outside friends of the church.

The Pennsylvania State Conference met at the Third church this year, and many were the words of commendation concerning the neat, attractive building and its hustling members.

This work stands as a monument to what your dollars, given to Home Missions, can accomplish. We thank the Mission Board for her support and appreciate the hearty cooperation of the brotherhood for loyalty, and trust this year, in spite of all existing conditions, we will give God a chance and make our Thanksgiving offering the best in the history of the Brethren Church.

Brethren pray for us.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Things have been going here as usual. The enrollment now in both the Saturday and regular courses is stationary, 86 for the Saturday courses and 304 for the College. Both show a slight gain over any former year.

The Fall Bulletin is now on the press and ought to reach the readers soon. If you do not receive a copy and desire one, write to the College.

The College recently defeated Akron University on their own field, 13 to 6.

The College has planned a short Lyceum course for the early winter, consisting of three numbers,—vocal, piano, and violin. The first number was satisfactorily given by Princess Tsianina, an American Indian princess. There is no other lyceum course in the city.

Dr. Bell is now on his way to Washington state where he will hold meetings, return- ing about the holidays.

Homecoming is to be held on Saturday, November 14, the last game of the season, when we play Muskingum, so far an unde- feated Ohio college.

Rev. Freeman Ankrum recently repre- sented the College at the inauguration of the new president at Taylor University, Up- land, Indiana. He speaks very well of the exercises.

Professor Mason likewise was present at the inauguration at Defiance (Ohio) Col- lege.

The College recently heard a very able address on prohibition by a Collegiate Pro- hibition Association speaker.

Results of the Ashland-Baldwin-Wallace game last Saturday are Ashland, 0; Baldwin-Wallace, 26. The game was played at Berea, Ohio.

RAYSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

November the first I closed a two weeks' meeting with my Bible Chart Lectures with Brother E. S. Flora and his people at Rays- town, Pennsylvania. It was exactly one year ago that I boarded the train for Wash- ington to hold a meeting with Brother Flora at Spokane.

The circuit, of which Raystown is a part, has been without a pastor and since both pastor and evangelist were strangers, it was somewhat of a handicap. But almost every home in the entire community was visited and we were rewarded with good crowds.

My headquarters was with Brother and Sister Clawson where every kindness was shown me. The Lord will reward them.

Probably nothing will stir up the wrath of Satan more than a straight gospel ser- mon on his person and work. I have often heard of his efforts to frustrate such a ser- mon and I have had a terrible electric storm to put out the lights and put a stop to the service. It seems that Satan is not only the prince of the power of the air but of the creatures of the air also. I do not mind a little snapping of the lightning and crashing of thunder, but to bring a wasp right over and drop it down the back of my neck was indeed too much for me and the message was halted until the intruder could be re- moved.

We were glad for the delegates and vis- itors from other places. Several times peo- ple drove over from Martinsburg, Yellow Creek and New Enterprise, also a quartet came from Altoona.

The last Sunday afternoon a large crowd gathered to "Measure Noah's Ark." Certainly no young person need be ashamed if he knows his Bible for not only are the Old Testament accounts true but reasonable as well. And when godless professors give a curl of the lip at these things, no Christian young person need fear, for heaven and earth will pass away but not one jot or tittle of that Book will fail. School professors may laugh but the last laugh is on them, for it is written that "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." What terrible words; what exhaustion of grace; what exhaustion of infinite mercy, when he who has long loved the world, turns to laugh at man's feeble efforts to defy him.

A baptismal service followed the afternoon service. May the Lord mightily bless both pastor and people as they labor together in this part of God's vineyard.

R. I. HUMBERD.

THE DELAWARE WORK

It has been a long time since I have written anything for the Evangelist. On account of Mrs. Bowman's sickness I have been so tied down that I have been compelled to neglect church work. She was in the hospital seven and one half weeks and had two severe operations. She is now in Sergeantsville with my son Milton, who is preaching there, and is gradually recovering.

I have spent a week in Delaware and have taken three into the church, two by baptism and one by relation. We had communion service here in my church on October 26th. I am now preaching only half time, as I no longer preach for the U. P. church in South Philadelphia. When I began there I had expected to preach only three months, but they kept me three years and three months, I having closed my work there October first.

I would be glad to have calls for Bible lectures, Prophetic or Higher Life conferences, or revival meetings. I have been holding meetings in other churches, but would rather hold them in our own. I am physically as able as I ever was to preach, and I have constantly kept up my research work, Bible study and sermon preparation. Since wife is rapidly recovering and I am preaching only half time, I am better prepared to be away from home than I have been for years.

While some of our institutions have been more thoroughly established, I have been greatly grieved at the failure to enlarge the number of churches in the homeland. Our foreign fields have been doing remarkably well, and we should enlarge their fields, but unless the home base is increased our seminary will prepare men for other churches and our foreign work will suffer for want of funds. I think I could name twenty-five churches that ought, without any mission board help, immediately establish twenty-five mission churches, that in a few years would be self-supporting and make fields for new pastors and supply new funds for foreign missions. Without any mission board aid, but with the aid of my own churches, I have built more than a dozen church buildings, most of which provide pulpits for self-supporting pastors today. Most of my time and money for forty years has been given to initiative work. I am now too old and poor to continue it much longer. It is often a thankless job. But I believe if I had my forty-eight years to live over and could see the situation as I now see it, I could profit by my failures and do a far greater work.

May the Lord give many of our pastors the wisdom and vision to see these open doors and enter them. The increased ecclesiasticism designed to avoid mistakes in enlarging the field is a hundred times greater mistake than the Gospel liberty to enlarge it, even with its few glaring mistakes. That is the humble opinion of the writer.

I. D. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

Our work at Linwood is moving along very nicely. Our other report closed just before our Daily Vacation Bible school began. Our school was manned with ten teachers and the interest and attendance never lagged from the start to the finish. Our closing exercise was largely attended and very instructive. After hearing the closing exercise the people better understand that the Vacation Bible School stands for Fundamental Bible teaching.

Our Harvest Home services were very good and the fruit, grain, vegetable and flower display was better than usual and the fine part of it was that the pastor and his wife were very generously donated the entire display. It was surely a much appreciated gift.

Our Homecoming program was of a varied nature. Brother Benshoff of Waynesboro brought us a much appreciated message in the morning and the other addresses were of a varied nature and added much to the pleasure of the occasion. The music was a strong feature. We had a number of quartettes and other music. The attendance was very large.

Our next feature of interest was a week's meeting preparatory to our communion. I do not think I ever held a meeting that was better attended and the spirit was very fine. There were two additions to the church by baptism. Brother Kent of Washington, D. C. and a band of loyal followers, contributed much to the meeting. Brother Kent brought us a splendid sermon and his workers furnished the music for the evening. Brother Floyd Hartman sang, "The Stranger of Galilee" as a solo. He rendered this selection in a very pleasing way and we will be glad to welcome them all back again. Brother R. Paul Miller will be here later. Pray for us and our work.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

THE FACTS REGARDING RIVERSIDE

Middle aged, and older folks will well remember well the beginning of our work at Lost Creek, Kentucky. That it was begun through the initiative of Brother George Drushal and his wife, who had become interested in that section of country, through attending a Student Volunteer Convention. Soon the Endeavorers of the Church took over the work, but their committee was unable to carry on the work as they believed it should be carried on, and subsequently turned it over to the National Home Mission Board.

From the beginning it was the unanimous aim of the Board to confine its efforts at Riverside to evangelistic work, with a view to establishing Christian Sunday schools and small congregations of believers throughout the Kentucky mountains to be cared for by visiting itinerant missionaries. However, from the beginning Mr. Drushal and that successful evangelistic work could be done apart from an educational program. On this point there has been a difference of purpose between the Board and the management of Riverside.

After a few years of disharmony the Board appointed a Kentucky committee deal especially with the situation here, bringing about a happy solution of differences. This committee over a period of years made frequent journeys to Riverside, remaining there for days at a time endeavoring to bring about these changes. Members of this committee finally decided to serve longer and that effort was done. Subsequently there were no more visits by members of the Executive Committee to this field. These also failed in their monious arrangement of things.

Year after year the Superintendent of Riverside and other workers from frequently supplemented by group visits from the district, met with them in its annual sessions, but these efforts proved unfruitful of bringing about monious purpose in the Riverside work. In the meantime the Institute was the major portion of all Home funds.

The Mission Board noting the many efforts and opportunities to new self-supporting churches due to the fact of insufficient support caused large withdrawals of funds for the national mission work at Riverside, noting the failure of educational efforts to establish any permanent Brethren constituency in the Kentucky district, lose all hope of obtaining harmony in Riverside work. Steps were taken to curtail expenditures there. Immediately on the field began appealing to individual churches throughout the Board to withhold funds from the Board and direct to Riverside aiming to frustrate all purposes of the Board to control the nature of the work being done at Riverside. Some success was attained as a few churches and individuals withdrew. However, it soon became apparent that efforts at curtailment were being frustrated.

Furthermore, representations were made to the Board by workers on the field as by the Board of Education of the State of Kentucky, that the present building curriculum and faculty must be brought to standard. This meant the expenditure of many thousands of dollars for buildings and equipment, and increase of higher scholastic rating, and requirements in order to standardize the school as a recognized educational institution. Facing these demands along with the realization that the meeting of the Board would completely demolish the growth of the mission work entirely and thus doom all hope of ever building up a Brethren Church in America, the Board, after much prayer, and after all these careful consideration and effort, decided to faithful stewards before God, and to the entire brotherhood, to discontinue all educational mission work at Riverside. It was first planned to have Drushal as Superintendent of the evangelistic program. However, his sympathy throughout the years for mission work apart from educational reiteration of that same attitude present, made it impossible to carry out in the future plans the Board had in mind. The Board appreciates fully of service given by the workers on the field and would not seek to minimize the least, but the above fundamental facts are so vital as to preclude any further considerations.

Desiring to be as careful as possible, even though he disagreed, we have offered to him another plan that would have been more reasonable.

many of the same features of his work. This offer was quickly rep-resently without consideration, and

At the immediate present the workers on the field have utterly refused to abide by the action of the Board, or by the decision of the National Conference of the Brethren Church, and are at present trying to operate the Institute in defiance of the Brethren Church. This attitude on the part of those on the field is but an exhibition of the real attitude with which they have greeted the Board in its work for twenty years. The work which is now being attempted in our buildings at Riverside is wholly unauthorized by the Brethren denomination and is not responsible for anything that may be done. The entire spirit in which the present activities are being carried on is antagonistic and bitter toward the Brethren Church. Therefore, any who give direct to any worker who is engaged in this effort to frustrate the plans of our National Conference for that work, are aiding an irresponsible and un-Brethren work.

The question has been asked—"Why then does not the Brethren Church sell the Institute to the workers on the field to operate at their own responsibility?"

First of all, this was considered by the Committee appointed by National Conference and rejected for the following reasons:

The property belongs to the members of the Brethren Church and cannot be sold without their sanction.

Again—no offer worthy of consideration has been made that could be submitted to the Church.

Further, the Home Mission Board still feels that this section has yet to be evangelized, recent developments having proven this to be true.

The Board has funds on hand designated for the establishment of an orphanage department at Riverside, which can be used for no other purpose. All Christian workers acquainted with Kentucky conditions agree that orphanage work is greatly needed there and is the most constructive type of permanent Christian work possible.

Again—it is the aim of the Board to use its buildings in the training of native Christian workers that they may return to their home localities and aid in building up Christian congregations and communities, which thing has never been accomplished by the former high school work.

It was furthermore realized that to deliver the Institute into the hands of the former management would have resulted in further exploitations of the membership of the Brethren Church for funds to continue the work, the giving of such funds would thereby weaken the support of every other Brethren institution.

It was further realized that with all of the information published possible, that still many innocent laymen, not realizing the facts of the case, would be drawn into the situation and unwittingly hurt the very cause they desired to strengthen.

The Home Mission Board appeals to every loyal Brethren to stand by those who have been chosen by National Conference to care for its Home Mission work, and who are responsible to render an account for their stewardship. This coming Thanksgiving offering, if it fails, could destroy the future of the Brethren Church for many years, and perhaps permanently. The Home Board was never doing so much to build up the Brethren Church in America as it now is. It has been faced with unpleasant tasks but which were necessary to progress, and these have been courageously dealt with, and we appeal to the Church to whom we are responsible to stand by us in this critical hour.

R. PAUL MILLER,

Sunday School Notes

It would be intensely interesting if we had a dairy of Paul's doings in Rome during those two years. However, we only get hints that show us that although a prisoner he was busy about his Master's business. From the epistles we learn that while in Rome he wrote to the Philippians, to the Ephesians, to the Colossians, and to Philemon. We also learn that at various times he had the companionship of Luke, Aristarchus, Timothy, Tychicus, Epaphroditus, and Mark.

The remarkable thing about these two years of Paul's life was the way in which he overcame all obstacles, and by his very chains preached the gospel of Christ. He was chained to a soldier all the time; but different soldiers took their turn at guarding the prisoner, until from Paul's own witness we learn that gradually he became acquainted with a very large number of the imperial body-guard.

In this way he reached the very heart of Rome, and the gospel of the lowly Nazarene became a power in the palace of the Cesars.

Besides this Paul made his home a gathering place of all who wanted to learn about Christ, and boldly and with all confidence preached the kingdom of God.

There are many people today who bitterly complain, "I haven't half a chance. I never did have one." They allow circumstances to master them. They lie back and find fault with their "hard luck" when the slightest difficulty looms up on the horizon. It is a pity that such people couldn't be introduced to that little man in Rome as he sits there chained to a soldier. He had grit and grace enough not to be chained by circumstances, but to turn his chains into daily opportunities.—Illustrated Quarterly.

"With All Boldness, None Forbidding"

"This is the very language that Paul himself uses in a letter of the Roman imprisonment (Phil. 1:20; compare Eph. 6:19). The boldness shone the more brightly because he was confined as a prisoner and because his life was in peril. This is the final view which Luke gives us. The close of the Book would be abrupt and unsatisfactory had the author's aim been to write a biography of Paul, but it was not. He was concerned with the triumphant expansion of the Christian religion, and therefore might appropriately conclude his volume with the apostle's unhindered and fruitful labor in the metropolis of the world."—Prof. George H. Gilbert.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SINGING EVANGELISTS

For help in your revival meeting, call on Mr. and Mrs. Glenn E. Wagoner, singing evangelists and musicians. We work for offerings.

G. EARL WAGONER, Upland, Indiana.

SIDNEY, INDIANA

The Brethren of Sidney, Indiana, will hold their fall communion services on Monday evening, November 16. Neighboring Brethren are cordially invited to share in the blessings.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

The Carleton Brethren church will hold their fall communion service on Friday evening, November 20th. All brethren of like faith are invited to be with us and enjoy this holy occasion.

W. R. DEETER, Minister.

Why Should We Have The Largest Thanksgiving Offering This Year?

BECAUSE Strong, self-supporting churches from east to west stand now as a testimony of what past offerings have made possible.

BECAUSE this time of depression has thrust more responsibilities on us than ever. More established churches have faced dissolution without help.

BECAUSE in the midst of this time of depression God has set before us the greatest opportunities ever granted the Brethren Church.

BECAUSE the failure of our present Home Mission program would cause the loss of much we have gained and take years to regain, if ever.

BECAUSE the successful future of the entire Brethren denomination rests upon the success of our Home Mission program. If Home Missions fail, nothing Brethren will long endure.

BECAUSE today is the church's peculiar hour of opportunity. Men are reachable for Christ now as not in years before. If the Church curtails now she will have lost her golden opportunity.

THE HOME MISSION BOARD IS AWAKE AND READY FOR THIS HOUR

EVERYTHING IN HOME MISSION DEPENDS UPON A LARGER THANKSGIVING OFFERING

and

There is none other but the Brethren Church to give it.

A Psalm for Thanksgiving Day

By Henry Van Dyke

O thou whose boundless love bestows
The joy of life, the hope of heaven:
Thou whose unchartered mercy flows
O'er all the blessings thou hast given;
Thou by whose light alone we see;
Thou by whose truth our souls set free.
Are made imperishably strong;
Hear thou the solemn music of our song.

O God, make of us what thou wilt;
Guide thou the labor of our hand:
Let all our work be surely built
As thou, the architect, has planned;
But whatsoever thy power shalt make
Of these frail lives, do not forsake Thy dwelling. Let thy presence rest Forever in the Temple of our breast.

Which Sunday School Helps?

By Dr. Charles A. Bame

I believe that it is entirely possible for any Brethren Sunday school to be organized and well taught using only Brethren Sunday school literature. It has taken me a good while to come to that bold statement, but I am now ready to make it and defend it. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," and remembering that I have refrained from making the above statement until I was quite sure of myself. Just one qualification is necessary; we do not make literature for children below the age of six years.

Brethren Sunday School Literature has been my business now, for a whole year. Writing, correcting copy, recasting, studying, attending the National Council of the Editors of Sunday School Literature, consulting with my brethren, I have gone into this matter with more than forty years of Sunday school experience. I have reached a conclusion and am ready to defend it: Brethren Sunday schools should use Brethren products, not only for Loyalty reasons, but because it is good and available.

Four courses are offered and that is quite enough if the teachers will study and adapt these courses to their pupils. The four courses are: Group Graded Primary for ages, 6, 7, 8; called "Primary Bible Stories." Group Graded Junior for ages, 9, 10, 11; called, "Boys' and Girls' Quarterly." Improved Uniform for ages, 12-18; called "Youths' Quarterly." Improved Uniform for Adults; called, "Bible Class Quarterly" and "Home Department Quarterly" and—the help for all of them,—“The Brethren Teacher.”

Most of our schools are not large. Most of them can better be organized under this arrangement than any other. In a pamphlet issued in 1929, by the M. E. Sunday School Board South, on page 11 they say this:

"A large majority of the Sunday schools in our denomination are comparatively small, having an average enrollment of less than one hundred. Such schools do not have enough pupils to justify classes graded by single years. . . . When the Closely Graded Lessons were issued, many of the smaller schools tried to use them. However, these courses called for such a multiplicity of classes and such a large number of teachers that they were found largely unsuited for use in the small school." That paragraph applies quite well to our own people, save, perhaps, that a good many of ours have not yet discarded the cumbersome system. It is to recall to our good people what we have and to have them try to use it, that we have instituted this Loyalty Campaign.

Miss Hazel A. Lewis is a well-known Graded Lesson expert and in an article in "The Front Rank," July, 1929, (page 585) under the title, "What Is Back of the New Graded Lesson Courses," says, "During the twenty years that the International Graded Lessons have been in use, the materials have been rewritten at least twice and have had frequent revision. * * * But there comes a time when revision is not sufficient and it is necessary to face the question of changing the entire plan of outline."

Walter S. Athearn, than whom America has no greater authority in Religious Educational matters, says, "The small school is almost completely ignored. A completely graded lesson system unadapted to small schools is pushed upon the small school with a fervent exhortation. ' * * In curricula, in leadership, in supervision and administration the small schools have been neglected."

We are a people of small schools and doubtless we have suffered enough from the attempt to do like the big ones, at the same time giving our youngsters a good deal of teaching that is entirely foreign to a Whole-Gospel people. We pray that our Loyalty Campaign will enlist the attention of people who are really trying to do the best for the young people under their care and tutelage. The responsibility is upon the Superintendents, Teachers and Cabinets.

This is the way it would work out with what we have: Three classes studying the Primary Bible Stories, one, aged six; one aged seven; one, aged eight. Each class studying the same lesson but with different teachers. When the children have been in this department three years they will have completed this course and will be promoted to the Junior Department.

Here will be three more classes, age 9, 10 and 11, studying the same lesson, from the Boys' and Girls' Quarterly, a more advanced course. Each teacher adapting the lesson to the age of the pupil and when they have progressed through this department, they will have had a Junior Course of three years through the Bible, as well written as any you can find anywhere. (I did not write it.)

Then, these classes will have been promoted as they come to the age of 12, to the Senior-Adult to use the Youths' Quarterly as long as they choose, or to use the Brethren Bible Class Quarterly which has received unexpected and unanimous praise from editors, teachers and scholars. That is the system which we offer our schools and challenge them to try out, during this Loyalty Campaign.

Ashland, Ohio.

PLAN TO RAISE $100,000 IN ONE DAY FOR DRY CAUSE BY 1,000,000 PERSONS GIVING 10 CENTS EACH

Three wet millionaires recently gave $100,000 to the leading organization fighting prohibition.

The Drys will meet this selfish, class move to tax liquor and so shift the burden of taxation from their stocks, bonds, and other property to the shoulders of the people. The Drys will raise $100,000 by a truly American, democratic plan.

One Million or more persons favoring the Eighteenth Amendment will be given the opportunity to donate 10 cents each to a national dry fund—and to donate the million dimes (making a total of $100,000) in one day.

A million dimes reaching the National Prohibition Board of Strategy in Washington will throw into sharp relief the reliance of the Wets upon a comparatively few rich citizens who, in this time of economic distress, might find something more neighborly to do with their hundreds of thousands of dollars than giving them to organizations trying to make intoxicating liquors easier to get, and therefore vastly increase poverty and misery, especially for women and children.

The plan in brief is as follows: A million coin-cards with self-addressed envelopes will be distributed throughout the country. Dimes will be inserted in the coin sealed and the cards will be enclosed in envelopes and mailed first-class to Washington.

The uniform national mailing day is Monday, November 30, 1931.

The plan will be decentralized. The distribution of the coin-card will be made from Washington. Instead, cards will be sent in bulk to townies and distributed by special representatives to churches, Sunday school classes, Young People's societies, dance groups, other friendly groups of individuals. Recipients of the cards and envelopes will mail them to Washington on November 30.

The cost of the campaign will be limited to a moderate sum by this decentralized distribution. Coin-cards and envelopes will cost only a fraction of a cent each.

The smallness of such individual contributions will not tax anyone nor conflict with other fund-raising campaigns, public or private. But the total of a million dimes will give initial financing for a vigorous, strictly non-partisan defense of prohibition.

The public will be kept fully informed of the use of this fund.

There are millionaires backing prohibition—many of them. The dimes of the poor will be welcome and have exactly the same rating as the dimes of the working housewife, the farmer, the veteran, the professional person, the business woman, the teacher, and other classifications.

The approval of the campaign by equals and by representatives of national score temperance organizations is a success.

The National Prohibition Board of Strategy has opened headquarters in the Press Building, Washington, D. C. for the campaign and through the 1932 election and election.

Prayer is the peace of our spirit, the peace of our thoughts, the evenness of our collection, the seat of meditation, the peace of our cares, and the calm of our prayer is the issue of a quiet mind. Troubled thoughts, it is the daughter of pride and the sister of meekness. Taylor.

Conditions Attending the First Thanksgiving

are those who think we have very little reason for thanks-his year. And from one standpoint it may seem that they
t. Conditions have not been at all favorable this year, comth other years. In fact, there has been much suffering dship, and there is likely to be much more. A financial on hangs like a pall over the land, and not over ours only, all lands throughout the world, and over other lands more own. People everywhere are hard pressed, and many are as straits. They have no work and no money, little to eat e to wear, and scarcely a hope of keeping the rent paid ouse warm. The rigors of winter are facing us and many repared. Starvation and exposure threaten them. What e under such circumstances have for which to be thankful?
h such conditions widely prevailing, what impetus is there sgiving anywhere, by anybody? Such is the spirit that is o grip us in times like these, and we need to arouse our-nd throw it off. We need to be awakened to the fact that the midst of depression we have much cause for gratitude the giving of thanks to Almighty God. We do not need to rselves to conditions, but we do need to develop or call out sense of appreciation and a greater readiness to recognize ness and mercy of God.

y help us some to refresh our memories concerning the cir-ces that surrounded the first thanksgiving occasion in a and the long list of hardships, disasters and sorrows that e pathway of the Pilgrims before they arrived at the place e and prayer. We are inclined to pour over our own dis-conditions until we come to think things were never so bad and we turn to self-pity and bitterness, losing the note of gratitude out of our lives. We need to turn our attention rials through which others have passed and yet have main-their spiritual poise. History has no more striking example e Plymouth colonists, and a recounting of their experiences interesting and inspiring, as it is timely. Let us begin our struggle in the wilderness.

A. V. Lally says "A peculiar pathos attaches to the landing Pilgrim Fathers. They had hoped to reach their destination to erect needful dwellings but one set-back followed hard e heels of another. Buffeted by storms, their passage even e days had been unusually long and now they were to face ter's cold, without shelter and with but a scanty store of How that description fits the condition of many unfortun-als in this, our day! But consider that "the way of the s lay through the trackless wilderness. No roads ran broad ooth before them. No bridges spanned the on-rushing rivers ling streams. Their paths were the winding Indian trails they knew not where. Had they been anything less than iron mold, the tasks which lay before them could never en accomplished. Under the spur of their great necessity, rude hut intended for general use until they all had houses own, was quickly finished. The entire company was then into nineteen families, the single men being assigned to difhouseholds so as to require as few houses as possible. By e seven dwelling had been raised, there was no need for The close and unhealthy confinement aboard ship, the fare, the awful exposure, the toil—all had its inevitable ence in the physical condition of the little community. They d and died, sometimes at the rate of two or three in a single he hill above the beach became the burial place, the graves evelled and grassed over lest the Indians should discover eakness and their loss. Of the hundred or more that had their all upon the venture, more than half perished misere first winter. By the suffrages of his brethren Bradford osen governor when John Carver succumbed in April. The ever menacing peril of the Indians gave them much cause for concern. . . . The building of the Hill Fort was pushed forward to completion and on its roof, so as to command the approaches to the village on every side, were placed the six cannon that had been brought ashore from the Mayflower.

Through all those early days in which the fate of the little colony hung trembling in the balance, the most vexing problems were in the main economic problems, those that dealt with the stern realities of life, the question of eking out an existence in the face of unkind circumstances and conditions which tested the fibre and tried the souls of men. And in this highly complex age in which we live, it is still true that the economic problems are the most severely testing of all that enter into our modern life. It is at this point that men most quickly and widely give way to disappointment and pessimism and bitterness, or become absorbed in gains and lose the joy of life and the appreciation of God. At this point a vigorous, sustaining, buoyant, happy religion is needed to keep us from slipping into the slough of despond or from drifting into the ways of indifference and ingratitude.

Let us learn a lesson from the Pilgrims. That autumn the settlers gathered their first harvest, being at peace with the Indians and despite their great sorrows, they planned a public rejoicing and a celebration of the goodness of God. They had a three-day feast of thanksgiving, attended by Massasoit and ninety of his braves. It is that first Thanksgiving that we commemorate throughout the length and breadth of the land at this season, and it is that spirit of gratitude to God that we feel it instinctively our duty to express.

The spirit of thanksgiving is not dependent on the amount of goods we possess, or the measure of our prosperity, but upon the quality and genuineness of our religion. Genuine Christianity is charged with the spirit of gratitude. Thanksgiving comes to the lips of the sincere devotee as naturally as the song comes to the mouth of the bird. Every special evidence of God's providence gives occasion for thanksgiving, but it does not create the spirit of thanksgiving; it was there all the while. It will be there when there is no special sign of God's goodness in evidence, because Christ is in the heart and his presence gives joy that is deep and abiding. Even in hard times we can be thankful, and will be, because our life is filled with the spirit of gratitude, even in such times as these when many think there is little or nothing for which to be thankful, we will rejoice and give thanks unto God for his "Unspeakable Gift."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother J. H. Foster, one of our African missionaries, who with his wife is furloughing in America, writes that his address until December first will be 804 Randolph Street, Waterloo, Iowa, c/o
Rev. S. M. Whetstone.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble describes out of her rich medical training and experience the characteristics and progress of the dread disease of leprosy. It is information that not a few have been seeking, for she writes in response to inquiries.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 29th has been set aside as a Day of Prayer for Publications Loyalty Campaign. Pray that God may direct those who make and those who use our publications, that his Kingdom may be advanced. Pray for an increase of Evangelist circulation and a larger use of Brethren literature in our Sunday schools.

Prof. Stuckey is giving Evangelist readers on the Sunday school page an interesting and helpful article from the pen of Brother

Homer A. Kent, pastor of the church at Washington, D. C. Those interested in the "preparation and delivery of the Sunday school lesson" will find profit in the reading of this article.

Some of our readers have been kind enough to tell us that they liked the special Home Mission numbers of The Evangelist, and we want to share the credit with the Home Mission Board and its secretary, Brother R. Paul Miller, whose cooperation made such success possible.

On Brother Whitmer's page the Christian Endeavorers are permitted to share the results of a questionnaire prepared by the pastor of the Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, church, Brother W. H. Schaffer, who, if we are not mistaken, is the head of the Christian Endeavor Union of the Pennsylvania district.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes briefly of her travels among the churches and visits among friends and relatives. Most important naturally, was the meeting with her daughter, Marguerite, who for a number of years has been making her home with Brother and Sister Weed of Sunnyside, Washington. Her many friends throughout the brotherhood will rejoice that she is permitted to spend the winter where she can be much with Marguerite.

An invitation has been received at the Evangelist office to the annual Homecoming Services at Louisville, Ohio, November 22, 1931. A full program and a fellowship dinner have been arranged and former pastors and members are invited to be present or send greetings. Prof. M. A. Stuckey is to be one of the speakers and in the evening Dr. J. C. Beal begins a two weeks' evangelistic campaign.

Brother A. J. Ramey, who has been in business for a number of years in Manassas, Virginia and has been preaching in the mountains, informs us that he has sold his business and is ready to preach the Gospel anywhere in Indiana, Kansas or Colorado and is willing to go into business if opportunity offers and accept whatever the church may be able to give him for his services. Brother Ramey is an Elder and member of the Southeastern district conference.

The church at Highland, Pennsylvania, has had a successful evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, who writes of his impressions of the field and its prospects and commends the sacrificial efforts of the pastor, Brother William Gray. The pastor reports good attendance and interest throughout the meetings. Of the twenty who came forward, twelve confessed Christ for the first time, five made reconsecration of their lives and three came for church membership from other churches.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter in his installment this week under the title, "That Reminds Me," gives in a striking way some reasons for gratitude. Truly we do not realize how great are the blessings vouchsafed unto us by our highly enlightened and God-fearing country. Especially precious is that blessing which guarantees unto us the privilege of assembling freely and without fear of interference for public worship, which is not possible in some lands today.

Brother H. M. Oberholtzer, pastor of the church at Sidney, Indiana, reports the work at that place improving after a summer slump in attendance. A newly organized girls' orchestra is making its contribution to public worship. Rally Day and Homecoming was observed by an all-day program, the special speaker for the afternoon service being Brother A. T. Ronk. Brother and Sister Oberholtzer visited the Campbell church in Michigan, where Brother Oberholtzer preached and conducted communion services.

Send the biggest Thanksgiving offering your devotion will enable you to give, to the Home Mission Secretary, Rev. R. Paul Miller, Berne, Indiana, for the cause is worthy. Make all your contributions to Home Missions through the regular channels of the church. That is the way to make your gifts count for the most for the Kingdom and for church extension. United, we can stand against even the fierce winds of depression; divided, we will fall into ineffectiveness and discouragement.

Limestone, Tennessee, has experienced a real revival under the leadership of Brother William A. Steffler as evangelist and Brother Hill Maconaghy as pastor. The church showed evidence of being revived when over fifty reconsecrated themselves to service for the church during the meetings. And twelve made the good confession. Brother Maconaghy has been doing a good work since charge here, as was evidenced by the readiness of the people to revival.

Brother Floyd Sibert writes of his leaving of Ellet, Ohio, he served his first pastorate and accomplished some splendid results, concerning which we have commented previously. His wife have been warmly received by the fine people of town, Pennsylvania, and at the very outset were given solid proof of their loyalty. In the interim of leaving the one pastorate and entering upon the other, Brother Sibert was engaged in a series of meetings at the Mount Zion church near Logan, Ohio, which is Mrs. Sibert's home church.

From Canton, Ohio, comes a report of progress in the work there under the pastoral leadership of Dr. J. C. Beal. An evangelistic campaign was recently brought to a close with a largely attended communion service, and nine confessions of faith of whom were received into the church. Encouragement in Bible reading was given by a record keeping during the campaign and so general was the interest created thereby that a total of 75,000 Bible verses were recorded as having been read. The Mount Zion church is sharing its pastor's valued services with the churches at Louisville.

Brother Robert D. Crees, who took charge of the West Kittanning and Brush Valley churches in Pennsylvania about six months ago, writes of splendid progress in those fields. Two revivals conducted by the pastor resulted in twenty-eight confessions and thirteen baptisms and received into the church at West Kittanning sixteen confessions and fourteen baptisms and received into the church at Brush Valley. A splendid program of instruction, under the name of a "Bible Institute", is being conducted by the pastor. Various auxiliaries are functioning well. The pastor is present at two outlying points, in addition to the two churches in charge.

From Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, where Brother W. C. Beal is the much loved pastor, comes a report of progress, one of the evidences of which has been increasing the Sunday school attendance, averaging 215 for the year as compared with 1930. A largely attended communion service, started on the evangelistic campaign in a fine spirit. The pastor was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer, song leaders. The visible results of the campaign were ten added by baptism, one by letter and one by reconsecration. Three had been added previous to the month of November, two by baptism and one by letter, making a total increase in membership of fifteen during recent months.

Brother Herman Koontz, who left Masontown, Pennsylvania, about two months ago to take up the pastorate at Roanoke, Virginia, pays high compliment to the good people who gave encouragement and cooperation during his first pastorate. They have been wont to do that with the young men who began their ministry with them, as the editor can personally testify, and also Brother Koontz was the kind to prove himself worthy of their confidence and cooperation. He did a good work there and has entered upon the difficult task of his new pastorate with the confidence of his parishioners, but of the brotherhood as well. The financial need of this church is one of the challenges to the pastor in his Mission giving of our people, but the field is said to be waiting for our most generous support.

In the weekly calendar of the First church of Long Beach, California, where Dr. L. S. Bauman is pastor, we noticed a statement by the Sunday school superintendent to the effect that they will come within seven on November 1st, of reaching their "one thousand in the Bible school." And now they are set for those seven who are lacking and are expecting to finish and thus reach their goal before the first of the year. It is a Bible school that is being built up there. And if we understand aright the superintendent's further remarks, it is prayer and by means of which these remarkable results have been achieved. Those are the requisites to success almost anywhere, as churches can testify where God's blessings have been most abundant.

Brother L. G. Wood, the hard working and undiscouraged pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, writes of some things

God's Resources vs. Material Bankruptcy

By William S. Crick

How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God!
Great is the sum of them.
Could count them, they are more in number than the sand!
Ps. 139:17, 18.

These days of crushing economic depression, multitude of folk will be inclined to feel that they have nothing at all to be thankful for at this Thanksgiving Anniversary season.

However, there are certain by-products of adversity in themselves are of great spiritual value. For in-scores of citizens, who during the reign of prosperity were constantly asking: "What lack I yet?" and "What do I want yet?" are now nervously inquiring: "What have I left yet?" And if man's extremity is his opportunity, these are days when many spiritual drifts will humbly take inventory of their sadly depleted capital! May they penitently retrace their steps to Father's house where there is plenty and to spare!
Apostle Paul instructs that we are "to give thanks for all things in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ to God, even the Father" (Eph. 5:20). Destitute as that child of the Heavenly Father, heir to the inheritance of grace in Christ Jesus, who cannot or does not fail in his so great salvation. When Job had his possessions stolen and was violently bereft of his children, he cried, "Though Jehovah slay me, yet will I trust in him" (Job 13:15). With the same resignation the Psalmist cries: "When my father and my mother forsake me, then thou wilt take me up!" (Ps. 27:10). Such is the trust that prevailed in the fire.

Why have we vexed Jehovah by our greed and ingratitude? Having prospered in material things, we have said:
"The power and the might of MINE hand hath gotten me this wealth!" (Dt. 8:17). Our reaction to the Heavenly Father's blessing has been a degree of arrogance amounts to despising God. St. Paul's criticism of the church is applicable to us: "Despisethest thou the word of his goodness, forbearance, and longsuffering—knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" (Rom. 2:4).

As to Israel on the border of the Promised Land, the warning words of Moses applicable: "Beware, lest thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly cities, and dwelt therein, and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and that thou hast is multiplied, and thy heart be lifted up, that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments and his judgments and his laws" (Dt. 8:11-14). Was Israel ever more forgetful when she prospered than have been the people of the United States in the last decade? Millions of dollars have been squandered for self, for luxury, for pleasure, and many is the church that has been slighted, robbed—in many cases of the dole which had kept its starved existence. May it not be that these "perishing churches" have entered the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth? (Jas. 5:4).

Amid the ruins of a demolished economic structure, may we "come to ourselves," realizing that "Riches do not make for themselves wings" (Prov. 23:5), that "trusteth in riches shall fall" (Prov. 11:28), and that "man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Lk. 12:15), and "start not again" to honor Jehovah with our substance. If we have learned our lesson, the depression may happily be the means of restraining us from losing our spiritual inheritance through worshipping at the altars of Mammon!

But, whether we have learned our lesson or not,
Thanksgiving, 1931, finds us in the throes of adversity.
What indeed, have we to be thankful for? Throughout the land economic demolition has swept, leaving in its wake unsecured bank deposits, deflated stocks, diminishing dividends, slashed wages and salaries, depreciating inventories, unmarketable crops and produce, unemployment, lapsed insurance, foreclosed mortgages, repossessed chattels, and mounting and unpaid taxes.

Evidently the Psalmist was recovering from some calamity when he uttered the words of our text:

How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God!
How great is the sum of them—
If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand!

In the Psalm which embodies these words, the writer is contemplating the power and wisdom of God, and seeking to appreciate just how much God's resources enrich him.
In the 103rd Psalm we find the universal answer to the question, "For what shall I be thankful?" There the writer, as it were, sets us a spiritual balance sheet, listing the vast resources and assets of God which are available for the use of his children.

In this statement he shows that our greatest wealth lies not in what we possess, but in Whom and what God is—that no matter how insolvent we may be in material assets, to have and know such a Security as the Heavenly Father eclipses all else. Let come what may, he seems to imply, as long as I have God, nothing else matters! In beginning the list of attributes of God, which he does with the precision and comprehension of a theologian, the Psalmist exclaims

Bless Jehovah, O my soul—
And all that is within me,
Bless his holy Name,
And forget not all his benefits!

Let us check over this statement of the Infinite assets as they are inventoried in the Psalm.

The first asset which impresses the Psalmist in the face of his own moral insolvency, is God's forgiveness. The debt he owes is paid by the riches of grace the moment he acknowledges them. How bankrupt indeed would we all be were it not that our debt has been cancelled! Hence the Psalmist utters for us that first precious thought of God:

Who forgiveth all thine iniquities,
Who healeth all thy diseases,
Who redeemeth thy life from destruction!

Many who are feeling the pinch of poverty, can derive little consolation from contemplating the possible fact that the present need is the inevitable result of their own lack of thrift, economy, and industry. Like the fabled grasshopper, they danced throughout the summer of prosperity, and the chill of winter finds them destitute, depending upon the scanty charity of the more "fortunate."
But not so with the spiritual poverty of the child of God.
The Heavenly Father's bounty liquidates all liabilities, so that the second precious thought the Psalmist has of God is that he is one

Who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies,
Who satisfieth thy desire with good things,
So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle!

When one is disheartened in searching for the Truth and the Absolute among the near-worthless securities of human speculations and cogitations—when men are “fainting for fear and for expectation of the things which are coming upon the world (Lk. 21:26), we hear the Psalmist’s third “precious thought of God,” when he says:

He made known his ways unto Moses,
His doings unto the children of Israel!

God has spoken! No more need his child wander in darkness and dread. More sublime and precious than his words to Israel are the words of his Incarnate Son, Who said: “I am the light of the world, he that followeth me he shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life” (John 8:12). “I am come a light into the world, that whoever believeth on me may not abide in darkness” (John 12:46). “If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know the teaching” (John 7:17), and “If ye abide in my Word, ye shall know the truth . . . and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:32).

Human sympathy and understanding are rare indeed, and from the Psalmist comes the fourth “precious thought of God,” when the world is unfair and harsh in its criticisms, when boon companions prove untrue or understand not our “fightings and fears within, without”:

Like as a father pitieth his children,
So Jehovah pitieth them that fear him,
For he knoweth our frame—
He remembereth that we are dust!

Then, when the career we so eagerly dreamed of fails of realization, when the goals we hoped to reach lie still far ahead, when health declines, and we are almost ready to conclude that all youth’s dreams were vain, and life’s rewards but empty baubles, comes the fifth “precious thought of God,”

As for man, his days are as grass,
As the flower of the field, so he flourisheth, (yet)
The lovingkindness of Jehovah is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him,
And his righteousness unto children’s children—
To such as keep his covenant,
And to those that remember his precepts to do them!

By obedience to the will of God, participating in his righteousness in Jesus Christ, his unsearchable riches of Eternal Life may be credited to the deficit of our frail and peccable humanity, and make our account show a credit balance of “life more abundant”!

My friend, has not the true child of God, born from above into the family of the Heavenly Father—joint-heir with Jesus Christ—abundant ground for thanksgiving? A life with such spiritual resources as the Psalmist portrays, is a blessed and happy, and rejoicing and thankful life no matter how vast may be the material liabilities lodged against him.

A tent or a cottage, why should I care?
They’re building a palace for me other there—
Though exiled from home, yet still I may sing,
All glory to God—I’m the child of a King!

Jehovah hath established his throne in the heavens,
And his kingdom ruleth over all—Bless Jehovah, O my soul!

Fremont, Ohio.

Those who are consecrated have given their own wills into the keeping of God’s will. Such a soul is resigned in all things, whether for soul or body, whether for time or eternity, by leaving what is past in oblivion; by leaving what is to come to God’s Providence; and by devoting to God, without any reserve, the present moment.—Mme. Guyon.

Indiana Conference Moderator’s Report Year 1930-31

By W. I. Duker

(Voted by Conference to be published in The Evangelist)

Once again we have reached the place in our activities in which it is proper to listen to a report from the moderator. We wish we might know at this time who it was that started this affair. If we but had the address of our first moderator in our Indiana conference, what interest we might find in it! Will we be discussing the same questions, in the same manner and arriving at the same conclusions? Or has the entire body of our interests changed to such a degree that the address necessarily changed with it? These are interesting matters of conjecture. It is altogether possible that the members in our present conference that can answer these questions from personal observation.

It might be well, first of all, to call attention to the fact that our conference must be true to the desires and needs of the churches herein represented. That is, we must be truly representative. Unless we recognize that the churches have met in conference for the purpose of reviewing our past activities and planning our future conduct, we have no real purpose in it all.

We are conscious at this point that many of us, especially our older Brethren, are rather “touchy” with respect to any mandatory attitude relative to our conference. We recall that one of the issues that gave birth to our loved fraternity its birth was our attitude toward the Conference that limits and controls the action of the church. We remember how a controlling conference cramped the style and spirit of many of us. Our attitude toward that same matter has undoubtedly not changed one whit. However, if we go to the other extreme and regard to this same conference attitude, our error is greater and the harm done infinitely more far-reaching.

What we are attempting to bring before our present conference is just this—Our deliberations and action taken at this conference must seriously affect us upon our return to our local churches. If any action is taken in a matter of conference deliberation, that same action must go back to our local churches as a guide and an example for the year’s action that follows. To look lightly upon conference work upon our return home mitigates the self same action. These remarks are the result of some of our local churches’ attitudes relative to some conference action launched by churches in conference and then null and void upon their return home. May we all take seriously all conference action!

Then, too, something ought to be said relative to our representation at conference. In every local church there will be a certain number of members upon whose shoulders and consecrated shoulders the work of that same church will fall. Often these members are not there sent as delegates. This may result from one cause or another. Those then coming as delegates, upon their return home are not considered seriously in the affairs of the church and as a result no contact between the delegates of the conference and the local church is made. Delegates must be “contact” folks. Their voice must have weight in their local churches or their usefulness as delegates is distinctly below par.

We, as your moderator, have no definite recommendations to offer. What we are observing is not to have dignity or force of recommendations. We do, however, desire to call to mind a few general attitudes that s, or at least influence us, as we go about our this time. First of all, we urge that the "mind Christ Jesus," should be in us. If we have in us "nd" we will work together as one unit. District st not be fragmentary, if it is to produce its good. We must be actuated by one common im- d work at one common task. If our district is number of separate local churches, we are as aid, "Been where we are going." We have no ve in that future produced by common effort at n task.

ck of common effort is the result of many causes. haps it may be caused by what we referred to a ents ago. Our delegates may not be truly repre- . They may not be able to carry back to their rches the desire of the conference. Then again, of common district effort may result from dif- terests that actuate each of us. One church may ission" church. Another may be a "Sunday church. Yet another may be interested primar- work of the Woman's Missionary Society. With terests predominating, each respective local es merrily on its way and the result is, churches ent in their output as though they were churches ent denominations.

again, there are the constant changes in many of regations caused by bringing into our group, min- om other district conferences who have scarcely our district's plans and purposes when they are o leave us, and we lose their assistance and the tion of their developed purposes.

nder whether it might be true that among us at e those who have not caught the vision of coop- who have no desire to assist in a common effort, v their own local desires to actuate them, and do ose to give to the district their best? Surely this ervants are among our smallest number and need ve our attention.

ve in this conference, give serious thought to the that must have our concerted attention. Some s must go to "Jerusalem." Paul and Barnabas ry those questions into conference, which if left ll lead eventually, to a "Jewish Christian" and a "Christian" church. Rather recently when called k room where a man lay dying, we recommended "immersion" baptism. This, of course, emely difficult. After the service, when comment- the difficulty of the baptism so performed for a an, a sister in our church, but from another con- n asked, "Why didn't you 'sprinkle' this brother was so ill?" Not seeing the need in this case to discussion of Brethren baptism, we replied, "Well, l have had no right, had we so desired to sprinkle her or any other brother." "Oh yes, you would," his sister, "when my husband was on his death was sprinkled by Brother — (a Brethren min- a congregation a few miles away) and that was g to Brethren doctrine." What we said in return t become a part of this paper, much less what we but the result of this lack of united effort is een. There are some things upon which we must e we will have another "Tower of Babel." We do a that it is within the province of this conference forms of baptism for the Brethren church (if this s not already settled), but we do mean to say that e matters wholly relevant to this conference that attention.

ght, at this point, call to mind the many National and district officers, whose work falls naturally within our district. What should be our attitude toward these Brethren? Have they the right to expect our assistance and unquestioned cooperation in matters distinctly within their field? Or must they first secure our cooperation through some means of winning our special favor? Must they be burdened with the thought of securing assistance rather than with the matter assigned them by National and district conference? Do we owe them certain allegiance, or have they no claims on us? It occurs to me that our only possible success lies in an understanding along this line.

Thus far in our paper we have been discussing those matters in which we believe improvements can be made. Surely we are here for this purpose, as well as simply those matters in which we may take just pride and offer to ourselves commendation. However, may we pause for a moment to recall that undoubtedly in the largest sense our churches have been doing a splendid work and now may recall with great pleasure that same work.

We would like to first notice the splendid attitudes of brotherly love and Christian spirit that predominates within our district. Surely no district within our mother church has a more splendid atmosphere of kindly feeling for one another than our own beloved district! Our work during the past year has been one of pleasure and delight. Congregations have visited back and forth within reasonable driving distances, assisting one another in their regular services and especially in their revival efforts. Ministers and their families have visited one with the other until we have become one great family. Our young people have gathered around a common table and there enjoyed the fellowship of one another and together have been led to the feet of the Master.

Our responses to the calls made by the district work have been rather marvelous. We may take our district missions as a fair sample of this response. We need not remind you that we are going through a period of economic depression, unless we are to remind you that we are really "going through." Of this we cannot be certain, for the good times are undoubtedly "around the corner," but that terrible corner is quite completely lost. However, the local churches, as a rule, have gone on just the same as when times were good. Many of our churches have figured out to the exact penny their churches' quota at 60c per member and have sent in this same amount. It is quite remarkable that churches have gone ahead just the same in these terrible times as when they were all making much money! Certainly all are not doing this thing, but many are and as a result the district work is "coming through." We believe this comment made relative to the mission work is a representative report of all district work.

May we at this time in our report offer our hopes and happy anticipations relative to the conference now before us. We have come here at no small expense of time and money. It is no longer an easy matter for folks to gather at a common point for a period of days. Many of our delegates have left their businesses and homes at no small sacrifice. We are here for a purpose. We trust that purpose may be a matter of common desire. There is a work to do. Not alone in planning work for the coming year but also in securing a very happy determination to receive that cooperation from our local churches which we represent.

We trust that the delegates feel the burden which justly falls upon their shoulders. After matters have been discussed and then passed by a majority vote, these matters become the work of our district. Whether the local churches get behind this work or not is after all your responsibility. The delegates here assembled now represent the conference as well as their local churches. How you carry back our purposes and secure action relative to the same determines your ability as a delegate.

We have had some experiences in national conferences in which regularly chosen and seated delegates, becoming the minority in some conference action have returned to their homes and then set about to bring this action of their conference in ill favor. We cannot but remark that this action on the part of any delegate is entirely out of order and deserves the rebuke of our church. The time for remarks is during the regular business session of our conference and when our conference has spoken, it is our duty to offer our assistance to bring this work to pass. This suggestion is not a bridle upon our liberty and privileges but simply an intelligent attitude toward order and harmony.

May we now proceed to the tasks which have called us here. We go forth with the Lord as our leader, the Holy Spirit as our Guide. We have definite tasks before us. Trusting that we are under the favor of our Heavenly Father we await his pleasure.

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—We concluded last week the publication of Dr. Yoder's Bible studies, which were an English translation of his book published in Spanish, and we now begin a short series of studies in prophecies, which series will run for a brief period into the new year.)

For a long time many friends in the church have been asking me to write my ideas on the prophecies and I have promised to do so, but have delayed because time has been lacking for the careful preparation that such articles require. The prophecies of the Bible are complex and profound and I should dislike to misinterpret any of them.

However, if preachers wait until they understand all of the Bible before preaching any of it there will be no preaching. The best we can do in prophecy is to present what we believe to be a helpful contribution to the study of the subject and humbly accept from others any light that they may be able to give.

Nevertheless, one of the greatest discouragements to the study of the prophecies is the fact that among the hundreds of books that have been written scarcely any two are entirely agreed, and unless one knows how to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good" he is apt to be confirmed in error by reading only one book, or else be hopelessly confused by reading many.

Indeed there are many, many preachers who excuse themselves from the persevering study which the prophecies require, by lightly concluding that they were written only for the times of the writers, and that therefore each generation must follow its own inspiration. Modernism turns from the inspiration of certain "holy men who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" to the inspiration of all men, and the resulting confusion is a great Babylon.

The rejection of everything miraculous includes, of course, the rejection of all prophecy as a foretelling of future events. Such prophecies, say these "liberal-minded" teachers, were either written after the events took place, or else they are only vague poetic inst like Plato's "Eutopia", and only mean that in general progress of the world is upward and not downward. Therefore, as a preliminary to these studies in the prophecies, let us face the question, Is foreknowledge of future events possible?

The Basis of Prophecy

Unbelievers who reject God because they say there is no place for the interference of a supreme person in the orderly and universal and constant working of the laws of nature, teach that the law of cause and effect governs a sequence of events in an endless chain, each link being the product of those that have gone before and the cause of those that shall come after.

If this be true, then creation is a vast machine, and humanity is a part of that machine. But the very existence of the movements of a machine make possible a prediction of its power and the quantity and character of its output. Eclipses can be predicted with exactness centuries in advance. If humanity is but a mechanism, however complex, of this machine, then a study of its part must reveal the cycles of its movements. In the language of astronomy, its transits and eclipses can be predicted. If the universe is mechanistic then prophecy is not miraculous. Its movements are predetermined and can be foreknown.

Can be foreknown? By what? Can a wheel foretell the destiny of the train? No, but the clock can. Can the plow foretell what kind of grain will be harvested six months hence? No, but the farmer can. The atheist professes to know so much that he needs no God; he thereby professes that he has rejected free will which actually exist along with natural law. It follows that if the law of cause and effect admit of no exceptions, reasonable beings like men, it must also admit of no exceptions to the supreme being, God.

Here the Christian takes his stand. He says, "God can make a machine and predetermine its program, but more can God do so. He therefore believes in a God which testifies of God and his foreknowledge of the future."

1. He sees that mortal man could not create the universe, and therefore believes in him who only by his mortality as the constant power behind the change of the universe (1 Tim. 6:16).

2. He knows that by his limited knowledge he can tell a few things, and therefore believes that God with infinite knowledge as Creator can foretell all things, declaring the end from the beginning, and from times the things that are not yet done, saying, "I and I shall stand and I will do all my pleasure" (Isa. 46:10).

3. The Christian believes that if he, as head of the family, can order the things of his home, much more can God direct the details of creation in harmony. "He calleth them all by names" (Ps. 147:4).

4. Man in his ignorance must learn by experience. God knows the future as well as the past. "Known unto God are all his works from the foundation of the world" (Acts 15:18).

5. God is not only the Creator but also the Redeemer. "Behold I make all things new" (Rev. 21:5). He therefore knows his plans for future worlds as well as the present.

6. While leaving to man a certain measure of freedom so that he may be a responsible being, God has predetermined many things for him. "He hath determined times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation" (Acts 17:26).

7. God is immutable. Therefore his laws are unchangeable.

able and his Word is sure. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall not pass away" (Mk. 13:31). This is the basis for the sure word of prophecy we do well to heed.

THE PRESIDENT NEEDS GOD

In the midst of the excitement over the President's effort to get the plan to get the soldiers' bonus paid in cash and over the Legion's vote for a referendum, a very significant phrase in President Hoover's speech at Detroit has been overlooked. In his hurried address, he said:

"Under the guidance of the almighty God, with the same faith, courage and self-sacrifice with which you backed by the nation, won victory fourteen years ago, so shall we win victory today."

There is something peculiarly impressive and moving about the mention of "the almighty God" in these concluding words of that address. Unless the President is a crass hypocrite, they mean that (1) that human eyes alone can not see a way out of this economic morass; (2) that the guidance of God is needed, and (3) that the guidance of God—"the almighty God"—is available.

President Hoover is a sober-minded engineer, a scientist. Men of this type are not generally supposed to make much of God. But he is also a great humanitarian. It troubles him deeply that his countrymen are in distress, even as it delighted him that prosperity revealed itself best in high standards of living in American homes. He is not the first President who, feeling for the people, has been set by stupendous problems, was, as Lincoln expressed it, "driven to his knees by the conviction that there was no other place for his mother's son of us ought to cry out with delight that the President has such a conviction, and was not afraid to express it in the atmosphere of that Legion convention.

Is it not about time the rest of us got upon our knees with intercessory prayer for the President and all his advisers?—Christian Standard.

THE HEBREW'S THANKSGIVING DAY

"Thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the Lord thy God, which thou shalt contribute of free-will offering in thine hand, which thou shalt offer unto the Lord thy God, according as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee."

"Thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the widow, and the orphan, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to place his name there."

"Thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt; therefore thou shalt observe and do these statutes."

"Thou shalt observe the feast of tabernacles seven days, after thou hast gathered in thy corn and thy wine."

"Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite, and the stranger, and the fatherless and the widow, that are within thy gate."

"Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the Lord thy God in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; because the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy increase, and in all the fruit of thine hands, therefore thou shalt surely rejoice.—Deuteronomy 16:10-15.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Luke 16:19-31. It was tragic, the way Dives, the nameless rich man, was condemned to eternal punishment after a life of luxury and ease. Even more tragic was his thought of lost opportunities, his realization that friends were in the most dreadful danger and that he was powerless to help. There could scarcely be greater torment than that. We ought to pray daily for guidance and grace from God, that he will save us from such a fate, in addition to saving us from our sin. May we never be satisfied with just a "bare salvation" for ourselves!

TUESDAY

Luke 17:1, 2. Only two short verses for today, but so full of meaning! It was a natural step from the story of Dives, in the chapter just closed, to the warning with regard to offenses: what greater offense against ourselves, our fellows, and our God, could we commit, than to have perfect knowledge of the way that leads from death unto life and to neglect telling others about it? Or to see one walking in the way and to place any obstacle whatever before him, even though in so doing we may be well within our own "personal rights?" God keep us free from offenses!

WEDNESDAY

Luke 17:3, 4. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus;" "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors"—if we are to have the mind of Christ, we must forgive every offence which is followed by repentance; if we do not, we dare not pray the Lord's Prayer. Let us pray that all members of the body of Christ may have more of his spirit of loving forgiveness.

THURSDAY

Luke 17:5-10. How we need this lesson! We are so prone to point to the things we have done, or that some one whom we greatly admire has done, and, in effect, boast of the things accomplished for the kingdom. Yet the fact remains that in none of these things have we any right to glory: for they are but the tasks which the Master has ordered his servants to perform, and we would be faithless servants indeed if we did not perform them. But while we may not glory in our deeds, we may glory in the love that has said: "Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends." And if we perform our set tasks with willing love, we know that it will be an acceptable offering in his sight.

FRIDAY

Luke 17:11-19. "That's gratitude!" Every once in a while one hears Christian workers rather mournfully state that if they were working for gratitude they would be poorly paid. It is true enough, for it is all too seldom that we meet any expression of gratitude. But the servant is not greater than his Lord, and our Lord found very little gratitude, even when he had most right to expect it—in this case, one out of ten. We have been afflicted with a disease worse than leprosy, a disease of which leprosy is a fitting type, and One has healed us: let us praise him!

SATURDAY

Luke 17:20, 21. People—some, at least—are still looking for the kingdom of God to come. We believe that this shall some day come to pass in a very literal sense, but that it was not that coming to which Jesus here referred. The kingdom will not be seen developing among men as this nation signs a peace treaty and that one junks a battleship; rather, it will come only as the Spirit of God takes possession of my life, and yours, and everyman's. Let us endeavor to make known his ways unto all the children of men, and so hasten the coming of his kingdom.

SUNDAY

Luke 17:22-30. After defining the nature of the kingdom, in the two preceding verses, Jesus now explains the manner of its coming on earth. All are familiar with the days of Noah: judgment fell upon all the unrighteous, while the righteous were kept safe in the ark of God, to come forth upon a renewed earth and dwell under a new covenant with the God of heaven. Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly!

The Preparation and Delivery of a Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Homer Kent

It has been said that in the teaching of every class somebody must suffer. If the teacher does not suffer before the lesson begins, the scholars will surely suffer during the lesson and afterwards. Teaching means hard work. Real teaching demands the very best there is in any individual. But real teaching will bring results. It will be translated into life. It will mould character. But such teaching will consume much time. It will demand the most earnest attention. Before appearing before any class there must be thorough preparation. How can this preparation be most effectively done? We offer six suggestions which should be kept in mind in the preparation and delivery of a Sunday school lesson.

I. First, there must be the Gathering of the Material for the Lesson

The teacher should begin early in the week to do this. I know of one teacher who begins preparation of her next Sundays' lesson on the preceding Sunday afternoon. It might be added that this individual is a splendid teacher, always coming before her class with a worth while message. The advantage of such a plan can readily be seen. The previous lesson is fresh in mind. The connection between the two lessons can be quickly formed. Then the teacher has a whole week to ponder over the thought of the lesson. At least the Scripture should be read over very early in the week so that its blessed truths will have ample opportunity to unfold in the heart. Too much teaching is immature because the teaching of the lesson never had the opportunity to germinate and ripen in the teacher's own heart.

I well remember as a boy when my mother wanted to put out a good wash she always put her clothes to soak the night before. Possibly with all the modern helps the present day woman does not need to do that. But I do not believe any short-cut has been discovered to relieve the teacher from much study of his lesson. Put the lesson to soak early in the week so that the Spirit of God may have the opportunity of unfolding truth after truth hidden from the casual reader. Lesson preparation is not a Saturday night proposition.

The chief source of material, of course, is the Bible. Read the lesson material over again and again. Read the context. Read all the marginal references. Too often teachers fail because they are not thoroughly familiar with the portion of Scripture they are to teach. Ofttimes they will read the lesson over once and that very hurriedly and then seek some lesson help. This is a very superficial method of preparation. It is not giving the Bible a fair chance.

I once took a course in Teacher Training under Dr. William Evans. He used to exasperate some of us very much because of his constant insistence on our reading over and over again the book we were to outline. If we were to take up the Book of Malachi, for instance, his first assignment might be to read the entire book over six times. Later on we could see the wisdom in such a method. If teachers would spend more time with their Bibles they would not have to spend so much time with other helps and commentaries and they would be far better teachers.

Then, in the gathering of material, it is well to have recourse to good lesson helps. We make mention of a few such as our own Brethren literature, which is of a very high standard, The Sunday School Times, The King's Business, The Illustrator, The Evangelical Christian, Davis' Bible Dictionary, and orthodox commentaries. In all his reading the teacher should have pencil and paper handy to take down such notes as may appeal to him.

The teacher should also be on the lookout for illustrations that will illustrate the points of the lesson. Especially illustrations from life will be effective and hold the interest.

If some such plan as this is followed results will inevitably follow. The teacher will have something to say when the class period arrives. It will not be with him as it was with a certain teacher of whom I once heard. This teacher couldn't do anything with a class of boys. Finally, one morning in class she gave up in despair and began weeping. After the class one of the boys said to another, "What was the matter with teacher this morning?" The other boy, who was quite observing, replied, "If you knew as little about the lesson as she did and tried to teach, you'd weep too."

II. Then there should be Arrangement of the Material that has been gathered. It is not sufficient to have plenty of material. That is not a lesson. A person may have plenty of materials for a house but materials alone do not constitute a house. There must be some arrangement. So it is with the materials which are gathered for a lesson. They must be arranged into some form. There must be a plan in adequate lesson preparation.

Some of the material will need to be rejected. The teacher should not expect to use all the good things he gathers at once. He should know more than he teaches. He should constantly be building up a reserve. Many teachers make the mistake of attempting to teach too much in their lessons. They should guard against this tendency.

The teacher should seek to discover the main message of the lesson. An attractive introduction should be arranged. Possibly an illustration can be used effectively. It should be something catchy, to the point, in order to gain attention. Much depends on how the teacher starts off with the lesson. An appeal to the curiosity of the scholars can often be used with telling effect. If possible seek to link up last Sunday's lesson with the present lesson. The introduction should not be too long.

Then comes the main body of the lesson. This is where the teacher gets into the heart of the lesson. It should contain several points all related to the main subject the lesson.

Finally, every lesson should have ting conclusion in which the heart lesson is driven home to the lives scholars.

III. In the teaching of a lesson should be a Concentration on the Truth. Usually each lesson contain outstanding truth. This is the truth should be emphasized with all possible in the course of the lesson. A we in teaching is to have too many points. The result will be that the will hear so many important things t will remember none. Better far one emphasized from a dozen different than a dozen different truths.

For instance, the central truth of the twenty-one verses of John Three is the Birth. There are many other things section which might consume a great the teacher's time. Much time could be summed in speaking about the Kingd God, the Holy Spirit, Moses in the V ness, and other things. The whole could be used on any one of these but to so use the time would be to m main message of the section, which New Birth. It might be considered these standpoints:

1. What is the New Birth?
2. Why is it Necessary?
3. How is it Received?
4. What are its Results?

What an opportunity, therefore, f teacher to clinch some of the great with respect to Regeneration in such son as this! Find the main message lesson and by every means seek to it.

IV. The Teacher should Make Use lustrations. The teacher should culti art of illustrating his points. It will his teaching much more effective. add much interest to his efforts. save many dull moments. An illustra like a window in a house. It lets th in. Many lessons are fastened on the of scholars by good illustrations. Yet teachers scarcely use them at all.

Where can they be obtained? Fro ture, experience, reading, traveling, c sations, everywhere. Jesus, the ma teacher, was a constant user of illustr He was ever fond of saying that so was like something else. For exam Kingdom of Heaven is like a net let a sower, a man taking a journey, a of mustard seed, leaven, a lost piece ver, treasure hid in a field, etc. No simplicity of these illustrations. stone. It is very safe to say that one of Paul's own converts, did lithous fashion which Paul desired.

Onesimus and Slavery

before he ran away) Onesimus one, but now he was ready to be doubly profitable to Philemon as he had been to Paul.

"In the eyes of the ancient world, a slave was a mere chattel, outside the ordinary rules of humanity. 'Any act is lawful towards a slave,' wrote Seneca. Cruelty of the most repulsive kind was viewed as the merely normal treatment of a slave. Onesimus was not merely a slave, but a criminal slave, who had robbed his master and escaped. If he were caught a quite normal penalty would be crucifixion. In any case he would be put to the torture and branded as a runaway with a red-hot iron."

Paul's Attitude Toward Slavery

When we approach the book of Philemon in the light of present day standards, we are wondering what we shall find to be the attitude of Paul toward slavery. But if we keep in mind the standards of his day and the method of his treatment of the social evils of his day, we shall not be surprised to find him contenting himself with proclaiming "a divine equality, a universal brotherhood, which without at once interfering with the established order of things, left slavery impossible in enlightened lands."

The time had not yet come for raising the question of the evil inherent in the very existence of human slavery, but the letter is simply saturated with the Christian sense of the value of personality. It is clear that to Paul a man did not cease to be a person because he was a slave. Strangely enough, in the same period in which Paul wrote the letter the great philosopher Epictetus was a slave. There is something astonishing in the very idea of any human being owning Epictetus. Paul accepted a good many institutions as he found them, content to infuse into them a spirit so new and so glorious that it was inevitable that at long last the new wine should burst the old wine skins. But in the meantime Paul sent Onesimus back to his old master with a letter which is a perfect work of art, none the less exquisite because the writer was eagerly and nobly sincere in all that he said.—Selected.

Questionnaire to Pennsylvania C. E. Program

Brother W. H. Schaffer of Conemaugh writes: "I am enclosing the results of a questionnaire submitted to a number of societies of the Pennsylvania district. Thirteen societies answered and the results were tabulated and read at the Christian Endeavor hour during the fall Conference. Thinking that the findings may prove interesting to others, I am submitting them to you."
They are as follows:

What Are Your Two Strongest Points?

1. Spirited discussions on the topic after the speaker has finished. Willingness to take part.

Deep Spiritual life of quite a few in our society.

2. Faithfulness at and willing participation in prayer meetings. Attendance at mid-week prayer meeting. Average about 50%.

3. Our active members back up every statement by the Scriptures. All members take part in the service.

4. The faithfulness and participation of our young people.

5. Supporting the work of our league and church. Promoting the Christian Brotherhood of Man.

6. Large individual response to prayer.
Willingness to take part.

7. Regular attendance and promptness.

8. Occasional outbursts of enthusiasm.
Willingness to take part in the program on the part of the members.

9. Missionary interests. Spirit of friendliness.

10. Regular attendance. General participation.

11. Discussion of the topic. Leadership.

12. Attendance and collections. Singing.

13. The willingness on the part of young people to take part. Christian Endeavorers attending church services.

How They Were Attained

3. Urging them to remember their promise to take some part in the meeting besides singing. Then, too, we've been accustomed to leading in our society from the Junior C. E. on up. We have quite a few who are either graduates of Bible school or students now, and this, along with urging personal daily Bible study, helps our endeavorers have a life that counts.

2. By stressing faithfulness and willingness and attendance at mid-week prayer meeting before the society.

3. Special training since childhood. By always keeping the joy of working for Christ in their hearts.

4. By trying to give the young folks a chance. By repeatedly stressing the need of the young people taking hold of the work and by helping them to do so.

5. Prayer. Cooperation.

6. Conscientious work.

7. Making the church the social and religious center for the young people.

8. Accident mostly. Regular meetings and letting as many as possible take part in each program.

9. United prayer. Numerous missionary meetings of special nature with definite objective in view. Use of pledge and envelope system for weekly contributions make possible large gifts to foreign and home missions.

10. Loyalty, cooperation. Fellowship—stressing these.

11. Contests. By every one taking part.

12. Contests. Open invitation by members.

13. By asking young people to lead the meeting, by short talks, questions and special music.

What Are Your Two Weakest Points?

1. Lack of interest in branch activities, (due in part to studying and Bible school at nights, conflicting with branch nights). We have quite a few on roll who do not come out and our members do not urge them to do so by personal invitation, etc.

2. Lack of originality. Inability to get members out to workers' meetings.

3. Not starting on time. Getting very few members out to business meetings.

4. Not getting others. Only one half of our young people taking the work seriously.

5. Lack of leadership. Lack of members in attendance.

6. Ineffective singing. Slow increase in membership.

7. Lack of participation by boys. Poor singing.

8. Periodic depressions because of discouragement. Monotony because of the sameness of the programs.

9. Unwillingness of younger members to participate in discussion of the topic. Inactivity of some committees.

10. Failure to grow in numbers. Spasmodic attention.

11. Lateness. Lack of special attraction.

12. Speaking in public. Prayer.

13. Not enough in our society compared with the number in Sunday school from which we have to draw. Lack of prayer among our young people.

How We are Endeavoring to Strengthen Them

1. Announcing all branch activities and urging all who can possibly go to take part. We are making our meetings as attractive as possible, announcing them and urging those who do attend to invite others.

2. By giving parts in the program requiring extemporaneous talks.

3. We really do not know how to remedy this as we have tried nearly every means.

4. Stressing the need of a full consecration unto God by being submissive to the Holy Spirit.

5. Our influence of our prayers and daily living. That our young people seek Christ.

6. New song books. Inviting those who are not members to join us in our meetings.

7. A contest in which participation counts highly. Having a song leader and getting more books.

8. Trying to instill more life of the right kind into the meetings; that is, by trying to show in the program and the talks that devotion to Christ is really a joyous thing. Written comments by the pastor on each program, trying to bring in suitable and interesting Bible Doctrines and teachings fitting each topic.

9. Having the members in question read the Scripture text, etc. Emphasis of the Pledge and each committee reporting at business meetings. Report of progress.

10. Personal, individual solicitation, and canvass of neighborhood. Pastoral talks on good manners and courtesy.

11. Promptness in starting.

12. By giving the weakest member in public speaking parts on every program. Sentence prayers.

13. By having personal talk with the young, asking them to attend the meetings. Giving them short prayers to read. After this, many offer a prayer themselves.

greatest spiritual blessing came to families who had not been on friendly terms, united around the altar and their fellowship with God and with neighbors. The visible results of revivals and of the regular service past four months are as follows: Kittanning there have been 28 conversions, 14 baptisms, and 14 received as members. At Brush Valley there have been 12 confessions, 13 baptisms, and 16 into the church.

Both churches had fine Rally Days for which much credit is due to the able superintendents. The conference services in October were the first for years, due to the churches being closed in the spring. At Brush Valley there were not enough tables to minister to the needs of all the communicants, so large attendance.

The first Thursday in November Kittanning church opened a Bible school with the pastor teaching all classes are free to all denominations. They are to meet every Thursday night out the winter months. The schedule follows: From 6:30 to 7:00 P. M. Christian Endeavor; 7:00 to 7:45 School Workers' Class; 7:45 to 8:15 Prayer and Praise Service; 8:15 to 9:00 Studies in the Book of Romans. The Christian Endeavor and Sunday school lead to diplomas and degrees, as required text-books are used.

The various organizations of the churches are working hard to meet their goals. We have three C. E. societies, three Sisterhood societies, all under the leadership of the churches. Why do not other churches the brotherhood organize an International Sisterhood?

On Friday, October 23rd, the Kittanning church held a reception for the pastor and his wife and mother. Visitors spoke during the program, W. M. S. ladies served a wonderful dinner. The entire gathering. It is not necessary to say that this fellowship service was appreciated.

In addition to the work of the churches, the Lord has led us to open two different schoolhouses in the community alternate Sunday afternoons. Both Union Sunday schools but need the preaching of the gospel.

On Sunday, November 29th, we are going on having a Harvest Home at West Kittanning. Provisions and collections will be given to the local Society, and the offering will go to mission work. An all-day service is being held and members and friends can bring dinner and supper and eat it in the basement. At the afternoon service ministers will speak and there will be a "Roll-Call" of the entire membership. Brethren are welcome to this.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

The Vernon Brethren church of Limestone, Tennessee, closed a three week revival meeting on Sunday, November 19th. We rejoice because of these meetings as much as the Word of God was given fearlessly and in the power and demonstration of the Spirit by the evangelist, William A. #### DR. GRIBBLE AND DAUGHTER REUNITED

R. F. D. No. 2, Sunnyside, Washington.
Dear Evangelist Readers:

The month of October was a very busy and happy one for me. Leaving Chicago on Monday, October 4th, I spent a few busy and happy days at Ashland, making my headquarters at Dr. Miller's home, and taking my meals at the College Dormitory, or with other friends. So busy were we, and so full were the moments that there were many dear friends in Ashland whom I did not even see. This was largely due to the fact that I was not able to remain in Ashland over Sunday. I hope that I may yet have the privilege of meeting these friends before my return to Africa.

From Ashland I went to Dayton and vicinity intending to spend a week there, but I was fortunately able to crowd in a brief visit to our friends in Lost Creek and Krypton before finally leaving Dayton for Chicago where I took my train for Sunnyside—via Freeport, Milledgeville and Cedar Rapids. At Freeport I had the privilege of visiting an aunt. At Milledgeville I was in the home of Mrs. Hanna, mother of Mrs. Weed, who has cared for Marguerite for so many years. At Cedar Rapids I had the privilege of visiting my dear friend, Mrs. George Ronk, and of meeting Miss Estella Myers in her hospitable home. My ticket was so routed as to permit my stopping off over Sunday with my sister in Denver.

And then, after four months in the States, I have at last reached Sunnyside where I have that feeling of home which can only come in its intensity where there is some one who truly "belongs"—some one of one's own flesh and blood. I praise God for the privilege of being near Marguerite this winter, although I shall not be here constantly.

During the month of November I hope to visit a brother in Newberg, Oregon, a sister in Moscow, Idaho, and our churches in Spokane and Harrah. Marguerite, of course, must remain in Sunnyside to continue her school work, during the winter, but I am hoping the Lord may make it possible for her to accompany me on my travels during the summer.

Praying God's rich blessings upon you in your continued service for the Master.

Very faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

WEST KITTANNING AND BRUSH VALLEY, PENNSYLVANIA

Greetings from the hills of Western Pennsylvania. Last May these two churches called the writer to be their pastor, after having been without a pastor for nine months. We arrived on the field from Philadelphia and began work on June 28th, preaching on alternate Sundays. Two revivals were immediately held with the pastor as evangelist, one at West Kittanning from July 26 to August 16, and the other at Brush Valley from September 7 to 27. The interest was keen and the attendance and spirit good. It is a joy to work with people who are willing to sacrifice anything for the cause of the Lord. Perhaps the t also of everyone in the commu-attendance throughout the meet-fine, it even being necessary at allow some of the children to sit the pulpit, and a number of folks outside because there was no more the church. There was only one the attendance fell and that was a heavy rain. Anyone acquainted

CANTON, OHIO

On Sunday night, November 1st, the Canton church closed their three weeks' evangelistic campaign by observing the Communion Service. There were at least 127 brethren who took part in this service, and a number of others were present who were anxious to know just how we take Communion.

Nine confessions were received during these meetings, eight of whom have been received into the church. We praise God that he has honored the Word in such a way as to reach the hearts of young children; of those who have considered themselves good enough to get to heaven on their own good works; and also of those who have been raised from the depths of sin to live on that high plane with Christ their Savior; and to make all to know that "BY GRACE are we saved through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast."

It is interesting to note the increased interest in the Daily Bible Reading Record, which was kept,—at the end of the week 10,600 verses were reported,—at the end of the second week over 38,000 were reported and at the close of the meeting over 75,000 verses. This is just another evidence of the great truth that once God's Word is given a place in the minds and hearts of people, that there is always an increased hunger for more of that Word.

Our pastor leaves this week for a Bible Institute in Dayton, Ohio, and upon his return will spend two weeks in Louisville again as their evangelist. During the absence of the pastor, the Canton Brethren shall continue the morning services, but will join other Canton churches in cooperation with the Billy Sunday campaign which will continue until December 5th.

THE REVIVAL AT HIGHLAND, PENN- SYLVANIA

Highland is one of the earliest Progressive congregations. It dates back close to fifty years. Such men as Henry Wise, J. B. Wampler and M. C. Myers, were closely related to the work in its early stages.
The present structure used for worship was erected about thirty-five years ago while Henry Wise was preaching there. It is located on a mountain road off of the beaten track, and rather hard to find by those unacquainted with the hill country.

Of late years this work has had a rather hard struggle for existence and has been receiving help from the District Mission Board for some time. By encouraging a faithful pastor to take up the work, the Board felt that the church would soon recover itself and be able to carry on its own work again without aid. This is a fine work that the Board is doing and we trust that the church will awake to their opportunity and seize it before it is lost. Some of the members of this church are doing their best, while others who are well able are doing almost nothing compared to their ability. We trust that these shall awaken to their responsibility before God ere their church is sacrificed on the altar of personal selfishness. When a man who is able to give fifty dollars loves his Lord so little as to give fifty cents, it is not hard to account for his church being in difficulties. How much better if many folks would give freely to the Lord, who bled to death for them, than to hoard their money in banks with the possible result that the banks shall close and take all.

Brother Wm. Gray, of Masontown, Pennsylvania, has been pastor of this church for a couple of years now and has greatly improved the work. He is a clean living, hard working pastor who has made more sacrifices, and suffered more reverses, than some men ever meet with in an entire lifetime.
He has been in the ministry but a short time. If the real members of this church will unitedly get back of this man, and hold up his hands in every endeavor, this church could soon be the strongest church in that whole section.

We made our home with Brother and Sister Gray and greatly enjoyed our stay. It is a real Christian home, which is a refreshing thing to see in these wild days of worldliness. May the Lord comfort and care for these dear folks.

We greatly enjoyed the fine spirit of hospitality that was extended to us on every side. The homes of the membership and many others were open to us, and the cooks of Washington county proved that they were unbeatable. We shall not soon forget the splendid love and generosity shown by many of these dear folks. May they ever keep close to Christ.

R. PAUL MILLER.

HIGHLAND, PENNSYLVANIA

Months have passed since we sent a report of our work here at Highland to the Evangelist. The work here has moved along slowly this last summer. We have just closed a two weeks' revival. Brother R.
Paul Miller was our evangelist. The services were well attended. Every night we would see new faces in the audience and on the last night people were turned away, our church not being large enough to accommodate the crowds. Brother Claud Studebaker, pastor of the Pittsburgh church brought a delegation one night, coming a distance of about thirty-five miles. Other churches of our community were represented from night to night.

Music was furnished by our church choir, which is new to our church here, as this is the first time we have had a choir. Duets and solos were given by members of other churches.

The number coming to Christ was twenty, twelve coming for the first time, five for reconsecration and three for church membership. Two babies were dedicated to the Lord. A deacon was ordained to take the place of David Hufford, deceased. A number of good testimonials were given on the last night.

Brother Miller made his home with the pastor and family during the meeting. His stay with us will never be forgotten. We did not want to see him leave so soon, for these two weeks seemed but a few days. Much more would have been accomplished if Brother Miller could have stayed longer. Pray for this work here at Highland.

WM. GRAY, Pastor.

WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

It has been some little time since the church in Waynesboro was last heard from, but this is no indication of inactivity. During the summer months and early Fall, all regular services were held and all special days observed. Attendance and interest were maintained throughout, and we are very thankful that the usual summer slump did not prevail in the Waynesboro church this year. In fact, there has been a very marked increase in Sunday school attendance, the average being 215 for this year as compared to 193 for the same period last year.

We recently held a series of revival meetings, beginning on October 18, and continuing to November 1, which was our outstanding feature. We departed somewhat from the usual custom in these meetings, and held our communion services the first Sunday evening of the meetings instead of after the meetings. While this was more or less of an experiment, yet it proved very successful, as our attendance was approximately 170 and a very fine spirit was created and continued throughout. We feel that by holding the communion services at the beginning of the evangelistic services, we were better prepared for the work before us.

Our faithful pastor, Rev. W. C. Benshoff, led us through this series of meetings, which makes the sixth time we have labored together in this manner. Brother Benshoff was aided in his work during the last week of the meetings by Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Richer, Peru, Indiana. Brother Richer directed the singing and offered quite a few solos, while Sister Richer accompanied on the piano. Under the direction of our regular choir director, Mr. Robert Wagaman, the first week, and Brother Richer the second week, our two choirs, the adult and junior, labored very earnestly and furnished excellent music for every meeting.

We all feel that we were wonderfully blessed by these meetings, both in attendance and interest, as the attendance at these meetings surpassed all other records. A large percentage of our members attended, as well as quite a few from other churches. We also feel that we were blessed in the result of these meetings, inasmuch as ten new members were added to the church by baptism, one by letter, and one reconsecrated. Three new members were also added to our church prior to these meetings, two by baptism, and one by letter, making a total of 15 during the past several months. We feel that a large part of these results were brought about by the faithful and continual laboring of Brother Benshoff, the personal workers, and the Richers.

If the results obtained in this revival are any indication, people are turning to the church to find peace of mind and new hope in this period of world crisis. We are laboring and looking forward to reaching goals never before attained, and hope and trust that we may have the good wishes and prayers of the Brethren church that we may reach these goals or soar beyond.

J. EDW. CORDELL, Jr.

FROM MASONTOWN, PENNA. TO ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

A little over two months ago we held our last services in Masontown. After working together for five years it was exceedingly hard for us to think of parting from those we had learned to love. But, feeling definitely the call to another field of service for Christ, and desiring to do his will we had to break old ties and accept the call to the Roanoke work.

We would be ungrateful indeed if we did not take this opportunity of expressing our undying appreciation of all that the Masontown church had done for us. From the very beginning they took us into their hearts and homes, with a continued generosity that was finally expressed toward us in many farewell gifts which are more precious because of the kind thoughts that prompted them, and in a farewell party which enabled us to say goodbye to them collectively. Coming direct from seminary and with little practical experience, many mistakes were made; but they readily forgave us them and constantly encouraged us by their prayers and help. In our efforts to lead and shepherd the flock we found them ready to cooperate in every way possible. In the church's greatest of all works, taking the lost, we found them eager in their power. Cottage prayer, summer Sunday schools in the little town around Masontown, personal evangelism, much prayer and interest all were a means of preparing the way for the mighty revivals which in five years under the hand of God brought almost a hundred and fifty to Christ and the ship of the church.

We must also mention the work at Riverside. At this little community, miles from Masontown, quite a number of our members live. Many attended at Masontown but because of the distance impossibility of some to attend we met every Tuesday evening for several months of the year in a Union church they had Sunday school on Sunday afternoons. It was a privilege to pray for these folks, for they love the Word of God. We gave not only to carry on their work but aided the church at Masontown in their offerings for Missions. From the very beginning the Lord blessed the work with a large number of conversions, especially among the young people.

Masontown holds forth many pos-

Publications Loyalty

L-O-V-E begets loyalty. Our cause demands our love and our loyalty. Therefore let us love our Cause and our loyalty will develop.

O-B-E-Y-I-N-G the voice of the Lord will not lead us to rebellion but to loyalty. Loyalty can not be hid under a bushel.

Y-I-E-L-D-I-N-G will induce sharing and sharing is the greatest of service. Sharing less with sport and more with the Lord will create loyalty to him and his gospel which must be preached.

A-I-D-I-N-G each other, we can hope to build each other up into the habitation of God. Our publications need the united aid of all brethren who must realize their part in this loyalty.

L-O-N-G-I-N-G to impart a blessing to others, will compel not merely Publishing House employees, but many laymen and officers of the church also to make heroic efforts at increase in subscriptions.

T-R-U-S-T-I-N-G in the Lord, we shall not lose a penny. His promises are sure and Brethren need to remember the Bank of Heaven is safe and "thieves do not break through and steal" from it.

Y-O-K-I-N-G together with God is our highest privilege. It is not a yoke, and our hope of yoking together with Christ is based on loyalty to him and his cause. We hope Brethren Publications will continue to promote his cause and if they do, loyalty to them is yoking with him.

vice. As we look back over the work many opportunities of which we took advantage. But the door isn't to opportunities there. The field of work is large and our church by the nature of her work is in position to reap a great harvest. The membership which is made up largely of young people who have manifested a love for the Lord's attendance at special Bible study, Teacher training classes and the meetings are willing to be led into activities for Christ in reaching out in the needy field.

My letter is getting too long, but we stop until a word is said about the future. We arrived at Roanoke Saturday September 12. Saturday evening the church held a "pound party and reception" immediately we were made to feel welcome and were convinced that we had met among those who would go to the limit making us comfortable and happy.

Months have quickly passed and in a number of things have come to our observation. First, that this is a very good field for the building of a strong Brethren church. The former pastor, Rev. J. H. and the church built well in a field where growth is possible and erected a church that is well able to take care of a congregation. Secondly, that even though the membership is not large it is made up of men and women who love the Lord, love the church and who are willing to make the sacrifice in the giving of time, talent and possessions. It will not be necessary to tear down first before building is made. The foundation is secure and our work is to build upon that foundation the glory of God. Thirdly, that the depression is a face to face with a debt crisis. But even the hardship of value in the Lord's plan. This is testing is making us realize how the Lord's power is needed and is leading us to him in prayer for the way already answers have come which in faith and confidence in him. Funds from the Home Mission Board, W. M. a friend of the church just when the most. Just now the way out of our financial difficulties cannot be seen, but our God is able, and in his time and time he "will supply all our needs according to his riches in glory by Jesus." Pray for Roanoke.

HERMAN KOONTZ, Pastor.

ELLET, OHIO TO MASONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

closed our work at Ellet after four and a half years of service. We shall all remember them as years of our ministry which the Lord chose to bless with victory and success. For some unaccountable reason it was rumored among the brotherhood that the Brethren were not paying their pastor. I wish to correct this erroneous rumor in behalf of the Ellet people that that community paid to the last penny a look back on our work there with thanksgiving mingled with a bit of regret at parting with so large a number of true friends.

One of the bright spots in our work at Ellet was the association of Brother Grant. Well we remember how he drove twenty-eight miles, many times through inclement weather, to add the inspiration of his presence to our meetings. He did it, he said, because Ellet was a new church and needed the support of neighboring Brethren. Thank God for unselfishness and brotherly love. I am sure no greater joy could be ours than to leave our flock at Ellet under the care of Rev. and Mrs. McDonald.

Mt. Zion, Logan, Ohio

This church has been closed for two years. Answering the call of the Brethren there, we held a few meetings for them in October. It was indeed food for the soul to stand by that little white church and let the eye wander over the surrounding country. The hills were covered with trees and shrubs which were inimitably tinted by God's own handiwork. How restful it was to one just out of a big city.

The people came to the services from all directions. The neighborhood turned out almost to a man and almost filled the little church for every service. Again the walls ring with hymns of praise. Again hearts were lifted to God in prayer, and again eager souls listened to the preached Word.

I have not seen such hunger for the Gospel—not in a lifetime. They were loath to close the services but our new duties were waiting and we had to go. May the Lord bless them and keep them faithful till the day of his coming.

Masontown, Pennsylvania

We have spent one Sunday in Masontown. We arrived here last week to find a warm house and a warm meal awaiting us. The cellar had been stocked with coal, potatoes and apples. Capable hands had cleaned and repaired. Before we were out of the car people began to come to help us get "set." before night the house looked quite like a home. The next evening a reception was held for us at the church. In connection with it was a pound party. It turned out to be more like a ton party. We shall not need to buy groceries for many days.

Sunday two hundred and thirty-eight were in attendance at Sunday school. The building was well filled for both morning and evening services. We are enjoying the mountain scenery but more than this do we enjoy the eager response of these Brethren.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

It seems possible to me that the readers of our good church paper, the Evangelist, might be interested in a brief message from this field in the Lord's vineyard.

The work is moving along with increasing interest and some things are happening that are of some interest to our local people at least; and from the way in which the brotherhood has been standing by the work, I am sure these will be of general interest also.

The greatest thing of recent weeks, was the meeting of our district conference here, which left with us an inspiration which we believe will be lasting. There were not as many delegates as we had expected and hoped for, but those who were here, certainly did their part in the conduct of a splendid conference. Those from out of the district were also on the job, with their messages of good cheer and challenges.

Our church school rally day was on October 4th and it was a real success, coming the Sunday before the district conference convened. The attendance was 113 and this was high-water mark, and the attendance continues above the usual mark since that time.

The Woman's Missionary Society is holding its ground and the Christian Endeavor Society is advancing very nicely. Mrs. Wood is the president of the W. M. S. Mr. Thurman Orr is the superintendent of the church school and Miss Nina Palmer is the president of the Y. P. S. C. E. and they each have some faithful helpers who are standing by the helm, for continual growth. We are expecting Brother C. C. Grisso with us for a revival some time after holidays, and we are now busy preparing for the same, and are asking for the prayers of the brotherhood, in behalf of this work. On September 15th Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Hopping came up from Tulsa, Oklahoma, and were baptized into the membership of this church. They were raised in the Brethren faith and now they are enjoying full fellowship with Brethren people, and they are anxious to see a Brethren church in Tulsa, as soon as the door is open and it is possible. They are fine people and we are pleased to have them cast their lot with us until they may have a Brethren church in their home city. We are praying for the largest Home Mission offering in the history of our church. That mission churches may be made self-supporting and that new churches may be planted in the needy fields which are "white already for harvest." Remember this work and the workers when you pray.

L. G. WOOD.

LOVE AND FRIENDSHIP

No love, no friendship is ever wasted. And if they be not appreciated or reciprocated by the person upon whom they are bestowed, it comes from some other least expected source from which we have no claim. There is no such thing as loving in vain. True, one can love someone who does not return that love. But for every unrequited love another bigger love is born. The more people you like, the more people will like you. The more you give, the more will be yours to give. The more smiles you put into circulation, the more you will have bestowed on you. Love, friendship, and smiles are like currency. If they are hoarded, no one gets the benefit of them; if they are kept in constant circulation, everyone benefits, and, again, like money, they always accumulate something in the transit.—Selected.

You can make of life something fine if you will use the materials at hand with patience, perseverance, and reverence.

THAT REMINDS ME

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter

An American citizen went to Russia hoping to find a panacea for the world's ills. He had bitterly indicted the corruption in American politics and business. But he frankly admits now that disillusion awaited him in Russia.

According to the "National Republic" the most pungent of this man's Observations on the Russian scene has to do with RELIGION and the ruthless SOVIET ATTITUDE toward it.

He goes on a visit to a smelter where the Russian authorities are melting up old metal to make AMMUNITION for the red army. He writes: "As soon as I saw that junk pile depression filled me, for there in the broad hill lay the bells of the churches of Russia, some of them, the bells I had hoped to hear.

"Some were smashed, some were being smashed, others were still intact—beautiful things, wonderfully molded and engraved. To a great extent they had been cast from metal donated by the peasants—copper, bronze, gold, silver. They had been gorgeous works of art, decorated with bas-reliefs of the saints, the apostles, of Christ, of his parables."

All of this seemed so shocking and unnecessary. He ventured a remark along this line to the smelter boss. "How many tons have you in this hill?" "I don't know," the boss replied, "but thus far we've smelted 600,000 tons of them. The bells were made for the churches out of metal donated by the peasants. Now we've taken the bells from the churches and are returning the metal to industry—to the workers."

The President of the local workers' council added: "You must realize that the workers of this country are the rulers of the soviet republic. ALL THAT THESE BELLS SYMBOLIZE IS DONE AND GONE. The workers willed it that way. These things are of no use to us. We have abolished what these bells stood for—superstition."

The traveler from America continues the story: "The soviet spokesman was still talking when I noticed what were bundles of icons, candelabra, holy vessels and altar pieces, all in machine pressed blocks ready for the furnace. On top of this mound I saw what seemed to be a MAN ASLEEP. The figure was clumsily covered with canvas or something of the sort, and so sure was I that it was one of the workers taking a siesta out of hours that I asked the president of the workers' council about it.

"For the first time he grinned. He winked at another Russian and cat-like leaped up the hill of confiscated altar pieces. A shout from him made us step back. He raised his right foot and rolled the prostrate figure over with a thrust of his heel. It teetered on the edge and then came rolling down, crashing in a moment at our feet.

"IT WAS A GREAT BRONZE FIGURE OF CHRIST, a magnificent sculpture. It was more than life size and apparently had been wrenched from its huge cross."

AND THAT REMINDS ME

How thankful we of America ought to be that the church bells of our land are still ringing!

How thankful we ought to be for the opportunity to worship and serve Almighty God as the Holy Spirit dictates!

How thankful we ought to be for the privilege of being "workers together with God" in saving lost souls.

How thankful we ought to be for the Thanksgiving season when we can bring a sacrificial offering, a thank offering, for the building of the church in our home land, and can lay it in his nail-pierced hand.

May our blessed Lord rejoice as his people lay upon his altar an offering that will please him and that will be adequate to meet the needs of his church!

THE PREPARATION AND DELIVERY OF A SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

What an opportunity then some teachers are passing by! Without fail this sort of teaching creates interest. Try it. The Bible is full of this sort of teaching.

Use maps, charts, globes, blackboards, in teaching. There is little excuse for lack of interest in the class. If there is, the responsibility is largely with the teacher. Interest can be gained. Somebody has made this statement, "Happy is that teacher who finds out that he is a bore to his class and seeks to remedy the situation.

V. The teacher should also consider in his preparation the Matter of the Time Allotted for the Lesson. He should seek to cover the lesson in that time. He should plan his work for the time he has and then work his plan. It is the teacher's business to complete the lesson. Otherwise he will fail to clinch the message of the lesson and irreparable damage will be done to the continuity of a series of lessons.

Last of all every teacher should have a Definite Aim in teaching. The aim should be to translate teaching into life. Teachers should realize that they are not called to teach lessons but scholars with immortal souls. Unless they have this conception of their task they will fail. What a solemn, yet glorious task it is! The teacher's business is to mould character. He has the only means at his disposal which can successfully shape that character. That is the Word of God. Thus he should give himself to the best possible preparation in the handling of this Word. Eternal things are in his hands.

It is a tragedy to appear before scholars with no message. Thirty minutes a week is all the teaching some children, and some adults as well, receive in the Bible. If they attend every Sunday during the year it means only 26 hours of Bible teaching for the entire year. And then to get nothing during those hours, it is a tragedy. Let none of us be guilty. Let those of us who teach, pray much, study much, live much, love much, and under God we will see in the days ahead strong men and women filling in the ranks of the church and when we pass to yonder shore some will come to us and say, "I'm glad you passed my way."

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE CHINA DOG

Little Miss has a china dog. It had a funny little pink mouth through which one could feed it only pennies, nickles, and dimes. Its stomach must have been rather empty, for the three pennies in it rattled loudly as Little Miss tossed the poor dog about.

"I wish I had some one to run over to grandmother's for me," Aunt Bess called from the window.

"I'll go," cried Little Miss, who had often been down the road alone.

"Thank you, my dear. Take this note for me, and when you come back maybe there'll be some more pennies to feed doggie," said Aunt Bess.

Little Miss had left the note at grandmother's house and was on her way home when she spied something glistening in the road. It was a dime, a beautiful, shining dime, unlike any one she had ever seen before. She picked it up and was about to drop it into doggie's mouth when she remembered that it wasn't really truly her dime. It might belong to some one who had lost it. So she carried it home held tightly in her palm.

"See what I've found," she told Bess.

"O, my dear, a five-dollar gold piece wonder who has lost it? We'll try out, and if we do not then it will be said Aunt Bess.

At the end of the week no one had found to claim the treasure. It must have been lost by some one who traveled far away, for many passed along the road every day.

"The five-dollar gold piece is yours, Aunt Bess at last; "but before we do doggie let us take it to the bank and it changed into pennies and nickles and dimes, lest the gold piece might so slip out of his mouth and be lost."

"And so Little Miss went to town in her big car with her aunt, and the gentleman at the bank took the gold piece, and O my, how many pennies and nickles and dimes he did feed doggie till the little stomach was stuffed quite full and wobbled at all!

Little Miss had never dreamed that a bit of money could be changed into so many pieces or that one china dog could hold so much. But he didn't hold it so very long, for one fine day the little pink mouth opened wide, and all the coins were out to help buy a shiny new bicycle. Little Miss had wanted very, very much. Med Ransom, in Christian Advocate.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Lester W. Kennedy

A cablegram from the African field, received November 19th, brings word that Brother Kennedy went home to be with his Lord on the 5th of November.

As announced to the readers of the Brethren Missionary in the last issue, he had been suffering for some time with an abdominal ailment so serious that all human hope of recovery had been abandoned, and a great burden of prayer was being offered throughout the brotherhood for his restoration. It seemed to us that God would be glorified in greater measure by life rather than death. But we acknowledge the limitations of our understanding and bow to the Will of the Father who is infinite in wisdom and love. "He knows."

Already evidences have come to us revealing the wide-spread quickening of missionary interest aroused by his illness and suffering, and cause us to believe that through his sacrifice God will be glorified in the offering of greater resources of consecrated life and substance. And we knew Brother Kennedy well enough to be sure that like Paul, greatest among missionaries, he would be satisfied if "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death."

While the passing of Brother Kennedy brings a profound feeling of disappointment and loss to the entire church, we should not forget the great mercies of God poured out upon the Mission in Africa. With a comparatively large number of missionaries, working in one of the most dangerous of regions from the health standpoint, our mission has suffered no loss of life for a period of nearly ten years.

To Sister Kennedy we extend our deepest sympathy, and request the entire Brotherhood to join with us in prayer that she may find in our Blessed Lord the sustaining power of his peace which "passeth all understanding."

GHANDI and the "Ladies"

Ghandi, who is still waiting in England to get some measure of freedom for his beloved India, was invited to attend a reception given recently at the home of Lady Astor and had an opportunity to view at close range the evening "gowns" worn on such occasions. His reaction is interesting.

Ghandi said, "Even in tropical India where the temperature often reaches 120 degrees, women would never dream of appearing on the streets half-dressed as they do in London. Western women are mad with vanity. They worship the god of fashion. It is a sacrilege for them to allow beauty doctors to mar the faces God has given them, to pluck their eyebrows and distort their features."

Doubtless, the women will retort that, at their worst, they wear more than Ghandi does. But they should remember that he at least has a serious purpose in wearing nothing but a loin cloth. At any rate, the word of Ghandi reminds us that among pagan women there still exists a sense of modesty.

ANOTHER War Impending

The moving picture industry, which poses as one of the fine "arts", has travestied and misrepresented just about every phase of human life which we count worth while. The home, the church, preachers and missionaries—all have been given attention by the muck-rakers of Hollywood. Lately, in search of some new profession to besmirch, the screen has turned to the newspaper reporters, and has managed to convey the impression that they are a drunken, foul-mouthed lot.

This was rather a stupid move. For newspaper reporters, differing in this respect from other victims, have a means of public retaliation. Mr. W. Ward Marsh, theatrical reviewer for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, threatens that unless the screen ceases its misrepresentation of the newspaper profession, the reporters will declare war on Hollywood and proceed to tear off the lid. And he speaks seriously.

This is one war that we ought to encourage. But probably nothing will come of it. Newspaper editors need the money of the screen advertisers.

WHAT Mr. Marsh says about the Screen

1. He says that the screen is guilty of "lies and libels" in its (mis) representations of life.

2. That the lives of many of its chief "artists" are filled with "dirt."

3. That the newspaper men have known this state of affairs, but have protected the moving picture industry by their silence.

4. That if the screen continues to misrepresent the reporters, they will open up and tell the truth about Hollywood; that "without the slightest effort they could rip the lid from Hollywood and with a few true stories send several of the film favorites into oblivion." That they might tell "what is the real story behind most of the divorces, and that one (in particular) had so much dirt in it that it was never printed."

5. He says that "the screen is in no position ... just now" to start a fight with the reporters.

WHO is Mr. Marsh?

If some minister of the Gospel had said one-tenth of what Mr. Marsh writes, he would be put down at once as a crazy fanatic. Therefore, the reader should be reminded once more that Marsh is not an enemy of the theater. On the contrary, he is a friend of the institution, and his very profession as a theatrical reviewer depends upon its continuance. In the light of these facts, his utterances are a crushing indictment, not only of the screen as at present managed, but also of his own profession as a newspaper man.

If, as Mr. Marsh asserts, newspaper writers have known of this degeneracy and corruption in screen life, why have they not exposed it? If a preacher proves false to his high calling and turns into the path of wrong, would they shield him with the blanket of silence? Everyone knows the answer.

This very power to close the mouths of those who speak through the columns of the newspapers, as unconsciously revealed by Mr. Marsh, proves that the moving picture industry is one of the most vicious influences in American life.

NOW in the Face of All This

The Christian people of this country are being asked to support and attend the moving picture theaters in order that their "free" performances may raise funds for the relief of the needy! And in this very "gesture" of charity, they toss an insult to the Christian Church by placing their performances in many instances on the Lord's Day! In Johnstown, Pennsylvania, the Mayor urges all ministers and church members to attend because, after a protest from several ministers, the theaters "graciously" set the time at nine o'clock Sunday evening so as to permit people to go to church!

It is a wonderful scheme. Instead of using their regular performances, they appropriate some of the time which by every fair estimate belongs to the church, ask the church people to furnish the money, get some free advertising, break down still further the Christian conscience which interferes with their profits, and then parade themselves as "charitable" institutions!

Still, I suppose that we should remember that we belong to a government which gets part of its revenue from taxing bootleggers like Al Capone, and be thankful that things are no worse.

Business Men Summarize Prohibition Gains for 1931

"Despite the flood of wet claims, the year 1931 has already recorded more dry victories and encouragement than any year since the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment," declares a statement just received at the Evangelist office from the headquarters of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation for Prohibition in Chicago.

"If results of the Wet-Dry controversy in 1932 depend in any measure upon the progress made during the past ten months, a substantial and even notable victory for national prohibition is foreshadowed," the Foundation statement, and it continues: "In the record of the past year, there has been a remarkable quickening of interest on the part of every dry organization in the country."

"Eighteen outstanding achievements in support of the prohibition policy during the year 1931 to date, are as follows:

(1) The report of the Presidential Commission on Law Enforcement, which declared individual views, declared with but one dissenting vote for the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment, opposed repeal of the legalized saloon, opposed government ownership or operation of the liquor business and opposed modification of laws to permit manufacture and sale of wine and beers.

(2) President Hoover, transmitting his report, approved these conclusions.

(3) The United States Supreme Court, reversing Judge Clark of New Jersey, affirmed Constitutionality of the Eighteenth Amendment.

(4) Congress defeated every measure proposed by the Wets to handicap the administration of the Prohibition laws.

(5) The defeat by the Legislature of the wet legislation intended to weaken state enforcement support of national Prohibition laws. Governor Benson vetoed the proposal in the state of Illinois.

(6) National Prohibition Director W. W. Woodcock, reports the most successful year of law enforcement in the history of the Federal Bureau, with an increase in number of liquor gangsters being detected.

(7) Nine months' nation-wide campaign on behalf of Prohibition by a new organization called the Allied Forces, which has held nearly 300 rallies in 50 cities.

(8) The Board of Strategy of the National Temperance and Prohibition organizations, representing 100 saloon leagues, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and thirty-one other organizations, announce the beginning of a campaign to include 15,000 mass meetings in support of Prohibition.

(9) A Youth Movement, embracing 10 million young people in forty-three organizations, including the Christian Endeavor and Y. M. C. A. movements, with

Prohibition Not Divorced from Religion and Morals

ing Replies to Misleading Statement Attributed to Him or traffic has scarcely a more implacable and outstand-prohibition a wiser or more capable friend, than Dr.
Poling and he has been rendering signal service of late use of Prohibition. That fact has made it a matter of concern that he was reported in an article appearing in Magazine for November, to have said that prohibition divorced from religion and morals. We have had inquir-it from laymen and ministers, and, though we have not report, yet we had no definite word of denial from him receipt of a copy of a letter written in response to an in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, entitled, "That Prohibition," in which the editor declared that it was e to make such a divorce.

glad to give to our readers the words of Dr. Poling, both is highly respected of our young people for his leader-Christian Endeavor and because he is exercising a great in behalf of Prohibition and such a statement as he was to have made, would lose him the confidence and support church people who are ardent dries. Besides we need to act burned deeply into the consciences of the entire stituency of the country—that prohibition is in very truth nd religious issue of the first magnitude. That fact was ognized, and it was due to the recognition of that fact e sentiment became so strongly in favor of prohibition.
ction has been simmering down considerably of late, how-to the comparative inactivity of the church and the usu-us campaign conducted against prohibition by the wets.
need of an awakening of public conscience and a mar-f activity at this point. Dr. Poling knows that all too misled by any false strategy as he was reported to have Poling's reply is as follows:

ention has been called to the editorial "The Divorce of " appearing in the Christian Advocate of October 22, torial represents my personal conviction and public posi-

y. I could not have stated my own mind more clearly.
u for this generous paragraph:

e simply do not believe that Dan Poling is quoted fully hen the McCall Magazine represents him as saying: 'Let Prohibition from religion and morals.' He, of all men, ever has been done and never can be done."
is quoted. I did not say it. I do not believe it. The one at article was manifestly seeking to present her view-y and I believe in such a way as to help the cause of t, but in the vital particular pointed out she went far e to discuss the matter on its merits, having read your would but repeat what you have written. A few days etter to a leader of a Prohibition organization I referred Call article and my personal embarrassment as follows:

rrent woman's magazine of wide circulation appears an-ch, while unmistakably friendly to our cause, attributes er statements and sentiments that are utterly offensive sonally. I am quoted directly as saying things I never I shall make no reply because, as I see it, publicly ex-ferences between friends of this cause hurt the cause.
t more than I can say that I should have been made to mindful of the very foundation upon which the structure tion has been raised."

ing is right. There would never have been any prohibi-had not been for morals and religion; it was built upon es. There can not possibly be any separation here; they icably bound together. The church has always recogliquor traffic as its insatiable foe as well as the foe of und the state and everything good and right. Its record egradation and death. Of that no one who has lived and ek in the days of the licensed saloon could be ignorant.
l life and debauched society by the septic sins which it spawned. Commercialized gambling, organized vice and rotten politics were its diseased offspring. Such an agency of the devil not only was the avowed enemy of the church and its standards in earlier days, but still is, and will remain so, and every intelligent, conscientious Christian leader will continue to fight the liquor traffic on moral and religious grounds as well as for economic, physical, political and many other reasons.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Rev. Dyoll Belote, one of Ohio's district evangelists, will visit Fremont and be present as the speaker of the day at their Homecoming celebration on November 29th. His pulpit at Ashland will be supplied by local ministers.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter gives us another interesting installment of his observations under the title of "That Reminds Me." He writes this week about the "Journey's End", or the mansion that awaits the home-going of the Christian. It is an inspiring message.

On the Christian Endeavor page, our young readers will find the first installment of a thoughtful article by Brother Leslie Lin-dower on "More Christ in Christian Endeavor." Brother Lindower is the faithful pastor of the Terra Alta and Grafton churches in West Virginia.

Brother Arthur Snyder, pastor of the church at Mathias, West Virginia, tells of a highly satisfactory two weeks' meeting conducted in his church by Brother John F. Locke, who strengthened people in the true Gospel faith as well as caused sinners to turn to God. Six were received into the church by baptism.

Brother J. L. Gingrich, 186 Spring Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, says the churches are slow about forwarding to him as secretary of National Conference, the $2.00, which Conference assessed, or rather requested each church to pay to help meet its deficit. If your church has failed to pay its share, better send the $2.00 to Brother Gingrich at once.

An announcement came to the editor's home last week telling of the birth to Rev. and Mrs. Willis E. Ronk, of Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, of a little son on November 15th, 1931. This little newcomer weighed in at nine pounds and his name is Robert Teller Ronk. We congratulate Brother and Sister Ronk on this new blessing of God upon their home.

Brother S. E. Christiansen, of Allentown, Pennsylvania, writes a lengthy tribute to that burning missionary of the Gospel, George Hansen, former Norwegian sailor, who proved to be the instrument leading to Brother Christiansen's conversion. It is an interesting story both because of our brother's personal connection and also because of the late Rev. Hansen's zeal for the Gospel, as well as for his friendship to our South American workers.

Brother W. A. Steffler writes of his evangelistic campaign recently held at Limestone, Tennessee, concerning which the pastor made report last week. The evangelist speaks very favorably of the good work being gotten under way there by their young, but capable pastor, Brother Hill Maconaghy. The attendance during the meetings was large and the revival spirit was enthusiastic.
There is reason for encouragement regarding the outlook for the church.

Plan now to make your Christmas WHITE by building up in your heart the giving rather than the getting spirit. Look forward to the deep joy of giving—in your home, in your community, in your Sunday school and in your church—rather than to the shallow pleasure of getting. It is unselfishness and genuine concern for the happiness and welfare of others that makes a Christmas white and a worthy commemoration of the birth of the King.

Brother George Cone has been hindered much in his church work at Milledgeville, Illinois, on account of sickness and quarantine in his family and community, but the Sunday school is keeping up well notwithstanding. He writes: "We have some who are waiting to receive the rite of Christian baptism by triune immersion as soon as the pastor is able to arrange a satisfactory time. At least four are waiting." The fall communion was attended by 94 communicants.

Sister Hattie C. Sheldon writes of the Lord's work at the Bellevue station in Africa. There has been much sickness among the natives and the dispensary is crowded. But, as Sister Sheldon suggests, it is not surprising that there is, considering the way the people live. As the Gospel spreads among them, they will become more civilized in their ways of living, and the elements and disease will yield more easily to the struggle for an existence. She tells us that Brother Sheldon shot a buffalo—almost. Well, since this is hunting season, the men of our Evangelist family will be able to sympathize with Brother Sheldon the more easily.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Seminary Faculty of Ashland, writes the news of the Seminary, and it is evident that the several members of the faculty are being kept busy giving Bible lectures, special addresses and preaching. Prof. Stuckey is now engaged in lecturing in a Missions and Sunday school institute at Waterloo, Iowa, where Brother S. M. Whetstone is pastor. The Gospel Teams are also busy over the Thanksgiving holidays. Dr. Monroe makes report of the gifts received for furnishings and rent for the new Seminary House, also for books for Seminary library.

Brother W. S. Crick is seeking to pass on the Publications Loyalty spirit, of which we have been writing, to the members of his congregation, at Fremont, Ohio, as is evidenced by the following item which appeared in his church bulletin: "Keep in touch with the thought and thinkers, the work and workers, the goals and achievements of YOUR CHURCH by faithfully reading the church's publications. BRETHREN (Dunkers) were pioneers in the colonies in the use of the printing press. When Benjamin Franklin was issuing his publications in English, Christopher Sauer was issuing his publications in German, and printed the first Bible in German to be printed in America. Surely we should not despise the rich heritage of the printed page." Then he gives the names of all our publications. Such statements make for denominational pride and loyalty. We need it.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, editor of our Sunday school lesson publications, writes of his travels in recent months, the most recent of which was his trip to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he was a speaker at a Sunday School Institute and assisted at other gatherings. He recommends the holding of Sunday school institutes at many points throughout the brotherhood. It is a practical suggestion and has within it the possibility of meeting some very real needs among our Sunday schools. The Sunday school has in the past been the feeder of the church, and it appears that in some quarters Sunday school efficiency is being neglected. Brother Bame is justified in promoting those tried and proven means to Sunday school efficiency, for no other agency of the church has been so much used of God for the advancement of his kingdom in the hearts of children and youth, and we may say also in the lives of adults as well.

Dr. Teeter has a message this week in his "Business Manager's Corner," and he rightly appeals to Brethren people from the standpoint of loyalty. That is the thing that will solve our financial problems—a greater loyalty to our publications. And we believe there is reason for our loyalty appeal—our publications are loyal to the Book and they are of the quality that deserves loyalty. An outstanding intellectual leader of our church recently said, without solicitation, concerning The Angelus, "It is, all things considered, the best Sunday school paper I have ever read." And men and women of ability are frequently commenting favorably on day school lesson publications and on our church paper. because of egotism that we make mention of these comm because of our desire to see the advancement of our cau we believe the advancement of every other general intere church is in a large way dependent on the success of our ing interests, and particularly the wide circulation of The Evangelist.

It was with sad surprise that we learned that Brother Crofford, suffering with a heart attack, passed away last the age of 72 years. Dr. Bame informs us that he attended the funeral, which was held on Friday, November 20th, and mentioned the friendship which he valued in Brother . Many of us can say the same thing with regard to our brother, for he was a truly friendly man. The contagious, radiant, kindly spirit was felt by all who knew him. Many times we can recall when his friendship touched our lives, encouragement to us in our work. Through all the vicissitudes of the past twelve or fifteen years Brother Crofford has never allowed his spirit and conduct to be anything less than friendly. He had the qualities of friendship in his very nature, and we dare say he will be missed and valued because of the contribution he made in friendship as much as for any other service he may have rendered. He has been for years the pastor of the Mount Pleasant church in Pennsylvania. This church has had other pastors at intervals, but it seemed that they could not quite get away from Brother Crofford, and several times we would be without a pastor they would turn again to Brother Crofford, who was their pastor at the time of his death and for them just a couple of weeks ago when he returned to his home in Johnstown and became ill. We extend in behalf of the Evangelist family sincere sympathy to his sorrowing companions.

Brother C. A. Stewart writes of the revival he conducted at Columbus, Ohio, where Brother D. R. Murray is the able pastor. Two were added to the church and a number of new interest developed in the work as a result of the series of the visitation conducted. Brother Stewart says truly that it is no easy field and he diagnoses the difficulties very accurately. It is deepened conviction and intensified loyalty that Brethren need to make such missions like Columbus a success. In other places we could name, struggling missionary work that could have been given the strength and influence needed to have guaranteed their future, if all the splendid Dunker churches moved into those places had identified themselves with them. At Columbus our church house has been put in good condition and is being well kept. The local group, under the leadership of Brother Murray, had the exterior woodwork painted this summer and much interior decorating done. The church and Sunday school are well organized and efficiently conducted, and the results are well shown. Some splendid missionary work was done during the summer Vacation Bible School among the children of the community, and the church has made some friends among adults as well. Brother Stewart and his church deserve credit for giving a four weeks' meeting without charge. It is real missionary work. On behalf of the Ohio Board we thank them, also Brethren Stewart and Monroe, who shared in the service by supplying the Brethren.

OUR PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the Publications Loyalty Campaign at every service during the month of December.

Brother A. T. Wirick, who begins a two weeks' meeting at more, Indiana, on November 29th, and will be assisted by Mrs. Harry Richer, says: "We ask the prayers of the Brethren in the behalf of this effort."

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor of the church at Cambridge, Nebraska, informs us that his wife underwent a major operation on November 14th and is getting along quite well, but we request the prayers of the brotherhood for her recovery.

Pray that God may give sustaining grace to Sister L. M. Nedy, the death of whose husband Brother McClain, secretary of the Foreign Board, announces on first page of this paper.

"O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go"

By H. H. Smith

Teacher once said: "An extemporaneous preacher, with deep emotion, is in danger of making expositions; but when I try to preach on God's love to men never afraid of exaggerating."

And, it would be difficult for one to use stronger language than the Bible does in describing the love of God for mankind. Speaking of the love for Israel, Jeremiah said these words: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; and with loving-kindness I have drawn thee." And Hosea said: "How shall I cry out in behalf of his children: 'How shall I bring up, Ephraim? How shall I bring thee, Israel? How shall I bring thee as Admah? How shall I bring thee as Zeboim? Mine iniquity is turned within me, my iniquities are kindled to me, who had a clearer revelation of the love of God than any prophets of old, dwelling on the redeeming love in Jesus was constrained to say: 'I will separate us from the Christ, shall tribulation, or persecution, or fam- ing nakedness, or peril, or As it is written, for thy are killed all the day long; accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For he has persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The memorable verse, John 3:16 shows how God gives expression to his immeasurable love: 'For so loved the world, that his only begotten Son, whomsoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

And he speaks of himself as a Father and that helps us understand his love for the world. How can we love the unlovely? A man once said to the writer: "I was trying to enforce the law that God loves even the unlovely men: 'God has no business punishing a man like me.' And in which he spoke implied: "I would think less of any Deity who should love a man such as I." Who can understand or fathom the love of God? Who can understand a mother's love? A preacher recently wrote: "I hold in my hand a picture of a little shack outside the walls of the State Penitentiary at Fort Madison. It is a shack occupied by the mother of a son in the penitentiary for life. She has gone as close to him as she can possibly get and pitched her tent there, saying, 'I'll be waiting, if he ever comes out.'"

The prisoners in one of our Southern prisons were being remembered by their loved ones at home just before the Christmas holidays, and many nice boxes were received containing turkey, fruit cake, cigars, confectionaries, etc. But there was one very pathetic case where a small paste-board box contained all that a poor widow had to send to her unfortunate son. The box contained a little home-made sausage, some walnuts, and a limited amount of confectioneries. In this box was a letter which came to the notice of a Christian worker at the prison. It read as follows:

"My own dearest son' ('dearest,' mark you; she had others who had never disgraced her, but he was the dearest). 'I write today to send this little mite, that seems so stingy, from my pay, but the cashier did not pay me off until near 12 o'clock last night, and then it was too late. I do feel so badly today. They work us so hard, twelve hours every night. Last night I roasted four chickens, boiled three large lobsters, baked two large pans of beans, made forty-nine pies, besides doing the short-order cooking, and all my cleaning, so you see that I am not idle. . . . One reason that I feel so badly, dear, I am growing old. . . . Remember that no one loves you like I do. . . . We must never let B— nor S— know of our secret, for you will never do wrong again, will you, my darling? I wish I could send you more. God keep you until we meet.

"I love you, I love you, I love you.' Mother."

Can any love surpass that? Yes, the love of God: "When my father and my mother forsake me, then will the Lord take me up." George Matheson, the author

THE WONDERFUL LOVE OF GOD *

By Charles F. Yoder

*A little boy was digging
A well beside the sea,
And as the waves o'erflowed it,
He shouted in his glee.
The love of God is like to that;
It fills us o'er and o'er.
However great our wells may be,
'Tis more, and more, and more.*

*A mother hen, all cold in death,
Was sitting on her brood.
Without a flutter she had died,
—A weasel sucked her blood.
The love of God is like to that;
The pangs of death it bore.
It is instinctive mother love,
And more, and more, and more.*

*A wayward son once fled from home,
To live in sin and shame.
The father sought from town to town,
Till to his son he came.
The love of God is like to that;
It seeks from door to door.
It is a faithful father's love,
And more, and more, and more.*

*Once Damon pledged for Pythias,
—A friend to save a friend,
And his example shall be told
Until the world shall end.
The love of God is like to that;
It would our life restore.
He calls us to be friends with him,
And more, and more, and more.*

*Once Mary poured her precious nard
Upon the Savior's head.
Her love gave her the faith to know
His rising from the dead.
The love of God is like to that;
It leads him still to pour
In faith his nard of grace on men,
And more, and more, and more.*

*And so, inspired by love divine,
There is a Christian band,
Who testify of God's great love
To every race and land.
They give their all to tell of him
Whom they in love adore.
The love of God is like to that,
And more, and more, and more.*

*We search in vain through all the world
To understand true love.
'Tis not the gift of human kind;
It comes from God above.
And when we find the greatest love
Of all that's gone before,
The love of God is like to that,
And more, and more, and more.*

* Suggested by a sermon at National Conference by R. D. Barnard.

of several books of deep spiritual insight, voices the love of God most impressively in his great hymn:

"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee:
I give Thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

"O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to Thee:
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in Thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

"O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to Thee:
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from Thee:
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red Life that shall endless be."

The Grace and Nature of Thanksgiving

By L. G. Wood

(Digest of a sermon delivered at the Union Thanksgiving Service at Fort Scott, Kansas)

Text: But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. 15:57.

Thanksgiving is an American institution and represents a grace which our people do not enter into as they should. A teacher of a class of little tots asked for the meaning of Thanksgiving. A little boy answered: "Eating turkey." Are there not too many older tots who act out a similar definition of its meaning?

Our feet are in the past, but let us reserve our faces, our hearts and our hands for the future. There is grace in remembering how the Lord has led and directed our nation; there is also grace in forgetting many of the experiences of our past, and looking to a brighter future.

The best use we can make of the past is to get a great future out of it and the Christian attitude toward the world's three dates should be: for the past, REVERENCE; for the present, DILIGENCE; for the future, HOPEFULNESS.

Memorials and Anniversaries have always been found with God's people; some times it has been a feast, sometimes a fast; sometimes a pillar of stone. But in his providence he has given us a more sacred one than these,—it is a DAY. What is more sacred to man than time?

From that little group of worshipers in 1621, we have grown to a mighty world power, but we must still acknowledge our indebtedness to the same All-wise Beneficence.

The Pilgrims were not seeking world power: but there was a loyal, devout spirit aboard the Mayflower that contained the elements of a heavenly citizenship, furnishing a foundation to make this God's country.

What is the difference between North and South America? It may be described in a brief sentence: South America was settled by men seeking gold, while North America was settled by men seeking God. Is it gold, or God with us today?

Love cannot rule in the hearts of men who see rich themselves by the impoverishment of their men. Peace will not reign where the spirit of God is not the leading passion.

Ours is a great age; we are continually finding uses for the laws of nature. We are bringing light and voice from the clouds. We have entered conversation with the whole world. We cross the ocean in a few days, and go from New York to San Francisco from dawn to dark. But do we disembark from the ship or the Zeppelin to undertake a greater task than the unemotional folk who crossed the ocean in a hundred years and effected an uncomfortable disembarkation from the Mayflower?

We grow great crops, and build great cities, roads, ships and canals, BUT DO WE GROW GREAT MEN?

Have we allowed the vision of our national greatness to blind us to the supreme importance of the citizenship? We had better turn our backs upon all prosperity than to fail of the grace of Thanksgiving and forget God.

That "get even" spirit can not abide in the heart that is responding to the grace of thanksgiving. Happiness is never so beautiful as when forgiving or asking forgiveness.

Our day is calling for moral courage on the part of men and women, to stand out for the things of real value, to live above the destructive things that attempt to invade the church and the spiritual life.

The modern dance, card playing, the desecration of Lord's Day, with all forms of gambling and the meaningless fashions of men and women—these are destructive to the virtue of life, to the sanctity of the home, to the spiritual power of the church and to the making of a good record for our nation.

"We are living, we are dwelling, in a grand and noble time;

In an age on ages telling, to be living is sublime.
"O let all the soul within you for the truth's sake abroad;

Strike! let every nerve and sinew, tell on ages;
God."

Every object of Thanksgiving carries with it a great responsibility. The LORD had given us a goodly heritage, a peerless domain, rich in every material resource.

Virgin forests, untouched by the hand of the ax, teeming with animals given for our food and clothing; smiling, rippling rivers and tranquil lakes gorged with fish for our suppers; fertile prairies, enriched by the decay of their own verdure for centuries, awaiting the coming of the harvester; towering mountains that had kept their precious treasures from the beginning—waiting the coming of the men of the blood of the covenant and the Angles who were to found the greatest nation on all the world.

A new government he created, one "of the people, by the people, and for the people." A new idea of citizenship that gave freedom of conscience to every man, as long since intended. New methods of encouragement, discovery and industry, and our nation leaped and bounds, until, under the blessing of God, it leads all nations toward peace and prosperity.

We greet our sun as he rises from the water of the Atlantic, and bid him good-night as he sinks beneath the waves of the Pacific. Our finger-tips are up against the everlasting snows of Alaska and our feet are bathed in the coral reefs of the Mexican Gulf.

have come institutions of civil government that stood the test of time and the shock of arms and proved worthy and enduring. For such institutions we render our thanks to God.

It is very fitting that we, representing several Christian denominations, differing in some things, yet united, should come together at this Altar, at this early hour, to offer our united thanksgiving to our Master. With a platform broad enough upon which all can stand, and join hands and voices in singing: "I will be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian union," her history has none of those horrible pages, which might make her sons and daughters ashamed. She has been perfect; human frailties and prejudices have not marred her course, but she has arisen to meet every crisis.

Her young spirit did not falter in 1776. Her noblest qualities prevailed in 1865. Her unselfishness was manifest in 1898. Her courage, determination and generosity were shown in 1914-1918, since which her benevolence has won the admiration of the world.

Let us thank God for the Eighteenth Amendment, and for the nineteenth amendment to back up the first. The liquor business has now been given its place by Prohibition laws, throughout our nation with over 122 million population and nearly 3 million square miles, largely because I am persuaded it is going to remain so.

Let us thank God for the faith of our fathers, and for those who suffered and labored to give us the heritage of an invincible faith.

May we thank God for an open Bible and the liberty which it gives him according to the dictates of our own conscience.

When our fleet took charge of Manila and raised the flag, a native, who was a Christian, came to the American headquarters and asked the general if he might have the Bible to his family. The American general took the Bible across the room to an open window and, pointing to the American flag on the building, said: "Just as long as the flag is floating there you can go on your house-top, and desire, and read the Bible as long and as loud as you please."

May we thank him for our flag, which means to all of us that this country is a cradle of liberty, a city of refuge, an open door of opportunity, and the golden gate to a better life.

May we thank him for the homes of our land. No man can rise above her hearth-stone. May our homes be pure and kept inviolate, and the center of all that is good and holiest.

May we thank him that the Dove of Peace has remained in our window throughout another year, and that the OW with her olive branch of Peace hovering over the altars of ninety percent of the civilized peoples of the world.

There are some beautiful Christmas cards being printed in which are the following lines: "Nineteen hundred and thirty years ago the heavens greeted mankind with the cry, Peace on earth, goodwill to men! Those who have been looked upon as a promise. Today they are accepted as in fact a challenge, and the nations of the world have answered, we RENOUNCE WAR AS AN ELEMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY—and agree that the element of conflicts shall never be sought except by peaceful means."

May we thank him, that there are many, and increasing evidences of a return to normal conditions in the world. Let us meet these conditions with supreme confidence in our God and an increasing respect and confidence for our fellowman.

Then let us face the new year with the Old Book. Let us face the new needs with the Old Promise. Let us face the new problems with the Old Faith. Let us face the new diseases with the Old Remedies.

So whether we think of spiritual possessions, material prosperity, civil or religious blessings, surely "our cup runneth over." But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

With every rising of the sun,
Think of your life as just begun.

The past has canceled and buried deep
All yesterdays. There let them sleep.

Concern yourself with but today,
Grasp it, and teach it to obey

Your will and plan. Since time began Today has been the friend of man.

* You and Today; a soul sublime
And the great heritage of time.

With God himself to bind the twain, Go forth, brave heart; Attain! Attain!

The Holy City

By Thomas Gibson

"Walk about Zion, and go round about her, tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces" (Psalm 48:12-13). For what purpose? Was it that they might behold her splendor, magnificence and glory? Was it that they might behold the city "beautiful for situation; the joy of the whole earth"? It was all of that, and much more. It was because she was destined to destruction, and the Lord wanted them to be able "to tell it to the generations following." Down through the ages until time should be no more. God was not only interested in the people of David's day. Nor is he only interested in the people of this day and age. But he is intensely interested in the unborn generations. God is as much interested in the salvation of those who will be born a thousand years hence, if Jesus does not come before that time, as he was in the salvation of Adam. And he made provision for his salvation away back in some remote periods of eternity.

"The promise is to you and your children, and to as many as are afar off." The Father and Son, who was with him from all eternity, entered into a covenant relating to the redemption of man, before he created man, or made this beautiful world for man to live in. Being infinite in wisdom and fore-knowledge, he knows now who among those that will be born a thousand years hence, will accept or reject Christ. But such wisdom and fore-knowledge are too profound for the finite mind. Paul says, "We were chosen in him before times eternal." The Father, seeing the tragedy of the cross from all eternity, speaks through his servant Peter, of Christ, "As the Lamb of God slain before the foundation of the world."

Our vision of things eternal as very indistinct. "We are looking through a glass darkly." But then "face to face." "We shall know as we are known. Never more to walk alone, in the dawning of the morning, when the mists have rolled away."

Let us not get confused about the difference between fore-knowledge and fore-ordination. God does not fore-ordain everything that comes to pass. He does not select some to be saved, and some to be lost. "God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but (wills all men) to come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved." "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," said Jesus. What good would it be to preach the gospel to every creature, if some creatures were destined to be lost? "In a great house there are not only vessels of gold, and silver, but also of wood, and of earth, and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man purge himself from these (the things that defile him) he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work" (II Tim. 2:20). Man is master of his own destiny. He can be a vessel of honor, or a vessel of dishonor, just as he chooses. God does not fill any vessels with wrath, and fit them to destruction (Rom. 9:22). That is the work of Satan, to fill a soul with wrath, and fit it for destruction (I Peter 2:8).

When Lucifer was cast out of heaven, because he presumed to "exalt his throne" above the stars of God; because he said, "I will be like the Most High," he was "brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit" (Isa. 14:12-15). And, to get revenge, he came down to this world and beguiled, tempted, deceived, seduced and alienated the affections of our first parents from their Creator, and planted in their bosoms wrath and hatred for their Creator. "The carnal mind which is enmity, hatred against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be" (Rom. 8:7). Every unregenerated soul hates God. Satan has poisoned the minds of the human race against their Creator, Preserver and Benefactor.

But, thanks be to God, there is "a balm in Gilead for every ill that human flesh is heir to" (Jer. 46:11). The blood, the blood, "the soul-cleansing blood of the Lamb," which shall never lose its efficacy until all "the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion, the heavenly Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. 35:10). Then Jesus "shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied" (Isa. 53:11). From a finite point of view, he will be abundantly remunerated, amply repaid, for his supreme atonement and redeeming sacrifice, when he sees "his eternal inheritance, the saints of God" (Eph. 1:18), which the Father will give to him. When they will be gathered around the throne, he will point with pride and admiration, and say, "These are they, Father, which thou hast given me. I have lost none but the son of perdition, that the scriptures might be fulfilled."

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

II. The Purpose of Prophecy

It was Moody who used to say that the devil does not want people to study the prophecies. Such study is not good for his business. And he has enlisted many teachers of the Word to aid him in his propaganda against the prophecies. They say, "It is not good for us to know the future." And they quote Scripture. "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath placed in his own power" (Acts 1:7).

This is Satan's way of quoting Scripture to with a half-truth. Granted that it is not well to know the day of death. It is well to know that "it is appointed unto men once to die and after that the judgment" (Heb. 9:27). Granted that it is not best to know the hour of the coming of the Lord. It is well to know he is coming and that certain signs will indicate the event is near. But let us permit the Scripture to tell us the purpose of prophecy and the value of heeding the prophetic word.

1. Prophecy has provided a star of hope for man race. The promise to the woman that her seed would bruise the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15) was very valuable. The fulfillment has been a long time in coming, but it has been a comfort and an inspiration to mother Eve, and to all who have since claimed when Cain was born, "I have gotten a son from the Lord!" It has been an inspiration to every generation. The Old Testament prophets reiterated the promise in many forms. "The Desire of all nations shall come" (Hag. 2:7), and the New Testament closes with the constant prayer of all who love the Lord "Thy kingdom come, Lord Jesus."

Perhaps that statement is too strong, for there are many true and faithful Christians who do not expect to see the Lord until the final judgment. One of our beloved fellow workers remarked, "I am concerned about my present duty, and not about the future." I can agree with that without for a moment losing sight of the blessed hope of the glorious coming of the Lord, which hope gives to the prophecies a vivid and practical interest, for they are all related to that great event. The fanatics who dress in white robes, waiting to be caught up, should not be allowed to rob us of one of the most precious teachings of the Bible.

2. Prophecy is a proof of inspiration. "When the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the word be known that the Lord hath truly sent him" (Jer. 23:18). Only the Lord has sufficient knowledge to inspire the predictions of distant events. We find scores of such predictions in the Bible and therefore know that the Word of God, and that what it says of other things, is true.

3. The prophecies give a powerful argument for the wicked of their evil ways. There is no nature more fixed and true than this, that what a man soweth, that shall he also reap. This was the message of the prophets to men and to nations, and it has confirmed their words. Our preaching of this law can be clinched by a multitude of illustrations from the prophecies. Read Deut. 29:22-29.

4. The prophecies give us an added motive for faith and confidence in God. Ben-hadad y Ben-hassi stood before the wailing wall of Jerusalem. Ben-hadad wept; Ben-hassi laughed. "Why do you weep?" said Ben-hassi. "I see the ruins of our beloved city," said Ben-hadad. "Why do you laugh?" "I laugh," said Ben-hassi, "because I see that if God will so exactly fulfill his threats, he will also fulfill his promises."

"And it shall come to pass, that like as I have overthrown them, to pluck up and to break down, so will I overthrow them to build and to plant, saith the Lord" (Jer. 31:28).

5. The prophecies (once understood) are a guide to the understanding of current events. Of course, the events are not specified in detail, but there are goals announced in prophecy, and the stream of events moves in the direction of these goals. Current events are the straws which show the direction of the stream.

rapids and the shoals, the winding curves and quiet s, faith keeps in view the shining goals. Daniel, the of God, by a study of the prophecy of Jeremiah, v that the time for return from captivity was at hand
. 29:10; Dan. 9:2). "So likewise when ye see these gs come to pass know ye that the kingdom of God is at hand" (Lk. 21:31).

The prophecies throw constant light upon life's du-
They reveal the working out of God's moral laws.
are more reliable than our senses, more trustworthy our reason. Peter, after referring to his vision of transfiguration, says, "We have also a more sure of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take , as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts" (2 1:19).

Finally, the blessing pronounced upon the study of relation applies in principle to all the prophecies.
ssed is he that readeth and they that hear the words his prophecy, and keep those things that are written in; for the time is at hand" (Rev. 1:3).

is blessing includes the communion with Christ in study of his Word (Rev. 2:1), the guidance of the Spirit (Jn. 16:13), the increase of faith (Rom. 10:
the opening of the door of truth by the key of obedience (John 7:17), the fellowship of the wise (Dan. 12:
an aid to holiness (Tit. 2:12, 13), and a constant continuation of the promises of the Lord (John 14:29).

Among all the disciples of Christ it seems that only Mary, the sister of Martha, understood that Jesus would die and rise again, but after the resurrection, Jesus, in talking to the disciples, "began at Moses and all the scriptures" and expounded the things concerning himself (Lk. 24:27), and their writings are full of citations of prophecies fulfilled. Surely it is worth while for us to also study with Moses and all the prophets to learn the things concerning our blessed Lord which must yet come to pass.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"DISARM OR CRASH"—SAYS LLOYD GEORGE

When Lloyd George speaks or writes it is worth while to listen to him. In the first place he has had experience. In the second place he has dealt with big things—the very biggest things there are. In the third place, he has no fear. Fourth, he is a man of vision; and above all he has a prophetic imagination. "Disarm or crash" is his message set forth in a copy-righted article in several American papers. I was very much stirred by this article. After seeing how thirty European nations are crowded together in less space than that of the United States, and that they are torn by wars, their backs breaking under taxation, he says that they must reform their ways soon or face chaotic break-up. The war has run into billions—possibly a hundred billion.

In the face of these facts," says the great Englishman, "it is not surprising that the economic conditions of Europe have grown of themselves thoroughly unhealthy. The trouble has been gathering head since the World War left Europe worn out, impoverished, and burdened by huge debts. Country after country had staggered on the brink of the abyss, and been pulled back by the efforts of the League of Nations, and the financial aid of the United States and Great Britain. France only lent for purposes of increasing the burden of her allies in Central Europe. But the burden of the economic tariff warfare, the nervous piling up of armaments, have stood in the way of any permanent recovery, and have ultimately forced on a general collapse. In one country after another banks have been crashing, national budgets have shown deficits, industrial activity has dwindled, unemployment has increased, and nations are facing the dark menace of bankruptcy." After thus reviewing the dismal condition of the nations, brought about by wars past, present, and contemplated, he closes his remarkable and awakening article with the words:

"Can they agree together to lay aside their arms? If so there is hope for Europe, and the world."

Warning words, prophetic words, words of wisdom to the wise.

NATIONAL GRANGE OPPOSES BEER

The National Grange is opposed to modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and wine. The demand for reopening of the breweries as a means of bringing relief to the farmer does not come from the farmer. The Grange makes this very emphatic.

National Master Louis J. Taber says that the Grange predicts that instead of producing a tonic for the farmer, resumption of brewing would be detrimental to agriculture through harm done the dairy, poultry, soft drinks and confectionery industries. The Grange counts upward of 800,000 members recruited from every state.

Mr. Taber said that facts disclosed in studies made by the Grange show conclusively that the resumption of the brewing industry in the United States would be detrimental to the interests of agriculture. He cited an increase of 242.7 pounds per capita in consumption of dairy products between 1917 and 1929 and added
"this resulted in production of 10,067,000 pounds of grains, thrice the amount used in making fermental liquors in 1917."

Agriculture, the Grange held, "would sustain a tremendous loss and one which it could ill afford to bear" if consumption of dairy and poultry products should fall to saloon-day levels because of resumption of brewing.—The American Issue.

DEAN INGE SEES FALL OF EMPIRE

But Race Will Survive and Spiritual Bonds to England Continue

The end of the British Empire was foreseen by Dean Inge of St.
Paul's Cathedral in a lecture on the fate of empires at University College of North Wales in Bangor. After discussing the fall of the Roman and Spanish empires, Dean Inge said he believed the period of the expansion of the British Empire has come to an end.

"The profligate expenditures of the World War has reduced the richest nation of the world to the verge of bankruptcy and deep humiliation. Although I don't wish to take a pessimistic view altogether, I am afraid our part as a world power is approaching its end. We have been good enough, with some luck, to achieve a wonderful position in the world but I am afraid we are not good enough to keep it.

"Historians may say the last world empire was the greatest and most beneficent to mankind the world has ever seen. We will continue to be a great nation if we keep true to our ideals and, whether the nations speaking our language and living largely under our traditions remain under our flag or not, I think they will regard England, as we ourselves regard countries like Palestine and Greece, as their spiritual home.

"Therefore I do not view the end in a depressing frame of mind.
I think our empire, in the old sense, is coming to an end but our race is not, and what is worth keeping is in our own hands, especially in the hands of the younger generation, to make or mar."—
The Baptist.

A MILLION DIMES IN A SILVER-WINGED FLIGHT

Three tons of dimes will descend on the Capital on November 30 and immediately thereafter as a million or more Drys send a million or more dimes, amounting to $100,000, to match the same amount given by only three wet millionaires to an anti-prohibition association.

This popular demonstration of Dry strength will be made through the medium of a million coin cards previously distributed throughout the nation. Every State has requested them, and individual churches have asked for as many as 1,000 coin cards. Many other groups also have asked for them. With the coin cards go self-addressed envelopes in which the cards, containing the dimes, will be sent to Washington.

One State alone has requested 240,000 coin cards! The success of the plan now will be measured only by the physical capacity to distribute coin cards beyond the million mark, the first million already being assured of distribution. These coin-cards may be procured in lots of ten or more by writing National Prohibition Board of Strategy, 1140 National Press Building, Washington, D. C.

Teachers of Girls

By Amanda Fahnestock

The general laws of Sunday school pedagogy, and most of the qualifications necessary for good teaching and exerting of proper influence, apply to all teachers alike. The necessity for considering this subject apart from that of teachers in general may not at first be apparent. When, however, we note the difference in temperament and general make-up between the sexes, and consider how different is their position in society, and their calling in life, the necessity for the special training of each will be clearly seen.

Our Girls

Our girls are the future mothers of the race. They will be among the teachers, home-makers and social workers. It is likely they will also have a direct voice in the making and enforcing of the civil and moral laws of the State and Nation. They will continue to work in and to influence the business and commercial world. In short, they are destined to occupy a prominent, as well as a very vital, place in human affairs.

In view of these facts it is not difficult to recognize the great need of their being well equipped for the service they must render to society. Since this service will depend largely upon the character of their religious life, we must see to it that their spiritual, as well as their physical and intellectual being, is developed.

The Sunday school and the Sunday school teacher occupy a unique place in the training of girls for Christian service. That they may be properly trained it is necessary that they have the best teachers that can be secured.

Who Shall be Their Teachers?

Whenever possible the teachers of girls in the Sunday school should be women.

There is in woman a certain reflex power for elevating others, which peculiarly fits her to be a teacher of her own sex. No one can come into such close touch with a girl's life, and influence it for good, as a godly woman. Having herself been a girl, she knows by experience what are the things that tempt her to evil, and those that influence her for good. She is on this account better able to sympathize with and to direct her than is a teacher of the sterner sex.

Then, too, subjects should be discussed in girls' classes that only a woman can with propriety discuss with women. Girls are so constituted that they resent what is termed "plain talk" when it comes from one of the opposite sex.

We do not wish to be understood as saying that a man can not successfully teach a girls' class, for some men have done so. But man naturally is for the strong and staunch; woman for the finer things of life. This difference is not always recognized by male teachers of girls' classes, with the result that girls sometimes become masculine in manner under their tuition, and do not develop the womanly qualities so essential to the making of a true woman.

The Teacher's Character

Ruskin says, "What you can effect depends upon what you are." This being true, the teacher must have her Christian character firmly established. Because of their inclination to criticize their own sex, girls are quick to detect any flaw in the character, or any inconsistency in the manner of life, of their teacher.

Among the many traits of character which all teachers should possess, are a few which are absolutely essential to a teacher of girls.

She must be simple in her manner, and neat and modest in her dress.

She must be full of sympathy, ever ready to help unravel and remove the little perplexities and difficulties that her girls will bring to her when once they are assured that she is their true friend.

She must be industrious. An indolent, or ease-loving woman will not make a good teacher for girls in this age of amusements and pleasure-seeking.

She must have self-control. The value of this quality in a teacher of girls can not be overestimated. To be calm and self-possessed at all times is indeed a rare virtue. It is one that every teacher should covet for herself, and should try to instil into the character of her girls.

She must be open to truth, whatever its source, and never be satisfied with her present attainments.

She must have a heart full of love, first for Jesus Christ, then for her girls.

By the commission given to Peter, as stated in John 21:15-17, Jesus plainly shows who are qualified to be the teachers and guardians of his lambs and sheep.

Love is the chief attraction in a girls' class. It reaches every girl alike. The teacher who really loves her girls will find them loving her in turn, thus enabling her more successfully to mold their characters and shape their lives. The teacher who does not love will also be lacking in patience, forgiveness, and altruism—three traits that are indispensable to the true teacher.

Three Things She Must Know

1. She must know girls.

She will learn to know girls only by associating with and studying them, both as individuals and in groups. The wise teacher will allow no opportunity for such association and study to pass unimproved, for she must acquaint herself with the things that make for girls. She must know the inclinations, the habits, the strong qualities and the weaknesses of each girl, in order that she may study the needs and be able to apply to each the moral instruction which her nature demands. She should also know their manner of life, and their home surroundings, that she may be better able to sympathize with and help them.

2. She must know her subject.

In the public school and colleges teachers are expected to have a thorough knowledge of the subjects they are required to teach. The same should be expected of the teachers in the Sunday school, where the Word of God, the Bible, is taught. But unfortunately this is not the case, and the number of teachers who really know their Bible is comparatively small. It is a burning shame that so many Sunday school teachers are content with almost no knowledge of the Bible. Book they attempt to teach. The great majority of our teachers are slaves to Sunday school quarterlies and lesson helps, and willing to take at second-hand what they have their high privilege to discover for themselves. The need for Bible study on the part of Sunday school teachers was greater than in this age of biblical research, investigation and criticism. Let us be an awakening, therefore, along this line and let no teacher be satisfied until she has pursued and completed a systematic course in Bible study.

3. She must know how to impart knowledge.

For the majority of teachers this is most difficult thing in the teaching process to do well. She must therefore acquaint herself with the best methods of teaching. She should, first of all, let Jesus be her Teacher, for no man ever used such methods as he. Truly, Jesus was the perfect Teacher, and yet how few teachers know his methods at first hand! She will discover many good books, in which the best methods of teaching are presented and discussed, which she will find very helpful, but she must be able to decide for herself whether or not these methods are desirable for use in her class. Not every teacher can employ the same methods successfully; and all methods alike suited to every age and capacity of the pupils. The age and capacity of the pupils must modify the methods used.

The thoughtful teacher who knows her girls, and is master of her subject, will be able to devise good methods for imparting to them that which she would like them know.

Self-Culture

The Sunday school teacher is usually a busy woman, having other duties of great importance to her work as a teacher. It is difficult for her to find time for self-culture she so much needs.

To do this she must learn to use her spare moments. If even the shortest interval of possible action be improved, astonishing how much can be accomplished. Many of our great men and women, that they have obtained much of their education by the careful use of the fragments of time called odd moments.

The teacher who would succeed must find time for self-culture. She should employ every means available for self-improvement. This may be done in various ways, in pursuing a course of reading, or enrolling in a systematic course of general instruction. Keeping a journal in which to record able suggestions from other teachers, that she has derived from books, clippings, stories, and other useful material, will found a very valuable means for self-culture.

Whenever possible she should attend Sunday school conventions and teacher conferences. There is no better way to gain inspiration for her work, and to gather material for self-improvement, than to attend these gatherings. Other methods will suggest themselves to the teacher who really wishes to improve.

Introductory Note

Acts close abruptly with Paul's first imprisonment, probably A.D. 61-63. Re- it is thought that the apostle visited at Ephesus and Titus in Crete, and went to Spain; that on a second journey to Greece and Asia he wrote First Timothy and Titus, and was again arrested and to Rome, writing Second Timothy and his second imprisonment.

Paul was probably arrested on some connected with the terrible persecu- Nero in A.D. 64. The immediate of this letter is to beg Timothy to Ephesus and come to Rome with to comfort the apostle. It is "the ouching of all the Pauline writings." before Timothy could reach him, the apostle was beheaded.

Timothy and Paul. Timothy, born prob- Lystra, Asia Minor, was converted l, most likely in his first missionary y. He went with Paul to Europe on ond missionary journey, and was the 's comrade and helper for the rest of , becoming like a son to him, join- the salutations of many of his Epis- bors with him during the three at Ephesus, and finally sharing his nprisonment. After Paul's release y was placed in charge of the impor- urch at Ephesus, and worked there own martyrdom under Domitian (be- D. 96) or Trajan (A.D. 109). ### Some Outstanding Truths ly great characters accomplish great Paul laid the foundation for a great the preparation he made. But for ervention of God he would have his fine power in fortifying the Jews e securely in their narrow bigotry. soon however, as he was freed from ecame a world figure, taking the orld into his plans, and set himself mpish them. Probably no other cept Jesus himself, came so near ac- ing the whole aim of his life as death has no terrors for the Chris- e extreme penalty the state knows e on law-breakers is the death pen- nd it must be admitted that men oved by no other punishment be- y serious when such a penalty is eed upon them. Men have a natural f death. But there is no terror of e Christian. Christ has robbed sting and victory through his res- and the promise that because he shall live also.

is a supreme comfort to have the of self and God. Many approve themselves, but not with a good conscience. Others close their eyes to the glaring fail- ures in their lives. They are few who frankly confess their faults and sins openly and penitently, with an honest desire to be and do better. The great majority measure themselves by the world's standards, and proclaim themselves as good as others, and rest at that. But the standards of a good conscience and God are different from those of the world, and he is happy indeed who has the approval of these.

4. The Christian's reward is assured. It is a crown of righteousness and life, con- ferred by the "Lord, the righteous Judge," and "reserved in heaven for us." No hon- est and faithful contestant who finishes the course and keeps the faith will fail to re- ceive it. True, many will doubtless remain uncrowned, but through no fault of God. Many merely beat the air, while others sit idly by when others are competing for the prize.

5. Things of the world attract most peo- ple. These led to the defection of Demas and they have proved the downfall of my- riads since then. It seems hard for many people to weigh the reality of the spiritual against the material world about them. And yet in their best hours they do it. No hon- est man would exchange his good name for gold, and no natural father would betray the love of his child for fame. These things for which the world has no price men esteem and defend with their lives but the spiritual of which these are some of the outcroppings, they do not seem to grasp.

6. Only real friends support us in ad- versity. It is astounding how "lightly friendship sets" on so many who profess to be our friends. How little they can be de- pended upon! The first sign of misfortune causes them to vanish like snow before a summer sun. They are not friends, only ac- quaintances. Only a very, very few will pass with you through all the afflictions and ca- lamities of life and count it a privilege to have been permitted to do it. Those are your friends.—Otterbein Teacher.

The Good Fight

A clever American writer has suggested that all men are by nature either maintain- ers of the old or discoverers of the new. In an old New England home one brother was happily contented to go on with life on the farm where he was born; the other felt an urge which carried him off to the West. Paul may have had wistful moments when he felt the appeal to "stay at home, my heart, and rest; home keeping hearts are hap- piest"; but his characteristic mood was that of the eager and dauntless pioneer. Some- thing which Tennyson put into that famous poem "Ulysses" was in the very blood of Paul. Long centuries before the time of Robert Browning he could have written: "I was ever a fighter, so one fight more." In fact he did write: "I have fought the good fight." Centuries before the time of Wil- liam James he could have written: "I have found a moral equivalent for war."

Not many men have fought so success- fully against such terrible odds as did the apostle Paul. Chrysostom, dying in distant exile; Hildebrand, who became Pope Gre- gory VII and died saying, "I have loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore I died in exile"; David Livingstone alone on his knees in the heart of Africa when the summons came; and other courageous and potent Christian leaders might also have declared "I have fought the good fight."—Lynn Harold Hough.

More Christ in Christian Endeavor

By Leslie Lindower

(An address at the recent Pennsylvania district conference. Published in two parts. Part I.)

Rev. 3:8—I know thy works (behold I have set before thee a door opened, which none can shut) that thou hast a little power, and didst keep my word, and didst not deny my name.

Although the primary interpretation of these words taken from the picture of the glorified Lord in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, the seven churches, applies historically to the period of the great re- vival of the eighteenth and nineteenth cen- turies, the spiritual truth has always been the same—those who fulfill the three con- ditions of the verse in their service for the Lord, he prospers by spiritual blessings and opens doors of service. In the present day the Brethren church seems to be a body of people whom this picture fits. The Breth- ren Church has a little power,—she is tak- ing forward steps on the mission fields and in her home work in the face of the op- posite in relation to other denominations. The Brethren Church is keeping the Word of her Lord, especially that of the Great Commission as given in Matt. 28:19-20—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things, what- soever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." The Brethren Church has not denied the name of her Lord, but is conspicuous to- day in the face of modernism in proclaim- ing the deity of Christ.

There have been those of Christ's ser- vants, who having not fulfilled these condi- tions and the opportunities given them in open doors of service, have had the doors closed and have been rejected as far as their service is concerned, by the Lord who is watching over his people today. The Y. M. C. A. is an example of this. How much dif- ferent the work of the Y. M. C. A. of today from its original service of praying and working for the salvation of souls. The Young People's organizations of many churches are drifting the same way the Y. M. C. A. has gone.

If C. E. is for Christ and the Church, and if Brethren C. E. is to help in maintaining the enviable position which has been given our denomination Christ must be manifested more and more in its experience and work. Sometimes our C. E. motto has been, if not in word, then in practice, "For our young people," to the extent that it has actually set aside the real one, "For Christ and the Church." True, the C. E. is a young people's organization, but it is not, "For our young people," but "Our young people for Christ and the Church."

There is a lot of talk these days about holding the young people. But the question is, "What are we holding them for?" If we can't hold them for Christ and the Church, then we should let them go. But we can't hold them until they are caught—for Christ. Holding our young people in the church is not a matter of keeping them so entertained that they will forget about all the amusements they are missing out in the world. The young person who must have all the worldly amusements provided for him by the church in order to keep him in the church is not a regenerated Christian and needs the blood of Christ applied to his heart before we should start in to hold him. Besides, the young people have heard so much discussion from the pulpits about "The Problem of Youth and the Church" that they are sick and tired of it, and if they come to church at all, can sleep soundly through it or entertain themselves otherwise until the monotony is finally over.

The first thing, then, that a C. E. must do in order to exercise "More Christ" is to give the testimony of the Gospel of grace to those who are unsaved of its friends and associates. It will endeavor to have a group of young folks who have been born again, and who know it. Such a group of young folks may desire amusement, but they will not engage in unwholesome entertainment, and they will not demand that their recreation be built into their program of service for the Lord, but they can be trusted, with a little encouragement, to furnish proper amusements for themselves.

The Brethren Church is coming more and more to the place where the Bible is being preached and studied. Therefore, its C. E. should be using the Bible more. There has been a question whether or not young people are interested in Bible study. Christian young people are, if that study is outlined and supervised by someone who knows the Bible well enough themselves to bring out and apply the glorious truths of the Word. In fact, if the Bible is made to comment upon itself, and contentions are settled and proved with Scripture the young people are more open-minded in setting aside any erroneous notions that they might have had about the Word, than the older folks are. For example, try to change an old mind which has believed all its life that "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," applies to a Christian, and you will have a big task. But teach the relationship of the Jewish Sabbath to the present Lord's day to a young person, from the Scriptures, and the open mind will accept the truth as the Scripture presents it.

From the Bellevue Station in Africa

Bellevue, A. E. F. Sept. 25, 1931.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

During the months of August and September, there has been an epidemic of influenza at Bellevue, and elsewhere too, from reports that have come to us. The dispensary has been crowded most of the time, many of the patients sleeping on the floor for lack of beds. There is only a limited supply of blankets, too; so many have to sleep without any. A number of the sick have contracted pneumonia, and if you knew how they live, you wouldn't wonder that they do. A woman was sick for a couple of weeks with influenza. She got well and returned home. After a few days she had a relapse. We went to see her and found her on a wet mud floor with a temperature of 105. Her husband had just fixed the hut and poured water on it to pound it hard!

Our hearts were saddened this month to lose one of our faithful Christians. Mangou had influenza and was apparently cured. Then he had a relapse, and in a few days went to be with the Lord. Mangou's tribe, the Dapa, is without a missionary, but he, hearing of the "Good News", came to Bassai about eight years ago and accepted the Gospel. He has been with the mission most of the time since. At the time of his death he was being trained as a chauffeur for Dr.

Gribble, and could already manage the car quite proficiently.

His wife, Yadele, showed herself to be a real Christian at the funeral. She didn't fall on the ground and go into that despairing death wail that most of the women do, even the Christians. But instead she sat by and talked to him and cried as though her heart would break. His last words were that she might stay here and bring up the children to know the Lord.

Occasionally we are made to realize that we are in a "wild" country. The other morning Mr. Sheldon looked out the window and saw a big buffalo just back of our kitchens. He grabbed the gun and one cartridge and ran after the beast. It ran through the concession and across the road. Mr. Sheldon shot it once in the leg but it still had strength to run and he didn't have another cartridge with him so it ran away through the bush and swam the river. Then all trace was lost of it, for it was once again in the tall grass.

Miss Bickel is still at Bassai and probably will be for a few weeks yet. During her absence Miss Patterson is caring for the dispensary.

The burden of our hearts and prayers these days is Brother Kennedy's condition. We do implore the Lord to restore him to health and strength, if this can glorify Name. We need workers so much.

In his Name,
HATTIE C. SHELDO

Leprosy

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

(In response to numerous inquiries Gribble describes the terrible disease of leprosy.)

The dread disease of leprosy has been known for generations. Extremely virulent in the times of Christ, it was most extensive during the Middle Ages. Today, less extensive than formerly, it is yet quite widely in the tropical regions, as in the Antilles, in Oceania, the far North, Norway, and Iceland.

It is also found in an extremely mild form in France, especially in the villages of tany and in the Pyrenees, where it is diagnosed as syringomyelia or paretic. In the streets of Paris today 150 to 200 lepers may be found. The number of lepers in the world, according to Marchoux, the celebrated French authority, is 500,000. This does not include the number of lepers in nomadic tribes of Africa where no census has ever been taken.

The bacillus, or germ of leprosy, appears under the microscope very much like that of tuberculosis. The lesions are even tubercles, or more properly, lepromas.

Human leprosy can be transmitted to other animals. There also exists a form of leprosy which is not transmissible to human beings.

Leprosy is not hereditary but is communicable by contagion. Yet contagion does not take place outside of leprosy hospitals. However, some authentic cases have been produced in England by contact with virulent cases of leprosy.

The pituitary membrane is always inflamed in both potential and latent leprosy. The microbe may then penetrate into the body through an abrasion in the skin. Flies may also transmit the bacillus. The facts, (1) that the unabraded skin is not penetrated, (2) that the microbe of leprosy is extremely fragile, and (3) that it does not tend to destroy cellular tissues, lessens the virulence of leprosy.

There are three forms of leprosy: (1) Tubercular, (2) Anaesthetic, and (3) Erythematous, resulting from a complication of the first two main forms.

In the tubercular form a rose or colored spot forms on the skin of the face and face. This later becomes a hard, pointed papule. These papules do not ulcerate, and are more painful than the lesions of the anaesthetic form. They deform the face and give it an animal-like appearance, known as leontiasis.

These tubercles also produce rhinitis, developing upon the mucous membrane of the nose, and the diseases of the eye as iritis and keratitis.

In the anaesthetic form of leprosy spots frequently form first upon the face. They then form large anaesthetic areas on the extremities like boots or gloves. Lepers are easily burned or wounded without their knowledge. The skin of the face becomes like parchment. The hands become claw-like. The nails and phalanges of the fingers and toes are reduced to mere stumps.

The same condition may co-exist with the tubercular form, the leper thus becoming ss cripple. The spots which form the of leprosy accompanied by the falling eyebrows and eyelashes complete the picture. Lepers in mission lands find the Lord through their sufferings. Many others are among those of whom it is written:

"How shall they hear without a preacher?" Pray for lepers and their missionaries. Pray for those who have as yet no missionaries.

PLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Evangelist Readers:

days ago I received notice that our Brother George Hansen had passed. This name will be familiar to some Brethren who can remember back five years. This was the time when Brother Yoder and family were about to go to South America and referred to was the man whom I had known to Brother C. F. Yoder as a helper to him in a strange land. You people who have read the last book edited by Dr. Yoder will recall the name there mentioned.

Several of our missionaries were well acquainted with Brother Hansen and the same spoke very highly of him as a very kind and helpful man in the field of South America. I am sure that Brother Yoder can describe his work in South America a great deal better than I could, and he may later do so.

Brother Hansen had traveled as a seaman and a very young seaman at that, for he left home when he was fourteen years old, and as a cabin boy went from Norway to England and with the same boat, a sailing vessel, went to the Orient. For several years he sailed from Australia to Africa, China and Japan. During one of the trips to Australia he got in with some missionaries, and at this time he consecrated his life to the Master's service. He began to preach and teach the Word of God to the sailors, in fact, to the whole crew. This was too much, for their roughness and while he was praying they served him with tin cans, shoes, and anything their hands could find. The captain one time said to him, "If you continue preaching the Word of God on this ship I will kill you." However, George had learned to love the Lord and continued to preach as best he could to the individual. He was later released from the ship while in Australia and there joined himself to the missionaries and schooled with them that year. I do not know how long he continued there, if two or three years, but one thing I know, he sailed from Australia to South America and there preached for a while after which he returned to Norway where he began to teach and to preach in different places. He later started a class for those who would learn English. I had a hunger within to go to the United States, because of the way the States were described to us in Norway. There would be the easiest way in the world to shovel gold off the streets. I never found that street yet.

The day came when I had gathered some of my boy friends and we went to break up these class meetings. The reason for our trying this was that the young ladies as well as the men attended and became very religious, and that did not agree with my ideas of a real life. We went to this place four times and did some devilment and the fifth time I was the only one that came. I tried to sneak out but Mr. Hansen saw me and asked me to be seated until the others came. He played and sang. I did not listen to the words or music but was gripped by the expression on his face and it made me of all men most miserable at heart. As he stopped he said, "My young friend, last night, while in prayer, God promised me that you should become a Christian." I told him that this must be a mistake for I had no intention of being one. I told him I will miss too many good things and pleasant times. I tried to excuse myself, but there was an influence without and a terrible war within. Before leaving he knelt beside the sofa, on which I was seated, praying, pouring out his heart unto God. I don't know that he mentioned me at all, but the agony that filled my soul! I went out mad and never intended to return. However, I became sick within my heart so that I could neither eat nor sleep for one week. I was foreman in a chocolate, licorice and candy factory, and those poor people suffered under my superior acts that week. The owner did not like my ways that week but could not discharge me as I was the only one in that country at the time who could design the machinery necessary and make the product to compete with the imported goods. When I went home that Saturday at noon I tried to think over what had transpired during the week. Things did not look so good, but I did not care a bit.

At three o'clock that afternoon I was to meet Mr. George Hansen but I had made up my mind never to go back. Yet I was getting dressed and could not get away from his place. I walked by the place several times. I did not want to go in, yet I was brought back to the same place time after time, and at last I stood still, wondering, trying to find myself. When I did so, I made up my mind to give the thing which had so troubled me a chance. I ran up to the third floor where Mr. Hansen's rooms were and rang his door-bell. He came to the door saying, "Welcome, I have waited for you." I told him, "You remember I told you I would not come back." He smiled saying, "God never fails to complete a work he begins."

When I went into his room he introduced me to a missionary from Dearborn. After we had conversed a while, my teacher turned to me asking, "Have you made up your mind to settle the matter today, Sigurd?" Responding I said, "I have come to find out if there is a God, and if so, and there is a chance for me to be saved; I am here." He said, "Then let us pray." They prayed, and then asked me to pray. I did, then they said now, let us rise and thank God." I said, "No I am not saved and will not rise until I am, or dead in the attempt to be saved." How long after it was I could not tell, but I know that that same afternoon toward supper the cloud rolled away and I could see what I had never seen before, Jesus Christ the Son of the living God as My Savior, I could then say, "Praise the Lord, Brethren Georg and Anders." (The names are spelled in Norwegian.)

I confess no father could be kinder to a son than Brother George Hansen was to me. He was a spiritual father indeed. This is the man who was largely responsible for the Brethren work in Rio Cuarto, South America. I often related the condition there to Brother I. D. Bowman and he and Brother Jacob Cassel became interested in the same field and at the next General Conference the decision was made and Brother C. F. Yoder gave his life for the South American Mission field.

Brother Hansen often said to me, "Sigurd, there is no field blacker and more in need of the Gospel than is the Republic of Argentina. I hope to go there some day."

Brethren, he did; and ought we not praise God for his being there? I am sure our missionaries did and are doing a great work there. Brother George did not want at any time any honor for any work. He often spoke well of our people who went into the land of spiritual darkness.

He is gone and we cannot call him back, but we can prepare as never before to meet the blessed Lord whom he helped me to see. We prepare to meet our blessed Lord by obediently serving him till he comes.

Sister Marie Hansen, the departed's wife, lives in the State of Washington. The address is, Maria Hansen, 303 Fifth Avenue, South Kent, Washington. The two younger children are with her, the two older are married.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Everywhere

This summer has been one of many travels. Indeed, in the past three years, a mileage of more than forty thousand has been added to my speedometer. That means an exposure to many accidents and dangers and we have had some of them. Four accidents this summer, one a most expensive one makes me more cautious and I'll thus pass on my caution to you.

New Jersey

Again our family made their journey to our church at Calvary. Another country-wide mission was conducted which was a great inspiration. Many trips to surrounding churches on various missions this fall have kept me from forgetting my pulpit ambitions and aspirations. Indeed, it is difficult to think of myself as an editor and more so, to think of not doing a good deal of preaching and evangelism with it. One great disappointment of this fall was the cancellation of a revival agreement that left me too much time without ability to use it where I feel it is so much needed—in evangelism.

Johnstown, Pennsylvania

So, when I was called to assist in a Sunday School Institute in this Dunker city, I was quick to assent and glad to go.

More than thirty years ago, I instituted what I believe to have been the first of such Institutes among the Dunker people. Many of them have since been held. There can not be too many. I believe that there could well be one each week in each church—one that would attempt to teach teachers how to teach the lesson for the next Sunday. I believe that each district could also afford to have one each quarter with a preview of the quarter's good things and some particular emphases on the great major doctrines of the series to be studied. Just think what a treat awaited the fine attendance of Sunday school teachers and officers to this program which covered almost every phase of the Adult Sunday school work; Cabinet meeting, Organized Class and the relation of Sunday school and church.

I'll leave to another the report of the attendance which I thought to be very splendid. The speakers all were ready and prepared for the subjects and the faithfulness of the people to the sessions was almost perfect. Such devotion counts.

Funeral

I stayed over a day and mourned with those that mourn, in the funeral of William Crawford, one of our faithful salesmen-preachers. The message of his life to me was that rare thing called friendship—so rare as to be seen so seldom these days, so rare that we remember longest, the names of those who have really been friends.

Frolic

In the evening of the second day, we met in the Annual meeting of the Brethren men of Johnstown's many Brethren and Church of the Brethren peoples. There was near three hundred of them and one could not be told of which group he was by any sign and had it not been for the "sign," there would never have been a separation, perhaps, and now that there is no sign, we have not enough grace of Christianity to recognize that, since the "sign" is not evident, the division should not be—it ought to cease. That was certainly the spirit of the meeting which is voted to be repeated. "How beautiful when brethren dwell together in unity!"

Many More?

I hope there will be many more Institutes for Sunday school betterment in the districts and that they will be a regular thing each year, or better, each quarter. I stand ready to assist in any work I can do in any church at any time. My Sundays and some other times are free for such service.

SEMINARY NOTES

Faculty and students alike appreciated the four African Mission lectures delivered by Dr. F. N. Gribble here at the Seminary the first week in October.

Brother Stuckey conducted a Bible Conference in our Johnstown First church, October 11 to 18 inclusive. At the after periods he dealt with the four Gospels his other messages were doctrinal, devotional and practical.

The writer of these notes took Brother McClain's speaking engagements, which was unable to fulfill because of illness the Pennsylvania District Conference during October in Philadelphia.

It may be of interest to the Pennsylvania people to know that, after expenses deducted from the amounts paid Professor Stuckey and myself for services at two conferences, the remainder will be turned into our Seminary House Rent Fund.

The above remark leads me to say several friends of the Seminary have contributed to the rent fund. How the need still a little exceeds the supply. Brother Miller preached for Brother Christian church pastor of a nearby town, two weeks ago.

Brother McClain was speaker at our Wayne Mission November 1st. Their Homecoming Day was the occasion. He preached Sunday, November 8th, at Canton church in the absence of the pastor, Brother Beal, who was conducting a Conference at Dayton. The following end Brother McClain addressed the Brethren Dayton Conference several times.

While Brother Stewart of Bryan, was conducting a revival in our Columbus Mission Professor Stuckey filled his place one Lord's day and I filled it one week urch was prepared for a revival, e had all things in splendid condition and members were working hard to make it possible to receive blessings from the hand of God. There is a fine group of loyal Brethren people to be found here and they are eager to be used of the Lord.

The weather during the entire meeting was ideal. Almost every night the church was crowded to capacity. Several times we had to ask the children to sit around the pulpit so that room might be had for older ones attending the meetings. There was a general awakening among the church members. Twelve came forward to accept Christ as their Savior. Among this number was a man past 82 years of age. We are sure the Lord was speaking to others and even if they did not surrender during the meetings, they will do so in the next few weeks.

We were made to feel at home with the pastor and his wife and they did not hesi- tate to go out of their way to make us feel comfortable. Almost every day we were in- vited out to a real southern dinner. The hospitality of the people was enjoyed and these three weeks will live on in our mem- ory as three happy weeks.

The people of Tennessee deserve your earnest prayers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

O November 2nd we went to Columbus to help in a revival meeting in what is known as the Cooperative Brethren church. It is the Church of the Brethren and the First Brethren churches combined, and is under the mission boards of both churches. We found this to be a very happy arrange- ment and the cooperation of the brethren is manifesting a beautiful spirit.

We arrived in Columbus on Monday eve- ning for the first service, and for two weeks we preached and visited the members of the church of both groups. Brother George Baer of the Mission Board came on Tues- day and together we called upon the mem- bers of the Brethren people, and the latter part of the week Rev. Coffman and Brother Erbaugh from Dayton, both members of the Mission Board of the Church of the Breth- ren, came and we got into most of the homes of their people. Rev. Murray, pastor of the church, teaches school and could not be with us in all of the calling, but after school hours he was faithful in giving all the assistance possible to make this meeting a success. He spared no time or means and after school hours we were in many homes.

Those who know this work know that the situation is not an ideal one, and those that feel the responsibility have a hard struggle. There are many things that enter in to make it hard. These people are well mean- ing but so few seem to think that the church should be taken seriously and those few are working mighty hard to get the others to see their responsibility. Past leadership has not always been of the high- est type; that has caused this careless spirit on the part of some. Then the situation of the church is not ideal, which makes it hard to draw from other fields. Then there are those who move into the city that feel that their prestige is worth more to them than their church, and they prefer to go to a large church rather than make some sacri- fices that the Brethren church may be made known. There are enough Brethren people in Columbus to make a good-sized congre- gation. But until the Brethren people who move into the city feel that the Brethren church has a message for the world and have courage enough to stand by her, this field will be a mission field. Here is a real opportunity to do some real mission work and to build up a Brethren church. They have fine leadership in the persons of Rev. D. R. Murray and wife, who are consecated, and hard workers. They are good organ- izers and talented people.

We made our home with the pastor and wife and were invited out into the homes and were received royally by those who have the church at heart. They made us feel at home, and at the close of the services they presented us with a beautiful gift, the W. M. S. also sending Mrs. Stewart a mighty fine gift, for both of which we are thankful. This was wholly unexpected on our part, for we went to try to help them with the un- derstanding that we were to have our ex- penses paid and were not expecting more. We want to thank them again for their kind- ness and hospitality.

The results were not all that we would like to have seen, but were not a failure for two precious souls were added to the king- dom, and how far reaching these meetings were, eternity only can tell. We wish for them success in their efforts, and pray God's blessing upon them.

C. A. STEWART.

standing aim of studying the constructive facts regarding the benefits of the Eight- eenth Amendment, on October 15 launched a series of 3,000 state-wide and district conferences.

(10) Reversal of the Wet offensive against Prohibition was brought about by a public challenge of August Busch, brewer, issued by the Foundation, which demanded that he make good his unsupported and widely ad- vertised claims on behalf of re-legalizing beer. This challenge revealed the fallacies of the liquor propaganda and placed the liquor forces on the defensive for the first time since the Eighteenth Amendment was enacted.

(11) The National Executive Council of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at Phoenix, Arizona, in June, with one dis- senting vote, re-affirmed its support of the Eighteenth Amendment and pledged its aid in maintaining Prohibition.

(12) Annual convention of the Depart- ment of Superintendence of the National Education Association, the largest body of educators in the world, with a 10,000 atten- dance at Detroit, voted with but eleven dis- senting, for continued support of Prohibi- tion.

(13) The national convention of the Par- ent-Teachers' Association, meeting at Little Rock, Arkansas, unqualifiedly renewed its support of National Prohibition.

(14) The executive committee of the National Grange, representing 800,000 farmers, the oldest and most influential farm organization in America, in session at Washington in October, issued a ringing declaration repudiating the claims of beer propagandists and showing that the farmer had nothing to gain from re-legalizing brewery products.

(15) The great church denominational meetings of the country, with but two exceptions, registered their continued confidence in Prohibition.

(16) Facts showing the complete failure of government control of the liquor traffic as a temperance measure in the Provinces of Canada, were marshalled and released through the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation and widely used by the press.

(17) Among a record number of published discussions of prohibition produced during the year, is THE WET PARADE, the latest and by many regarded as the greatest novel produced by Upton Sinclair, which presents, in story form, a startling size-up of the struggle for National Prohibition, exposing lawlessness and the conspiracy of nullification.

(18) A new era of open discussion of both sides of Prohibition in the public press is already in evidence and scores of leading newspapers are giving fair presentation of the dry side in their news columns. The religious press have shown a re-awakened militant defense of Prohibition.

THAT REMINDS ME

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter

Who does not admire a beautiful home! Travel from coast to coast and from the lakes to the gulf and everywhere one sees attractive homes. Beautiful flowers and shrubs and trees! Lawns as smooth and attractive as the velvet rugs within! Splendid architecture that causes all lovers of the beautiful to gaze until distance forbids! And how often a passerby remarks in ecstasy: "Oh! how I would love to have a beautiful home like that!"

"Journey's End" is the name of a very fine and costly mansion by the sea at Daytona Beach, Florida.

And that reminds me

The Christian's "Journey's End" will be a mansion with which the splendid house on the ocean front will be no comparison. The faithful Christian has a warrant deed to a finer and more beautiful home than any owned by any millionaire or billionaire on this earth, a deed that only unforgiven sin can cancel.

Fortunate are they who have a comfortable and pleasant home on this earth. There is indeed no place like home, sweet home! What a glorious homecoming for those on earth who can leave the chill of winter and go to the sunny southland and find a lovely "Journey's End" home waiting for them.

But how much more glorious will be the Christian's homecoming over there! When earth's sin and sorrow will be exchanged for the sunshine of heavenly glory! Where the Lamb of God will be the Light thereof and the streets of gold will rival earth's finest roads! Where all one's neighbors and friends will be among the redeemed and the angels! Where we shall see him face to face who said: "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you." Oh! What a "Journey's End" that will be!

Business Manager's Corner

THAT LOYALTY CAMPAIGN

On an occasion not so long ago a lady promoter succeeded in selling a proposition to a community that was reluctant about accepting it; and in speaking of her success it was said "Her insistent persistence broke down the resistance." While some of our readers may feel there is a possibility of overplaying the idea, yet experience and observation have taught us that an idea must be pressed and pressed hard, if it is expected that it will really take root in the thinking of the people.

Thought most certainly controls conduct, and if we would control or guide the conduct of any group we must first be able to guide or direct their thinking. Witness the nation-wide radio advertising schemes planned and carried out at great expense to develop certain kinds of consciousness or to break down certain lines of resistance, that one's teeth may be cared for properly, or that one's "Adam's apple" may be made secure from all harm.

These programs are not sent out over the air once and then left to fend for themselves, but they are repeated over and over, week after week, and night after night until one is almost led to think he can feel his "Adam's apple" bobbing up and down his neck like the cork on a fish line on the occasion of a good bite, unless he turns off the radio or seeks some other far distant station.

We have not a "nation wide hook up" to boost the Brethren publications outside the reach of our own Brethren Evangelist, so our readers need not feel unduly alarmed if we sing this one LOYALTY tune a great many times between now and the fourth Sunday in January.

We feel we can not prove loyal to the trust that has been ours for a great many years unless we do every thing in our power to help our constituency through the present period of gloom, and with some aid toward reaching the conclusion that to be loyal to their Christ and to their church they must be loyal to their church's interests and must give them support even though they must make what may seem to them a real sacrifice to do it.

The above statement applies not only to church congregations and Sunday schools but to private members of the Brethren church as well.

We understand a number of our churches and Sunday schools have been crippled by bank failures and depressed business conditions, but don't you think the reaction has been felt most keenly by your Publishing House? Our appeal now is that you may be led to see the necessity of every member, who can do so at all, standing loyally by his Publishing House and giving support to its publications until this dark cloud has passed over America and over the entire world.

How much of a sacrifice on the part of each individual would it take to be a real boost to the Publishing Interests of the church?

In regard to The Brethren Evangelist alone a great deal can be done if our subscribers are willing to practice just a more self-denial. No doubt there are who are really in need and situated so no more self-denial can be practiced without harm to themselves or some member of their family; but there are others that THINK they can't afford to continue their church paper. Have you thought, reader, that the sacrifice of one small amount of gasoline will pay for the Evangelist full year. The Business Manager does not do much automobile driving as automobile driving is generally reckoned, he does have the time; but still it takes the time of a year's subscription to the Evangelist every week in the year to keep his car running. If necessary the garage doors be locked for one week and the money to pay for the church paper a year. do you think about it? Would it be while?

Let us all be LOYAL to everything that pertains to our church, and just now be especially loyal to our publications

R. R. TEETER, Business Manager

But still thy wisdom, power and grace, Shine brighter in thy Book.*

*Lord, make me understand thy law:
Show what my faults have been;
And from thy Gospel let me draw Pardon for all my sin.*

*Here would I learn how Christ has died.
To save my soul from hell:

POLICE are Still Needed

An international disarmament mass meeting, recently held in Paris, was broken up by howls, heckling and fist-fights. Former American ambassador, Alanson B. Houghton, tried to speak, but the crowd rushed for the platform and police protection was needed to get the British and American speakers out of the building safely.

This regrettable incident does not prove that peace meetings are worthless. Anything is worthwhile which helps to prevent war and lengthen the periods of peace. But it does prove that the world has not yet gotten to the place where armed police can be dispensed with. The world is still filled with people who recognize no argument but that of Force. As long as we have such people the nations cannot completely disarm.

Even the most enthusiastic advocate of disarmament wants adequate police protection for his home and family. When it is safe to disband the police, then it will be safe to disband the armies and navies of the nations. Those who think the millennium has arrived should study the situation in Manchuria, and then imagine what might happen in this country if, like China, it were unable to defend itself. And remember that Japan is one of the so-called "civilized" nations of the world, much safer to deal with than an outlaw nation like Russia.

It would be a thousand times safer to turn Al Capone loose in Chicago with no police force than to disarm the nations while the Communist government reigns Russia.

WHAT the Church Can Do

1. Encourage all sincere and legitimate efforts to avert wars. While in a sinful world it has not been possible to stop WAR, men have found it possible to prevent certain kinds of WARS.

2. But the Church should remember that her greatest contribution to civilization is in the regeneration of sinful men. Just as long as men are unregenerate, they are dangerous to the peace of the world, even though they may have a veneer of that idealism which was brought into the world by Christianity. Therefore, the Church should devote her energy to the really important business of evangelism and teaching the Word to those who are born from above, and not fritter away her precious time chasing political rainbows.

3. Above all, the Church should remember that what she cannot do will be done by her Lord when he comes to establish his great kingdom, and thus find courage to continue in well-doing.

TYPHOID MARY

Those who are old enough will perhaps recall the case of this unfortunate woman who was found in 1906 to be a carrier of the dread germs of typhoid fever. She was by profession a cook, and it is estimated that altogether she was responsible for infecting 57 people with the disease and causing three deaths.

She was incarcerated for three years in a

New York hospital as a public menace, and during this time she made a long fight in the courts for freedom, but the courts decided that she could be held as long as she continued to be a menace to society. In 1910 the authorities thought it would be safe to release her, but found again in 1915 that she was still spreading infection, a serious epidemic in a hospital being traced to the fact that she was employed as cook.

The disease of sin is worse than typhoid fever. It is spread both by contagion and by heredity. Those who are "carriers" must at last be isolated from society. We may pity but there is no other safe way to treat those who refuse to be cured. If there is ever to be a redeemed humanity, a new earth where there is no more sin and sorrow and death, then there must be eternal isolation for the "carriers" of the disease of sin. Those who scoff at the Bible doctrine of hell should remember the tragic case of "Typhoid Mary."

Fortunately, there is a cure for sin. "The Blood of Jesus Christ . . . cleanseth us from all sin." If any go away at last into the dreadful isolation of that eternal detention-house, it will not be because there was no help, but because they would not come to the only Physician who is able to heal.

A NEW Kind of a Degree

Dr. L. W. Munhall, the great old "war-horse" of the Methodist Church, was recently awarded an unusual degree at the Bob Jones College, College Point, Florida. In conferring the degree, the President spoke as follows:

"Dr. Munhall, you are almost ninety years old. You have been a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ for nearly seventy years. You have traveled more than one million, three hundred thousand miles. You have preached forty-two thousand times and have preached to more people than any other living man. You are the author of a number of religious books. You have delivered one lecture on the Bible to almost a thousand audiences throughout the world. You are the editor of the "Methodist" published in Philadelphia."

"In all your sermons and writings you have stood without apology for the old time religion and for the absolute authority of the Bible. What you stand for the Bob Jones College stands for, and this day we are conferring upon you the honorary degree of Contender for the Faith."

"We could confer upon you the same degrees which are usually conferred by colleges upon distinguished men, but you have received these degrees from a number of institutions, and besides, these other degrees would not convey the honor it is our desire to give."

Both Dr. Munhall and this College deserve congratulations; the former for refusing to quit the "good fight" after seventy years of service, and the latter for recognizing his valiant labor as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

THE Truth about the Presbyterian Church

Under the above caption Dr. J. Gresham Machen, well known scholar of the Presbyterian Church, writes a severe indictment of his own denomination in "Christianity Today."

He begins with the statement that "In 1923 and 1924 the battle between City and Modernism entered upon its most acute phase in the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A."

He reviews briefly the fight which over the five points affirmed by the Assembly of 1923, namely, the comp inspiration of the Bible, the Virgin Birth, substitutionary Atonement, Bodily Resurrection, and the Miracles of Christ; and concludes that "the Modernist coalition has in the main won the victory, and dominates the machinery of the Presbyterian Church."

Dr. Machen also discusses at length appointment and composition of the judicial body of the Presbyterian Church which is the Permanent Judicial Commission, and shows that that both of ministers and laymen were excluded from this supreme body, and concludes that evident that any consistent Christian will count it a disgrace to be acquitted on any doctrinal issue, by such a court, honor to be condemned."

He declares that "the composition of the Court shows that the corporate life of the Presbyterian Church is corrupt at its core; and that until the sin of the Church is honestly faced and removed, all the swelling words about the Church's activities, can avail but little in the sight of God."

Those who have watched the withering blight of Modernism spread through larger denominations had hoped that it might be arrested in the Presbyterian Church. But that hope seems to be a thing of the past. What has happened should be a warning to the smaller denomination of our own church in particular, to resist death any attempts within or without to deliver us into the hands of unbelief.

Three thousand young men in Sweden have signed this declaration: "I myself not to take part in or support any kind of war, either between nations or between my fellow citizens, and to work for total disarmament, for the removal of causes of war, and for a new social and international order, founded upon the principle of cooperation for the common good."

Need of New Attention to be Given to the Bible

The first Sunday in December has been set aside as Universal Sunday, and a call has gone forth for a focusing of attention on the need of a revival of Bible study. The theme of this day is "searching the Scriptures." A great message has been written by Dr. Charles E. Jefferson and the American Bible Society has prepared helpful material that is being used in connection with the observance of the day. It is good to have a day in the year set aside to an emphasis of the need of Bible distribution and of Bible teaching and searching. The Bible needs a very much larger place in the lives of all people, and particularly of Christian people, than it enjoys at present, and any move that is calculated to bring about this desired end should be encouraged.

There is a widespread neglect of the Bible; it is almost an unknown book to vast numbers of people. Nothing is more important than that there should be urged a rediscovery of that book and a renewed acquaintance with its teachings. Dr. Jefferson says: "The world in our days most needs, is a passionate exhortation to search the Scriptures. He is a rare Christian who spends much time with his Bible. The majority of Christians are lukewarm in their Bible study, and the majority of those who are not Christians do not read the Bible at all. Indifference to the Bible is one of the outstanding features of our time. The world is so indifferent to it, that even its enemies—outside those of the baser kind—do not care to attack it. Only a few take the trouble to use it. Most men ignore it and pass by on the other side. The believing upper classes do not scoff at it. They do not even look at it. It does not arouse their feelings, because they know nothing about it. They do not talk about it, because they do not think about it; and they do not think about it, because it is not a part of the world in which they live. So far as they are concerned it has dropped completely out of sight. To them it is a reminder of an age which is ended, a relic from a world which has vanished." But this is true, is evidenced by conditions on every hand. There is little or no reading of the Bible in the home; there is scarcely any discussion of the Bible in our community life, and little recognition of the Bible in our standards of conduct. There certainly is a great need for the giving of attention, or more attention, or more intensive attention, to Bible study.

Our age is not without its Bible students, and those who make good use of its teachings. There are those who obey the injunction (it appears as such in the King James' Version) in the fifth chapter of the Fourth Gospel: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye have eternal life." There are some Bereans among the churches, giving themselves to a daily searching of the Scriptures, as were those described by Luke in the Book of Acts. The church and the world are blessed with their presence and by the enlightenment of their spiritual minds.

But among these keen searchers of the Scriptures there is a temptation that must be avoided, to get the eyes of the mind so set on the letter of the law that the soul fails to grasp the spirit of its truth. And it was a warning against such a wrong use of the Bible that Jesus had in mind, and not an exhortation to the study of the Scriptures, when he said, according to the Revised Version, "Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life." The Scriptures had taken the place of God to those Jews. They worshipped its bare pages and letters, but failed to catch the spirit of its teachings and to see the focal point of its prophecies. They searched the Scriptures, but all their searching did not bring them to a recognition of the Christ of God.

Dr. Jefferson remarks, using the present tense, "They have industry and zeal in their Biblical study; but their study is futile, because pursued in the wrong spirit. They do not arrive at the goal which the Scriptures have in mind, because their devotion to the letter blinds them to the presence of the Living Word. The power of the Scriptures is to impart life, and they fail of their purpose if they do not bring men to him who is the Giver of Life and whose supreme desire is that all men might have life more abundantly. The Scribes were punctilious and intense in their investigations; but their research came to nothing, because their spirit was wrong. Jesus said to them in sorrow, 'Ye search the Scriptures, . . . and these are they which bear witness of me; and ye will not come to me, that ye may have life.'"

And there are men today who lose the spirit of righteousness in their devotion to the letter of Gospel requirements, and need to be warned against the worship of the Bible rather than the Person therein revealed. Dr. Jefferson is profoundly true when he says, "We need to remind ourselves again and again that no amount of Bible study is of value unless it brings us to Christ, unless it gives us his attitude to God and his sympathy for men, and unless it builds up in us his disposition and character." We are not convinced that the Lord would not have us give attention to the detailed study of the Word and the minutest requirements of the Gospel, but he certainly would not have us to allow the minutia of teaching and practice to smother out the vital Christian spirit. As he said to the Jews, he would doubtless say to us, "These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the others undone."

The great danger is not, however, that of giving too close attention to details, but of giving no attention or thought to the Bible at all. That is the weakness of our age, as has been previously noted. The thing that we need to combat is not so much the worship of the Bible rather than the Christ of the Bible, but the tendency to ignore the Bible altogether. To make no use of the Word of God at all is what we are inclined to do, and that is just what we cannot afford to do. We are no more able to get along without the Bible now than we ever have been, and we never came even near to being able. It is simply indispensable from every standpoint. To quote from Dr. Jefferson's remarkable address again: "The nations cannot get on without it. Civilization cannot endure without the ideas and ideals which the Bible was written to proclaim. The Christian church is doomed if church members cease to search the Scriptures; and non-Christian nations will never find the path which leads to life without the guidance of prophets and apostles and the Prince of Glory. The publication and distribution of the Bible is one of the most important pieces of work now being done on our planet." And next in importance to that is the great work of expounding and publishing and distributing the message of the Bible, a task which the church has set itself to do through the media of its publications.

But, though we admit the importance of distributing the Bible, is it necessary to give very serious attention to such work during this period of depression? Might it not be advisable, in view of the hard financial conditions prevailing, to go easy on this work for a time, slacken in our zeal for distributing the Bible and giving forth its message until times are better? Robert E. Speer has met that question as few men can meet it. Hear him:

When the days are dark, men need the light.

When the times are hard, men need its comfort.

When the outlook is discouraging, men need its confidence.

When despair is abroad, men need its word of hope.

There are luxuries that may well be spared. There are even necessities that can be curtailed. But the Bible, indispensable at all times, is still more indispensable at times like these today.

The Bible is not a book of political maxims or of economic theories. It is not a book of maxims or theories at all. It is a book of living principles. Its spirit is the spirit of brotherliness and good will. It is a summons to helpfulness: "Bear ye one another's burdens." It is a summons also to self-respecting independence: "Let every man bear his own burden." It teaches charity, but also justice. It calls us to the giving and serving which the strong owe to the weak, and those who have to those who lack; but it also strikes straight and clear at the moral defects of individuals, which are responsible for a large part of the poverty and suffering of

How Movies Represent American Life

The Literary Digest states that "an American woman complained that there is 'a campaign constantly being carried on to create in English minds an antagonism toward America and Americans,'" and then informs us that "an English critic replied in what was termed a 'friendly article' in The English Statesman (London)" as follows:

Americans should realize that so long as the United States methodically travesties and profanes herself before the whole world by the loathsome pictures that pour steadily from Hollywood, there is little excuse for complaining if other peoples think America ridiculous.

As shown in many of the serious and in most of the comic pictures that appear in England, America is ridiculous. And not only ridiculous, but obscene and trivial!

If America does not care enough about her own reputation to control this monstrous vulgarity, she should not expect other nations to be too tender of her.

America sometimes makes excuse for Hollywood on the ground that foreign nations must enjoy these pictures, or else they would not patronize them.

This is true; but it is an argument that could be used equally well by the keepers of brothels. People willing to traffic in a certain line of goods can always do a lively business with the unhappy human race; but they should be content with gold for payment, and should not clamor for respect.

This English critic is absolutely right and, as the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate comments:

If we have any regard for the good opinion of others, we will see to it that obscene caricatures of American life are not delivered to interested audiences abroad as our card of introduction. A polite regard for the feelings of others, if there be no better reason, should restrain us from a too modest advertising of ourselves.

However it seems to us that this concern about what the English folks are made to think of us as a result of the movies' rottenness is rather unimportant as compared to what we really are becoming through the influence of this ubiquitous and much-in-need-of-being-controlled institution. If these pictures give the impression abroad that Americans are "not only ridiculous, but obscene and trivial," just remember that those same pictures, or others just as bad, are constantly holding before the minds of our American children and youth just such ideals and they are growing into their likeness. We need to be more concerned about that.

---

Brother R. D. Barnard, pastor of the church at Dayton, Ohio, informs us that they had a very successful Bible Institute in his church, with Prof. A. J. McClain, Dr. J. C. Beal and Dr. A. T. Robertson of Louisville, Kentucky, as the speakers, closing with "Loyalty Sunday" on November 15th.

Brother I. D. Bowman tells of two communion services in which he recently participated. At Calvary, New Jersey, where his son is pastor, he met many with whom he fellowshiped at the church's beginning and many of whom he baptized. At Mount Olivet church in Delaware one was received into membership by baptism and the communion service was very impressive.

The following splendid piece of admonition has been going the rounds of our church calendars and is abundantly worthy of attention: Whosoever thou art that enterest this church, remember that it is God's house; be reverent, be silent, be thoughtful; and leave it not without one prayer to God for thyself, for him who ministers, for those who worship here, and for all people who know not God."

By means of his church bulletin, Brother Leo Polman, pastor at South Gate, California, informs us that on a recent Sunday his Sunday school had an attendance record of 180, and 13 more came after the records were made up. This is a mission church and it is most encouraging to note how it is growing. They have their immediate goal set at 200, and we doubt not they will soon reach it and go beyond.

Any pastors or other church leaders may have for the asking free sample copies of The Evangelist to aid them in making their canvass for subscriptions. The very special introductory price for new subscriptions is $1.35 during the period of this campaign. One new and one renewal for $3.00—this is a splendid Christmas gift opportunity, the kind that will remind your friend of the Christ spirit every week throughout the year. Act promptly.

Next week we will publish a special White Gift number of Evangelist, and we wish to acknowledge in advance and with gratitude the cooperation of the National Sunday School Association in this effort. It will be printed in color and we believe you will be proud of it, as some expressed themselves of the special H. Mission numbers. Let every Sunday school in the brotherhood make a really Christ-honoring gift at the Christmas season as to make possible a continuance of the great work of the association.

A goodly number of the pastors are giving attention to Brethren Evangelist new subscription campaign in their church calendars, and we trust from their pulpits, also. We appreciate this cooperation and hope it will be kept up and extended in every church. Remember also to encourage the larger use of Brethren Sunday school publications. You can't find anything better, nothing so good, for Brethren people. If November 22 was not observed as a day of prayer for our publications and publishing interests, will you not have special prayer for such a purpose very soon? We want the support of your prayer, and not only on one day, but frequently throughout the year.

Brother Leslie Lindower, pastor of the churches at Terra Alta and Grafton, West Virginia, reports holding a short series of doctrinal services at each of his churches preceding communion services. At the Grafton church four were added to the members by baptism. We commend the pastor for giving this attention to doctrinal themes. We are convinced that there ought to be more frequent instruction of such type in all our churches. Too often we are hesitant about preaching on our distinctive church doctrines because we have so often done so. But we believe they ought to be preached on at least once a year. Young people are coming and new members are being added, who need to be indoctrinated and besides, the older members need, and have desire, to have their minds refreshed concerning reasons for the faith that is in them.

Brother George E. Cone, pastor of the church at Milledgeville, Illinois, and the retiring secretary of the Illiokota district conference, sends us a brief report of the recent meeting of that conference at Dallas Center, Iowa, where Brother A. R. Staley and people prove to be splendid hosts. The out-of-the-district speakers were Dr. W. S. Bell, Miss Estella Myers and Brother R. Paul Miller. The conference was held over the week-end, and this first experience of the kind was so satisfactory that it was decided to repeat the plan next year, when the meeting is to be held at Cedar Gordo, Illinois. The conference was moderated by Brother C. Grisso and Brother Staley will have charge next year.

The church at Hagerstown, Maryland, which is shepherded by Brother Frank G. Coleman, has recently enjoyed a very successful evangelistic campaign, the pastor himself doing the preaching and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer leading the music. Twenty-nine souls made the good confession and it is thought that others may yet surrender to Christ as a result of these meetings. Nineteen had previously confessed Christ as a result of a pre-Easter meeting making the total number of confessions forty-eight. Of this number forty-two have been baptized, four await baptism and one came by letter. A very fine spirit of fellowship is said to exist, as a result of these meetings, among members and friends of the church alike. Such a spirit is conducive to growth. The Sunday school attendance on the closing day of the meetings reached the new high mark of 455.

Brother George H. Jones writes of an evangelistic campaign recently conducted in the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, which he is serving. Brother W. H. Schaffer of Conemaugh was the evangelist preacher and his services were much appreciated. Four confessions were received; three have been baptized and one awaiting the rite. The spiritual pulse of the church was quickened by these services and the Sunday school has experienced an increased attendance. Brother Jones states that the church is in splendid condition; the people are loyal, their average attendance at church is high in percentage and the Sunday school attendance is close to the one hundred mark. They are whittling down the church building debt and are looking forward to the time when they can be free of debt and be able to make their way without mission board help.

Will the Christian Church Last?

By W. R. Deeter

Editor's Sermon delivered at Fort Scott, Kansas, Mid-West Conference of the Brethren Church, October 7, 1931, and requested published)

John 16:33. These things have I spoken unto you, that in me might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

These words of the Master, as you remember, were spoken on the last evening of his earthly life. They reflect the sublime vision where Christ goes forth "conqueror and to conquer."

The victory of Christ over the world, and the victory of believers through that victory, are favorite themes of the New Testament Evangelist. "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that IS from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the world. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father." The next verse uses the phrase, "I have written." "I write unto you" may be from the writer's standpoint; "I have written," from the reader's standpoint, when the message should be read by them, may refer to the Gospel. However, he was trying to encourage the disciples, realizing that in a few hours he was going to his death. The crucifixion was not a surprise to Jesus. He says, "I have overcome the world." "I will," or "I may", but "I HAVE OVERCOME THE WORLD." One has put it this way: "I have faced the world, and overcome it." 1 John 5:4, "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." It is not the birth, but his birth from God that overcomes and conquers. 1 John 4:4, "Ye are of God, little children, and ye overcome them; but greater is he that is in you, than he (the devil) that is in the world."

Someone put this question: "Do you believe that the Christian church is going to last?" What do you think about it? I don't believe it will go down. My friends, don't believe it. Those who are doing much for the church in the world, don't believe it. We know there have been some who have said it, and they have been saying it for 160 years, and some are saying it today, but that does not lessen my faith in this great institution of God.

But there are discouraging influences against some of the church's work and achievements. For example: While attending a certain state board meeting recently a certain man reported that the preachers in the East, or the New England States, are losing their courage about the 18th Amendment, and some even losing faith. Is that not a "slap in the face" of the great mass of ministers, especially those in the Mid-west and South? NO! It is an enticement not to lose courage, but rather to continue the battle against the foe; it is not a losing fight. But, as F. H. High, State Superintendent in Nebraska said, "If the church of Jesus Christ doesn't rally to the defense of the 18th Amendment, we are going to awake some morning and find we have LOST it." Brethren, we must not fail! We must stand true to the end.

A cartoon appeared on the front page of a recent issue of the "World Herald" of a dog sitting on his haunches with a forlorn look, and four tin cans tied to his tail. The dog, of course was labeled "The 18th Amendment." The cans, "American Legion," "American Federation of Labor," "American Bar Association," the fourth one, I do not recall. But it was found that these four did not represent the sentiment of ALL the members, but centered largely around those from the eastern states—and especially New York and New Jersey. Round New Bedford, Boston, and other ports, Rum Runners are said to have been protected and escorted from the unloading docks to the warehouses of the city,—distributing points—by motor patrol police, in the employ of Uncle Sam. Of course, such work will discourage most any honest thinking and sincere minister of God. May the Lord give them courage to keep to the right, back there in the East. But there are strong forces against them. The "Hearst Publications" are strong advocates of repeal, and even the "Literary Digest" is more wet in its sentiments than dry. We have heard, too, that Brisbane, and Floyd Gibbons "belong to the wets." One of the latest and most silly movements we have heard of is the "chain letter," advocating "if you want the return of prosperity, if you want jobs restored to thousands of the unemployed; if you want to 'punch Hoover'; if you want to get rid of the Temperance organizations, vote for the repeal of the 18th Amendment, and send this letter to ten of your friends; DON'T break the chain." Such is the silly tommy-rot, from the brain of someone who cannot see past his own nose, and who likes the "smell" to come his way. The Supreme Court of the United States will not reconsider its decision upholding the constitutionality of the Volstead Act. Opponents of prohibition might just as well understand that the 18th Amendment is in the Constitution to stay, until 36 states vote it out. And that possibility is far in the future.

Those disciples did not know, neither did others then, that in lifting Jesus Christ up from the earth he would draw ALL men unto him. That very night his enemies came to the Garden, took him to the local courts and tried him, condemned him, and the next day crucified him. Kind hands buried him, and the soldiers took precautions to seal the tomb, and secured it with guards in the name of the Roman Government. After these precautions they said, "Surely we have stopped him now!" Not long ago we saw this bulletin along the highway west of Omaha, Nebraska: "Often, when one tries to STOP a thing, he STARTS something." Listen! On the third day Jesus arose from the tomb; an angel had come down—he did not care for the Roman seal, nor the soldier guard, for they became as dead—and Jesus came FORTH! The disciples were scattered from Jerusalem. They thought the Cause of Jesus was stopped now. But because the disciples were scattered, it only helped to spread the "Good News." Unthoughtful, sinful men cried: "O, we have stopped this new movement now." Being scattered made the disciples DO the very things Jesus had told them to do.

In later years, a decree went out: "Whatever happens, kill a few Christians! If a drought befalls the country, kill a few Christians; if a famine comes, kill a few Christians; if a flood, a panic, an epidemic—kill a few Christians. That will STOP it!" But did it?

Later, great arenas were builded; the seating capacity reached into the thousands. Hosts of people were invited in to see the wild beasts tear men, women and children to pieces. Their theory was "Kill a few Christians and that will stop them." Like the great conqueror, Napoleon, after he had caused bloodshed over miles and miles of territory, in his last struggle cried: "Oh, Galilean, thou hast conquered!"

Men have often said: "Christianity is doomed."

Friends! A movement was born in the very darkest hour of the World's history. Not long ago we celebrated the 400th Anniversary of the Augsburg Confession—the birth of a movement now known to the Christian world as Protestantism. Will this cause ever die or diminish? Do the characteristics of the times speak mockingly of Christianity, and does that necessarily retard the great cause of Christ on earth? Two hundred years ago, in England, a woman called at the door of a house. The maid answered the call, saying, "The mistress of the house is out." The woman left no card, nor her name. On the return of the mistress the maid said: "I know she was a 'lady' because she smoked." Are women "ladies" today because they smoke? Nay, not for me! At another time a man established dispensaries in order to administer to the needy, and all those who could not pay for the services. But the man had no "inner satisfaction." He came home, and on Wednesday evening, while reading from Romans, he later reported, "I had a strange warm feeling within me" . . . Who was it? It was John Wesley, and his "conversion"! THAT was not simply an individual conversion, but, as another has said, "In the conversion of John Wesley, Europe was saved." Did the movement stop? Two hundred and twenty-four years ago another movement was begun by a small group of faithful believers in Germany with Alexander Mack as the leader. Today this band of Gospel carriers is spreading the Good News on three leading Continents of the World. Eighty-years ago, Darwin said, "All forms of life come from one form of life." After his book came out, thousands of people who read it committed suicide, rather than see, as they thought, would happen, Christianity go. And since that day, 80 years ago, the "Science of Evolution," and its declarations, we do not know of a single Bible doctrine of Christianity that has even so much as wobbled. Again, 80 years ago, some few who read the Book, said it should not be CRITICIZED, therefore, it should not be read by the masses. But today the Book is more firmly established than any year of the history of the world.

Thirty-five years ago, Robert G. Ingersoll was going about lecturing on "The Mistakes of Moses." He said: "In 20 years from now, the Book will only be found in libraries and museums." Now, Ingersoll is gone, but the Bible still lives. Last year there were about 800 new books to come off the press. If a book reaches the sale of a million copies, the author and publisher receive a fair remuneration. Most books do not pay the publisher and author very much. But the One Book reached the sale of 33 million copies, while all other books and novels reached 30 million. The BOOK and its teachings still lives on. Occasionally we hear something about "hard times." In 1930, the year of the 'depression', the church paid out over a billion dollars. That sounds like a lot of money to me,—over a thousand million dollars! The listed membership of the Protestant churches number into the vast millions,—men and women for Christ, working and laboring for his cause. Hallelujah! We've been preaching for 18 years, and inviting folks to confess and follow him, but we can't "save" the Lord by owning him, nor can we make him "lose" by staying away. The gain or loss is to us.

This is a day of conflict; a day of struggle, a day of tribulation. Listen to what the "A. A. A. A." organization, with headquarters in New York City says, declaring themselves to be the militant foe of the church and clergy: "If bad books are to be burned, the largest bonfires should consist of the Bibles." Bah! such inconsistency! Brethren of the ministry! "When the Great Scorer comes to write against your name, he will not that you won or lost—but HOW you played the game." Are we to be found on the battlefield, ready to serve the Lord, by and through his Grace, and to do the things he wants us to do? "I have overcome the world."

I know it is sometimes hard to go out into the battle of life, and we may be discouraged, but let us be courageous to do his will. If we STOP, we sin. If we h back, we lose the victory in our own heart and life.

God said: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against the church" (Matt. 16:18). He intended that every generation from the days of Christ on to the end of the world might have the Gospel in the world while that generation lived. All the forces that march out of the gates of death cannot overcome the church. All the law, and all the plans and plots of the unseen world cannot prevail against the church. Not even death itself can overcome the church, though he is a great conqueror. Prisons and laws fail to hold the human race, but where these laws and prisons fail, death is master of all. He is a mighty monarch that sits upon a throne; he rules over the Caesars and laughs at poor skeletons of Alexander and Hannibal. In his mighty embrace he holds the ages and the millenniums until the judgment horn breaks the hour. When prisons are powerless he is master, but he SHALL NOT overcome the Church! Enemies of the Church may attack it from within and without. Infidels, scoffers and sinners have always fought the church from without. Enemies who creep in among the lambs, fight it from within.

Great storms may sweep over the surface of the earth and destroy crops, cattle, sheep, horses and barns, ships and forests. The wind may leave a tangled wreck over the face of the earth, or at the bottom of the deep, but at last, like a tired giant it will lie down and leave the earth to rest. If we have been fortunate to live through such a storm, we can step out upon firm soil and upon a world still true to its orbit; we can build upon the waste place again. Enemies of the church are powerful and well equipped; she has to meet the strongest forces of organized vice, and to meet them in deadly and eternal conflict. There is no compromise that can be made. Just now she is engaged in a deadly conflict with the liquor trust and her name is cast out as evil by the vilest of vile things. That evil, which has drunk of the best blood of the nation and destroyed multitudes of the souls of men, would, without compunction of conscience, destroy the church from the face of the earth. But God is BEHIND the Church and it WILL LIVE. Praise his name! The Church SHALL LIVE, because it enjoys the presence of God. The Church is a "pillar and ground of truth." Not only must the pillars be secure, but the foundation on which they stand must be right. We ascended up 384 steps in a great Capitol Building—marble steps, circular iron steps, up and up. Whence the support of all this weight? Down below were mighty marble pillars holding up millions of tons of dead weight. Fifty-four feet below the surface those pillars rested upon solid rock. Ah! then we better understand the meaning of, "the church is the pillar and ground of truth." It HOLDS UP the truth, but it is MORE; it is the FOUNDATION itself of the Truth.

Truth crushed to earth will rise again,

The eternal years of God are hers,

But error, wounded, writhes in pain,

And dies amid her worshippers."

Take a look at the Future:—

“From step to step it wins its way,
Against the hosts of sin;
Part of the battlefield is won,
And part is yet to win.
Then join with faithful heart, and strong,
And bravely onward go;
The triumphs that await us yet,
Are greater than we know.”

Challenge to a Crusade for World Peace

addressed to Members of Religious Groups in America)

Friends:

American Friends Service Committee, a national committee of the Society of Friends (Quakers), sends greetings.

are constrained to believe that the General Disarm-Conference to open in Geneva in Feb., 1932, can de to mark a turning point in human affairs. Never , in the history of mankind, have the devastating s of war been so clearly indicated and so generally nized. Past generations, indifferent to the warnings phets, economists and statesmen, have consistently ved for war, have regarded war as the natural arof international affairs, and have proceeded from onflict to another. It would now seem that the peof the world have reached the limit of their power uperate from the disasters of war. Hand in hand a vast increase in man's powers of destruction has an equal increase in the effect of war upon a more ex social order. President Hoover in his recent n to the convention of the American Legion voiced rowing conviction of millions of men, when he said he present world-wide economic crisis is the result e World War. In our present delicately adjusted, dependent world, the destiny of every people, how-strong or weak, is inextricably linked with the fears ortunes of the world. The law of love, the teach-of Hebrew prophets and of Jesus, are being fulfilled sweep of world affairs. Men are beginning to real-at they must cooperate or perish, materially as well ritually.

cannot contemplate, therefore, with indifference, persistent preparation for war throughout most of the world. Least important is the fiscal question of how nations should spend their public revenue,—whether tens of billions of dollars annually in subsidizing makers of armaments and the military personnel or upon purposes more closely related to the needs of suffering humanity. It is the menace of future war with which we are chiefly concerned. Armaments are the expression of a philosophy of international conduct and their very existence tends to perpetuate this philosophy. War is not avoidable except as armaments tend to make it so. It is unnatural or unnatural for a civilization to attempt to destroy itself, but this disaster is likely to happen if men continue irrationally to think about it and plan for it. The Disarmament Conference of 1932 will meet under unfavorable conditions. Never before have the peoples of the world so clearly recognized that their opportunity for surviving depends upon the constant maintenance of international peace. If the use of armaments may destroy civilization that has prepared them, it is worse than to continue them. The issue is not now one of limitation; it is one of abolition. We believe that the time has come, in the evolution of public opinion, to free mankind from the fiscal burden, the political menace and the physical decay incident to military preparation. The League of Nations, the League of Nations, the growth of public opinion as to the effects of war, constitute a setting in which such a program of abolition can reasonably be inaugurated.

Are the religious forces of the world content to wait until economic necessity has impelled the result foretold by prophetic vision? It is our hope that the day of freedom from the menace of war may be hastened through the dynamic of religious faith. The churches of America could devote this period to a great crusade on behalf of the abolition of war preparation. Such a crusade could definitely affect the results at Geneva and could thereby change the course of human affairs.

Sincerely yours,

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON.

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

III. DIFFICULTIES WITH THE PROPHECIES

Let no one think that all the blessings from the prophecies fall like ripe apples to the ground. Some of them do, and every child of God can find solid food in them, but many of them are like the treasure hid in the field, or the pearl which must be purchased at the cost of great sacrifice. The difficulties encountered in their studies have caused many to give up the quest. A few words about these difficulties may be of help to others.

1. Why is prophecy unfolded so gradually in the Bible? We seem like sailors on a cloudy night, guided by the occasional glimpse of one star and then another until the clouds clear away, and at last the morning star is seen, and presently the dawn of day. It is because the world is a prodigal, wandering afar with its back to the light of home. Only gradually have holy men appeared whose hearts could respond to the voice of the Spirit of God. The precious things of the prophecies are to the world like the pearl to the rooster. God is revealing himself and his will as fast as the world is willing to learn. Jesus said to the disciples, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now" (John 16:12). A child must pass the grades before it is ready for college.

2. Why was a wonderful prophetic book like Daniel “sealed until the time of the end?” (Dan. 12:4). The word “sealed” does not mean that the book is not to be understood by any one, for it is expressly stated that “the wise shall understand,” and some of the visions are explained so that their fulfillment can be clearly traced in history. The sealing of something involves both secrecy and security. The secret is kept only from those for whom it is not intended. “None of the wicked shall understand.” The sealing assures the fulfillment although the end be distant. Daniel 9:24, however, would seem to seal rather than unseal prophecy by fulfillment. We read, “Seventy weeks are determined . . . to seal up the vision and prophecy.” A closer reading reveals that the verse carries us through the age to the anointing of the King of Kings when vision and prophecy are sealed up and done away because no longer needed. Faith shall have given place to sight. “Whether there be prophecies, they shall cease.”

3. Why should we try to know when the Lord may come, when we are plainly told that of that day and hour knoweth no man? There is a "crown of righteousness" laid up for "all those who love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:8). It is difficult to see how we can love his appearing and not be interested in the time, especially when the Savior so carefully explained about certain signs which are to indicate when the time is near, and we are exhorted seven times to watch. To the lukewarm church of Sardis is the message, "If thou wilt not watch I will come on thee as a thief and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee" (Rev. 3:3). To the Thessalonian church Paul writes, "Ye brethren are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief" (1 Thes. 5:4).

4. Why did Jesus say to the disciples, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons?" In spite of all their teaching the disciples were among those who "thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear" (Lk. 19:11). The rejection of the kingdom and the intervening church age was not yet revealed (Eph. 3:1-10). It would have been an appalling discouragement to the disciples to learn how long the restoration would be postponed. It was enough to know for the time being, that they would receive power to witness of the glorious king.

Some years ago a book was widely read, entitled, "Forty coming wonders." It attempted to give a detailed political program for the closing years, but the time passed and the program failed to materialize. It is not good to be curious overmuch. Enough is revealed to inspire us to watchfulness and enough is concealed to make us humble.

5. Why is it that not only from the wicked are the prophetic mysteries hidden, but even the prophets themselves did not understand them? (1 Pet. 1:11). It might be added that even the angels desired to look into these things, but the same verse gives the explanation that "not unto themselves but unto us they (the prophets) did minister." The prophets were more than mere preachers for their own times. The Bible is a book for all ages, but each age has its own message.

6. If the prophecies are to be understood, why are they so often written in figurative language? Jesus answers this question, "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand" (Lk. 8:10). That is to say, the indifferent and unspiritual have in the parables and prophetic figures, something of benefit for even their meager understanding, but the spirit-filled will be able to glean from them the deeper symbolic meaning. Prophetic language is wonderfully adapted to conceal from the world the things that it would only misuse, and reveal them to children of God.

7. It would seem from 2 Pet. 3:14-16 that some people wrested the things hard to be understood to their own destruction. Why was that permitted? "If any will be ignorant let him be ignorant" says Paul (1 Cor. 14:38), but he is speaking of those who refused to acknowledge his inspiration. Those who wrest the Scriptures are those who are determined to prove by them their own preconceived notions. It is their own pride which goes before their destruction.

The Word of God should inspire in us the deepest humility as we see how marvelously it is written so as to reveal to each generation and each individual the things that are needed and reserve the rest for the time and the people appointed. Let us therefore quench our thirst in its living waters, and what we cannot drink allow to flow on to those who in due time shall drink and understand.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEW

GUTENBERG BIBLE SOLD FOR $100,000

News that a private collector had recently purchased a for considerably more than $100,000 a paper copy of the Gutenberg Bible, of which only 41 copies are known to exist, given out a few days ago in London. The volume was understood to have reposited in the Continental Library for more than a century and to be in splendid condition. A paper edition of it was sold in New York a short time ago for $106,000 and a real copy for $50,000.

The Gutenberg Bible was the first book produced from movable type and required five years to complete. It is praised for the beauty and strength of its paper, the luster of its ink, the clarity of its Gothic type and its superb binding.—The Evangelist.

INTERPRETING THE CONSTITUTION

After delivering a sort of funeral address, not at all over the Federal Farm Board, Congressman James M. Pennsylvania described the paramount position of individualism as an element in the constitution. Its founders, he held, "thought that government was a necessary evil and that its only purpose was to do for the individual what the individual could not do for himself." Does a member of congress really believe that the rights of government have been thus confined? Is there anyone who really knows the history of our legislation who can maintain that there have not been times when special legislation has received special consideration? If it proposes to do more than what the individual could not do for himself, why has it more frequently come to the aid of the individual, or individual who were hardest pressed? No defense is here made for the Federal Farm Board. It may be indefensible. But it is not indefensible to maintain that the man, or class, in a position of need, is entitled to much consideration as the prosperous man, or class seeking an advantageous position.—The Presbyterian Advance.

METHODIST MISSIONARY DILEMMA

A warning that the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church will have to be reduced 50 percent unless a deficit of $727 for the last year is met, was sounded at the annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions. To continue the work and a similar deficit for next year a program involving 10 percent in salaries of officers and employees of the World Service, reducing staff and of missionaries themselves was recommended. The report said: "If the Board follows the usual procedure of drastic savings at every possible turn, we will have to reduce the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church by one-half." Your secretaries feel that such action is unthinkable. Our primary force is now reduced below the level of 1912.—The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

MR. EDISON'S PERSONAL FAITH

There is something almost pitiful in the eagerness with which people are searching for something positive which may enable them to number the great inventor among themselves. They have rung with all kinds of circumstantial evidence, hearsay, and presumptive evidence that Mr. Edison was a Christian. Some items are almost ludicrous. One, for example, is that his son-in-law is a Roman Catholic. Another was his connection with the Chautauqua movement and Bishop Vincent. Mr. Edison has been quoted, Mr. Firestone has given testimony. A letter published in facsimile which Mr. Edison wrote in 1916 to a party, in which he said he thought a Supreme Being managed the universe. It has been told how he was going to have a book printed on silver leaves by a curious mechanical process, thus making the "most valuable book in the world." Yet, apparently Mr. Edison never did the simple thing, the logical thing, and the wonderfully helpful thing, namely, declare his personal faith in God and join a church. Our purpose is not to follow the tangled skein of lacelike evidence, but rather to say to millions and thousands now living, especially men: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and declare your faith." How often have we seen this scene enacted on a smaller scale in households where friends and neighbors have sought for every shred of evidence they could grasp that the dead husband and father and friend Christian. Yet he had failed to supply that one comprehensive of evidence which means so much to loved ones. It was a one than Calvin Coolidge while President of the United States and living in the White House, who went down to his church Sabbath and united on confession of faith. Mr. Edison might say one that. To be sure, it is inward grace and not outward which is the essential, but granted the inward grace, how important becomes the outward act.—The Presbyterian.

EDUCATIONAL APPOINTED IN TESTS AND MEASUREMENTS

David Segel, of Long Beach, California, was appointed as a specialist in educational tests and measurements in the Federal Bureau of Education research and investigation division. The creation of this position was authorized by the Seventy-first Congress. Segel's work will be to conduct studies concerned with the comparison and evaluation of tests and measurements of pupil proficiency of teaching, and adequacy of the school program, to cooperate with various bureaus of research, making studies in this field, and to the end of advising and assisting school officials in surveys or studies of school systems.

CHRISTIANS IN JAPAN ARE PRAYING

"At the age of nineteen," said Dr. Kagawa of Japan, "I began praying in the streets. During the past twenty years I have preached three sermons every day, year in and year out. On more than one occasion I have witnessed miraculous answer to prayer. Christians in many parts of the world have forgotten how to pray, the Christian people of Japan are praying as never before, those who are praying have faith that their prayers will be answered."

Kagawa has demonstrated by his works and consecrated life that he is worthy to be the author of the foregoing words. He says there are now 2,000 ministers in Japan as compared to 70,000 who advocate Shintoism, and 200,000 priests who advocate Buddhism. There is great need of clerical and lay leaders. They are praying that by some way the message of the living Christ be brought to the hearts of the millions of people who live in the villages of Japan. Until that is done Christianity cannot be regarded as a vital force in the remaking of the Japanese nation. Christian-Evangelist.

ITALIAN SAVANTS RESENT NEW OATH OF MUSSOLINI

Several of Italy's best known educators have expressed indignation at being compelled to take the new oath designed to wipe out opposition to Premier Benito Mussolini, and have frankly declared their intentions not to take it. Their reasons are that the oath destroys all initiative and liberty of academic expression. The oath reads:

"I swear to be loyal to the King, to his royal successors and to the Fascist regime and to observe loyally the constitution and other laws of the state; to exercise the function of a teacher and to fulfill my academic duties with the idea of forming industrious citizens; to be upright and devoted to the country and to the Fascist regime. I swear that I do not belong and shall never belong to any political party whose activities are irreconcilable with the requirements of high office."

Twenty professors of the University of Padua and others of the Universities of Bologna and Rome are said to have decided not to take the oath.

Need of New Attention to be Given to the Bible

world; and also at the moral and economic defects in society, in business relations, and in the distribution of the common resources of the world, which are responsible for the remaining part. The Bible is the only hope of individuals and of society. And the Bible is the only book which tells his story. It alone preserves his life, which are spirit and life. It alone records his deeds by which he saved the world, and would save it now if we would obey

The best thing men can do is to spread the Bible and to get it read and obeyed. This would be the end of hard times, of poverty, of unemployment, of injustice, or wrong or war.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Luke 1:1-4. "Only an introduction," these verses have often been called, but how satisfying they are! This man Luke, the beloved physician, especially states that he has personally been thoroughly familiar with all these things from the very first, and that it is his purpose to present an orderly account of the whole story. And his story bears all the earmarks of a true and faithful account by an eye witness. Furthermore, some facts that appeared doubtful have been fully verified by the findings of archaeologists, and secular historians have even been obliged to correct their histories from Luke's account. He KNEW whereof he spoke, and he wanted us also to know the CERTAINTY of those things. How the world needs certainties today! May we walk as seeing with certainty, leading others in the right way, not as blind leaders of the blind!

TUESDAY

Luke 1:5-9. Note in this passage how specifically Luke mentions names, times, and places. And these things were written in the days when they could easily have been disproved, if false. God had a great honor in store for Zacharias and Elisabeth, but then from of old his law has been, "Them that honor me I will honor." What a splendid testimony to their character: "They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." By the grace that is in Christ Jesus this CAN be true of every Christian today: God help us to grow in grace, and in knowledge of the truth!

WEDNESDAY

Luke 1:10-17. Frequently, during the earthly ministry of our Lord, his disciples grieved him with their bickering as to who should be greatest in the kingdom. Here we may learn what God considers great: John was to be counted great in the sight of the Lord because he should turn many to the Lord, making ready a people prepared for him. Let those who would be great today follow John's example, and strive to lead many into a knowledge of God.

THURSDAY

Luke 1:18-20. It is not to be wondered at that the aged Zacharias should doubt and question in his amazement, yet because he doubted the words of Gabriel he was stricken dumb for nearly a year. God does not change, but his ways of dealing with men DO change, or we would all be dumb today, for how much worse it must seem to God when we doubt his own word! Increase our faith, O Lord!

FRIDAY

Luke 1:21-25. When a man comes into close and intimate contact with the things of God, no words are necessary to inform others of the fact; it shines forth in his face, and is evidenced in his every act. If we would but spend more time in his presence, we should surely bear, more unmistakably, his image in our own faces, and the world about us must be a better place in which to live.

SATURDAY

Luke 1:26-33. What a wonderful honor and privilege was here given to Mary by her heavenly visitor! To be the mother of the long-promised Messiah, who was to save his people from their sins, and to re-establish the kingdom forever! Since the days of Isaiah (Isa. 7:14), and even before that time, the maidens of Israel had perhaps dared to dream that they might be the chosen one, and now Mary was chosen. Today God has many precious things in store for us all, and the choice lies with us. May we be humble and willing!

SUNDAY

Luke 1:34-35. Mary had more reason to doubt and question than had Zacharias, yet it is significant that there was no doubt—only an earnest inquiry as to how it might come about. And what wonder and mystery there must ever be in that 35th verse! We may never understand it, but this much we know: by the power of the Highest our Lord was born of a virgin and is truly the Son of God. Let us praise him for his wondrous love and power!

Teachers of Girls

By Amanda Fahnestock

A Definite Purpose

She should have in mind a definite purpose and a standard of character toward which she would lead her girls. She should be able to see them as she would have them be when they must assume the active duties of life. Her constant effort, then, should be to establish in them high ideals of life, and correct ideas of right. In aiding them to attain these she should always have uppermost in her thought the leading of non-Christian girls to Christ, and the training of those who are already Christians for fuller service.

Respect for Honest Opinions and Beliefs

On almost every conceivable subject except religion and the Bible men and women are able to reason together. Unfortunately, on these subjects they are inclined to be unreasonable and lacking in charity, which is all wrong and exceedingly unbecoming. The teacher will find that her girls have opinions and beliefs of their own. They should be encouraged at all times to express their convictions in class. If the teacher considers that a girl is in error, she must kindly and gently lead her into the light, and not use this as an occasion for airing her own views. Girls are very sensitive about having their beliefs criticised in public, and are almost certain to desert the teacher who does not respect what they have been led to believe is true. It takes rare tact to be able at all times to do what is best in this regard. It is infinitely wiser to say nothing when what is considered a wrong opinion is expressed, than to attempt to refute it in class. The tactful teacher will find opportunity at another time to say something that will avoid any ill effects that the wrong opinion might produce in other members of the class. Her silence will be sufficient to convince the one who has expressed it that her teacher does not agree with her.

What Girls Should Be Taught

If woman is to occupy the position in society which we have assigned her in our first topic, she must have special teaching along lines that will fit her for her peculiar calling.

There are many things that girls should know, but there are some things that they must be brought to realize with great clearness, if they are to fill the place God has designed they should occupy. Space will allow mention of only a few of these. They should be taught:

1. To study the character of God.

They should early be led into a study of this subject, because, upon their conception of God, will depend the character of their religious life. In nearly every lesson something can be learned on this subject. A good way to stimulate thought along this line is to have them look for this in each lesson for a time. Thus they will acquire at first hand a very satisfying knowledge of God. The need of such knowledge is clearly seen in the language of Jesus in John 17:3.

2. The sacredness of the marriage relation.

Since our girls are to be the future mothers of the race the great need of clear teaching along this line is apparent. Jesus gives some very definite instructions on this subject.

3. The duties of a home-maker.

Every normal girl expects at some time to be mistress of a home. She should therefore be taught the sanctity of the home, the place of woman in it, and that the end of all right education for woman is to make her love her home better than any other place in all the world.

4. That a many-sided education is a valuable asset.

While the natural sphere of woman is that of a home maker, there is a possibility, if not a strong probability, that she will at some time have to fight life's battles alone. She should therefore be taught how to be useful in more than one sphere of life.

5. The beauty and value of the simple life.

In this age it is especially needful that this be taught to our girls, both by precept and example. By the simple life we do not mean merely simplicity in dress, although this is very essential, but that the entire life be free from ostentation and display.

6. True patriotism.

Girls should be taught to have a real interest in the affairs of the nation. The time has come when Christian women can not ignore their duty and responsibility in these matters.

7. Her relation to society.

She should be made to realize that her relation to society is that of a servant, and that she should be a "society woman" in a sense very different from what is commonly expressed by the term. She should realize, also, that there is no true happiness in the selfish life. It is a good thing to give the girls some service to perform, that they may learn the joy of doing.

The Six Days Following Sunday

The hour spent with the class on Sunday is by no means the whole of the successful teacher's work. Her contact with the girls outside of the teaching hour is productive of as much good in shaping their lives and molding their characters as is the teaching work.

In these six days she must find her opportunity for visiting their homes. She must acquaint herself with the girls' manner of life and surroundings, and prove herself a true friend by manifesting an interest in their everyday affairs and making herself generally helpful. Here, too, she must find her opportunity for meeting with them in a social way. She should, whenever possible, mingle with them in their pleasures and in and in their innocent fun. There is no better method than this for safeguarding their amusements, and at the same time winning their confidence. There is a sense in which a teacher should be one with her girls; the human heart opens only to that which opens in return. She must, however, maintain a certain dignity, keeping above the plane on which her girls are living, but not so far above that the students seem to them too high to be attempted.

The Teacher's Great Opportunity

If the teachers of girls could be made to realize fully the great opportunity which is theirs; if they could be made to embrace the sentiment as a religious principle that it is their prerogative to have a large share in lifting the world from its present moral degradation, and in bringing about right conditions in human society, would be fewer indifferent teachers, and would be more purposeful teaching. No greater service can be rendered to the world than to society a well-taught and well-trained Christian womanhood. We firmly believe that Horace Mann was right when he said that a wise womanhood could take the world by the man race into its arms as a mother, and her babe, shield it from harm, nurse it into immortal strength and beauty, and thus into such a glorious manhood as should be worthy of its nature and its Author.

No Room for Discouragement

In view of the facts just stated, the teacher of girls become discouraged, or her being spurred on to greater effort. She should find herself lacking in equipment, let her remember that very few teachers are perfect, but that many are made through education and training.

If she "lack wisdom let him (her) seek the Lord, who giveth to all liberally and without reproach, and it shall be given to him" (James 1:5).

If her own Christian character does not measure up to the standard, let her seek to strengthen it, remembering that Christian life is a growth, and that it has yet reached that perfection of character exemplified in the Great Teacher, Christ. Imperfections will not unfit her for success as a teacher, but indifference to these imperfections will.

May we, then, as teachers of girls, realize our high calling, and so well do our work that we may continue to live in those who have been instrumental in preparing noble Christian service, and so be able to bless the world, even after our life on earth is ended. May we remember that faith in God is holiest worship, and that divine work is revealed through duty done.—Selected material.

Introductory Note

The first Greek word of this book is Apokalypsis, commonly styled the Apocalypse, or the Revelation (i. e., the revealing or unveiling of that which has been hidden). It is also called the Revelation of St. John the Divine (Ro. 16:25, 26;) as consisting of revelations which were made by our risen Lord le John. This took place when he was banished, as is supposed by the Roman Emperor A. D. 94 or 95. Some writers place the banishment and the revelation before the destruction of Jerusalem, i. e., during the persecution of A. D. 67 or 68; but the arguments for this are by no means conclusive. The best informed Christian writers as Irenaeus, Eusebius and others ascribe the book to the apostle John; and the internal evidence and allusions to the existing state of the seven Asiatic churches, the date; especially the great which appears to have taken place in the Ephesian church, Re. 2:4, 5, in his Epistle written from Rome as late as A. D. 63, had warmed for the fidelity and love of the church, cf. Eph. 1:1-18. After a prefatory vision of Christ, the chapters of Revelation contain prophetic messages to the seven churches of Asia, which also containings and directions to the church in every age.—Selected.

The Book of Revelation

The Book of Revelation was a message to the church in its darkest hours, when "the darkness" combined to overshadow it from the face of the sun and it seemed trampled in irremediable darkness. It expressed the thoughts of the apostle John who had seen Peter crucified and Paul in the lurid light of the bale-fires of Rome. We must try to feel as the apostle felt when they saw their brethren as living torches, each a living torch, on one ghastly night in the days of earth's darkest hour. Inundations and volcanic outbursts, horrible prodigies. Alike, Rome and Jerusalem had been deluged with masses of human life seemed to be the sea of blood." This vision was given to encourage both John and the church of Christ that were in trouble. It told them that their risen Lord had not forgotten them, but was still mindful of them; if they were in trouble, he would be in their midst. He still had power over their enemies, and nothing could happen without his permission. Though the powers should try their best to oppress them, they could not accomplish anything since the Son of God had larger power than they.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Outstanding Truths

These truths are to be translated into sermons and are the paths God blazes for us. They indicate his will for the life of our lives. But they are of no use unless we make them practical by following their lead in such service as may be required. We would be the most comforting and encouraging statements in the entire Bible if we had not written the vision as he was exists eternally and makes his existence continuously felt. In our thinking to shut up God in some far-off heaven, enjoying the praises and of the angels, but without a care for the world and its inhabitants whom he has created so loose and careless thinking. No one can be seriously thoughtful for even a short while without being conscious of a power and influence which are superior to the material things about us and that they are controlled with wisdom and love. God is always and everywhere present in his creation to operate it in harmony with his will, and men cannot escape being conscious of him.

3. All power and authority reside in Christ. After his resurrection Jesus said to his disciples, "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth." The thing which is amazing is that so few seek this source of power. A stranger thing still is that so few who seek to develop power follow the lead he gives to find it. Only a very few are willing to trust Christ's rules for power and success. Who, for instance, actually believes that the "meek shall inherit the earth"? Men who want to win practice exactly the opposite. This is true of practically all of Christ's laws of life.

4. There can be no excuse for an incomplete Christian experience. The only thing which dwarfs us in attainment or practice is sin. Since Christ has "loosed us" from our sins and saved us from their power and penalty, what excuse can there be for incompleteness in him? And yet most of us go limping along at a poor dying rate both in practice and experience. Surely God must love us greatly to be so patient with us!

5. Even in his majesty and power Christ is full of grace and tenderness for his own. When John fell as one dead before the majesty of the glorified Savior, he restored him by a touch, just as he used to restore the sick when he walked on the earth and comforted him with "Fear not." This is proof of the truth that "lo he is with us always, even unto the end of the world." Even a really great man does not forsake his old friends when wealth and honor come to him; much less will Christ do it.

6. Some experiences are beyond our finite powers. It is a well-known fact that it is impossible for us to express our deepest and highest emotions. We live much in the middle range of all our powers. Only upon rare occasions can or do we draw on the reserve of which we all become conscious at times. We sometimes speak of men "going beyond themselves." We mean that they have drawn upon their higher selves. But even when that is done the infinite overwhelms us and we find ourselves powerless.—Otterbein Teacher.

More Christ in Christian Endeavor

By Leslie Lindower

(Concluded from last week)

In regard to Bible study, our C. E. finds itself in a difficult position as far as its prayer meeting programs are concerned. We are trying to serve Christ and the church by maintaining a Biblical stand in the face of an apostasy on the part of many other denominations, yet there are no programs and no comments on them (except an inadequate number in the Evangelist and Angelus) unless we turn to the papers and quarterlies of these same other denominations. The comments that more nearly fit our needs than any other have been found in the Christian Endeavor Quarterly published by the Standard Publishing Co. of Cincinnati. The background of this quarterly is not modernistic, but seems to be post-millennial, and so the doctrine of the Second Coming of our Lord, one of the greatest doctrines of the Word, is slighted. If our C. E. is going to serve the purpose for which the Brethren Church has been preserved it must be able to present in a systematic manner the whole round of Biblical doctrine.

In the face of this difficulty some pastors have adopted different plans to take care of the deficiencies. One is the "Pastor's five minutes" in which he can present what has been lacking in the program, but where, oftentimes, excellent opportunity is given for the study of some great Bible truth. Another method is a sheet of written comments on the topic, handed one week or two ahead of time to the program committee to incorporate into the study of the topic. This method may substitute undesirable suggestions contrary to the Word with constructive Bible study, or add, where the opportunity presents itself, the study of great Biblical doctrines. This system can be used better where the pastor must divide his time with two or more churches. But the great weakness with anything like this is that most program committees are not prepared to properly incorporate this sort of study into the topic, and harmonize it with the rest of the program.

But why should it be necessary to resort to such unsatisfactory methods? If our Sunday schools have Brethren literature, why cannot the C. E. have a Brethren quarterly to use? The Brethren Church ought, for the sake of holding its young people for Christ and the Church, appoint a board for the purpose of editing notes on the C. E. topics in a quarterly of its own. This would provide opportunity for the outlining of a different course of topics for the studying of Biblical doctrines, with all the fascination which the whole Bible upon a given subject provides. One of the best studies for Christian young people is the study of the spiritual life. It is a study which opens the eyes of young people in regard to their present relationship with their Lord. The best guide in this study is Dr. L. S. Chafer's book, "He that is Spiritual." Dr. Chafer's course on this same subject in the Evangelical Theological College, Dallas, Texas, is for many, the most fascinating and helpful of all the courses given by the institution. Whether or not the Brethren C. E. would see fit to change the course of its program topics from the international list, a Brethren C. E. quarterly would give the best opportunity for harmonizing the study with great doctrines of the Word, for which we stand.

The knack of asking questions which we find in little boys has not altogether left the nature of young people by the time they reach and finish their teens, and so it would be a fine thing for us to give them the opportunity to task all their questions about Biblical doctrines in our C. E. gatherings. We need have no fear that the Bible, with proper handling, will not prove its own claims. In fact, it is this sort of study, the method by which we ask the Bible questions and let it answer for itself, that settles the controversy on the inspiration of the Bible for young minds, and gives them an interest and appetite for Bible study.

Let the Christian Endeavor accomplish anything in helping the Brethren Church to maintain its position,—a little power, keeping the Lord's Word, not denying his name,—and its slogan, "For Christ and the Church," will be fulfilled. In the words of our blessed Lord, "I have set before thee a door opened which none can shut."

he did not know to how great a his inheritance had accumulated.

With queer inconsistency he collected most petty savings, but whenever he was needed by railway always paid for accommodation, and sometimes served a compartment for the same vacancy.

That he was not without a sense of humor, even if the joke was at his expense, is illustrated by a story he told of a bargain with a plumber for some repairs in his house when, to reduce the estimated cost of the repairs by 2s. 6d., he undertook to act instead of the boy who was to assist the workman, a bargain which involved him in much toilsome fiddling with carrying, and finally resulted in his having to pay 2s. 6d. for a cab to convey him home with a heavy load of tools which the workman insisted it was the "boy's" job to carry. He much enjoyed being able to retort on an old Quaker friend of his father's, who had chided him upon wearing so shabby a hat in Leeds, where his late father had been much honored, that the hat in question was actually his father's hat!

Among the few people who were welcomed through the jealously closed doors of his house none were more welcomed than those who found it more difficult to withdraw from an eager interested conversation of the recluse than those who could tell him of their own experiences in foreign lands, what he so much desired to know of the possibilities and prospects of world evangelization. One of the early Congo missionaries called to see him on a winter evening and had to sit with his host over a fire with but a single candle to light the room. After a few minutes' talk, Mr. Arthington suggested that, as they were sitting in the dark, it would be economical to put out the candle, which the young Lushai missionary, who had been home from several years' absence in the wilds, had been so thoughtless as to do. Their tailors and get some new English wear before their interview. He brought upon themselves a mild rebuke for a worldly indulgence in bodily attire which was certainly in marked contrast to their missionary supporter.

After he had passed the age of when his health was much impaired and constrained to dispose of his house and to go and live in South Devon, he remained in simple apartment death.

The late Dr. G. H. Rouse used to find much amusement that while he was in London from India, staying in the house of Mr. Arthington, having heard at a Baptist church that this Indian missionary in the neighborhood, sought him for apartments in which he was staying. Dr. Rouse naturally assumed, in discussing missionary topics with him, chiefly to get his advice and help in getting some cheaper lodgings than those which Mr. Arthington was then spending.

The making of his will gave a solemnity to him, and to his chosen trustees. It was a long and involved document. After a few legacies, he was to receive one-tenth, the Baptist Missionary Society was to receive one-fifth, the London Missionary Society for the same purpose. These large missionary bequests were spent wholly on new work in all parts of the world, nothing was to be spent among Mohammedans, no endowment to be set up, and the whole fund

Robert Arthington—"A Miser" for Christ

By C. E. Wilson, B.A.

A generation ago, on the 9th of October, 1900, there died at the age of seventy-seven years one of the most remarkable characters the Christian Church of England has ever produced. In the annals of the Baptist Missionary Society, and perhaps in all British Missions, the name of Robert Arthington is the most notable after that of Dr. Carey. By his self-sacrifice and voluntary poverty he made possible the largest single bequest to foreign missions that has been known in Great Britain. The whole story of the advance of the English Baptist Missionary Society in the last twenty-six years is closely linked up with the Arthington Fund, and it is no small part of the financial embarrassment of the present time that, with the exhaustion of that Fund, the full responsibility of maintaining those vigorous and fruitful enterprises which were started by that Fund, and have thus far been supported by it, is about to fall upon the Society.

Robert Arthington was born of a Quaker family in Leeds, on the 20th of May, 1823. His father, Robert Arthington, gave up his business as a brewer for conscientious reasons, and his mother, Maria Arthington, was a woman of high character and refinement. She had considerable literary gifts and wrote several volumes of poetry. He had no brother, and his sisters left no children. He himself never married. He had the advantage of a good education, first in Leeds, and afterwards at Kendal and Cambridge. He became a deeply religious man, but though he associated a good deal with Baptists and was a liberal contributor to the Baptist Missionary Society, he never became a member of a Baptist church.

His religious views were held with great strength of conviction. He believed that the Second Advent of our Lord awaited only the fulfillment of the commission to "evangelize" all nations in the literal sense of proclaiming, in a language that could be understood by each tribe in the world, the message of Christ's redeeming work. That thought became a dominant motive with him, and he conceived it as his special purpose in life to devote the large fortune he had inherited, and all that he could add to it by penurious care, to the rapid increase of new missionary enterprises. Among his papers was found after his death, evidently much studied and cherished, this quotation from an impassioned utterance by George King:

"Were I in England again, I would gladly live in one room, make the floor my bed, a box my chair, and another my table, rather than that the heathen world should perish for lack of the knowledge of Christ."

With almost literal exactness Robert Arthington acted for years according to that ideal.

He invested his money under skilled advice and with great care. He reduced his own scale of living to the scantiest limits. Though he continued to occupy his large house in Headingley, he gave up keeping any servant and used but one room, lived as a miserly recluse, did his own cooking at the fire in his dining room, reduced his meat allowance to one sausage a day, gathered his firewood from under the trees after a storm, wore shabby clothes, and endured the common taunt of being a miser. But he spent his life in poring over maps and books of travel. His liberal education had given him broad interests, and he gained an expert and detailed knowledge of the geography of non-Christian lands and the conditions of their people.

The achievements of the great explorers of the Victorian Era filled him with enthusiasm, and led him to make offers of large donations to missionary societies to follow up those explorations by evangelistic effort. The Congo Mission of the Baptist Missionary Society may be said to have been in large measure due to the vision and the challenge of Robert Arthington, whose gift of £1,000 made possible the first expedition of Comber and Grenfell. The first mission steamer, Peace, which did such service on the Upper Congo, under its famous explorer-evangelist, George Grenfell, was the gift of Mr. Arthington. The first missionaries to the Lushai Hills, Assam, India, J. Herbert Lorrain and Fred W. Savidge, were sent out by Mr. Arthington and maintained by him personally. They only joined the Baptist Mission after his death. He also gave considerable sums to the Church Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society and other societies, in some cases anonymously.

He kept no ordinary bank account. His finances were managed for him by his brokers, and until a short time before his death within twenty-five years. It was as it stood, the will could not be administered, and a decision of the Court had to be invoked. The estate of Mr. Arthington was declared at $943,130, but because of the Court proceedings were the finally amended scheme was passed, the value had reached $1,026,746. Under this scheme, after payment of legacies to relatives, a Special Trust Fund was set up to be administered by executors for general missionary and philanthropic purposes in harmony with the intentions of the testator as expressed in his will—From the Baptist Missionary Magazine.

CALVARY AND MOUNT OLIVET

I attended two blessed Communion services since our last message to the district—one at Calvary, New Jersey where the pastor is and the other at Mt. Olivet in Delaware. I was indeed blessed with the dear people at Calvary. Many of these dear people were years ago. I shall never forget the struggle we had to build that church. C. Cassel came to their rescue and the Pennsylvania State Mission helped them. Now this work is self-sustaining and has a consecrated, sacrificial leadership. They are now looking forward to the time they can employ a pastor full time. Pray for this faithful church. It had a spiritually uplifting communion that also gave me the great privilege of communing with my son for the first time in more than ten years.

A woman, who has been denied the sacrament of communion for years on account of affliction, was also present. How blessed she was with wife, daughter, son and was born into the Kingdom at this Feast.

Our services at Mt. Olivet at the close of the year, hence all could not be, but we had a spiritual uplift. I was impressed at the spiritual feelings of the women. Most of them would offer before washing their sister's feet. I had a profound impression upon me to think upon all present. We returned more into the church by relation and report. The financial depression struck this field hard. No farmers receive any money for two years, and they have lost heavily, hence they would not, but such as they give—namely, themselves for the Lord's cause. Pray for them.

DALLAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE REPORT

The conference was held in the First Baptist Church, Dallas Center, Iowa, October 11, 1931. On the evening of the 10th the conference was called to order by Moderator C. C. Grisso. From the beginning the conference was in full swing during the busy days of October 9, 10, and 11.

The conference at that time of the week was a thing to most of us. It was a wise move that had been made. Many had the opportunity of attending a conference who otherwise could not have

In fact the arrangement was considered so successful that it was voted to continue the week end time for our next conference. The time of the next conference of this district is to be in June after schools are closed for vacation. The executives of the conference are to determine the exact date. The conference is to be held in the Cerro Gordo, Illinois, Brethren church.

We should like very much to take the time and space to tell you of some of the good things of the Conference, which was acclaimed by those present as one of the very best we have had in the history of this district. However, at this late date of reporting (due to sickness in my home at the time of the conference and following, and a quarantine) we feel it best to make this report short. We are sending to The Evangelist the Moderator's Address, which was requested for publication. Also we include here a complete report of the present officers of the district.

The speakers from away, who were our guests at the Conference, were as follows: Miss Estella Myers from the African Mission field. All who have heard Miss Myers know how intensely interesting she makes her addresses.

Dr. W. S. Bell, who gave us first a sermon on the subject "The Church of Jesus Christ," based on Matthew 16:13-20, the main points of which were (I) Why the Church? and (II) The Business of the Church, and needless to say, we saw the Church in a new light. We had a new evaluation of it that will not soon fade out of our hearts and memories. Dr. Bell also spoke to us concerning "Ashland College"; I. Her Advances, II. Her Present Needs, III. Her Continuing Advances. Here again we were informed, and stirred to the realization of gains thus far made and the need to press on.

Elder R. Paul Miller of the National Home Mission Board, was with us and delivered a sermon the subject of which was "The Coming Glory," Text: Col. 3:4. Chief headings were (I) The Glory of Perfect Physical Health. (II) The Glory of Reunion. (III) The Glory of Transformation. (IV) The Glory of Future Rewards. (V) The Crowning Glory. Brother Miller surely stirred, warmed and fed our hearts with the message of God's Word.

Dr. McCartney Smith of Waterloo, Iowa, was in attendance at the conference during the early sessions but did not have a part in the regular program.

The Dallas Center church is to be highly commended, together with its pastor, for the splendid way we were entertained.

The officary is printed herewith for your information.

GRAFTON-TERRA ALTA, W. VA. CIRCUIT

On November 4-8 inclusive, the Whitedale Brethren church at Terra Alta, was engaged in a special series of services on the general theme: "What the Brethren Church believes and why she believes it." The topics for the messages each evening were: "Salvation," "Baptism," "The Lord's Supper," "Anointing with Oil," and "The Washing of the Saints' Feet," respectively. The services were completed with the observance of the communion on Sunday evening. There was good attendance and interest in these meetings and there were those present each evening who were not members of the Brethren church, but who were interested in our beliefs and practices. The Lord gave his blessing to our efforts. The speaker was the pastor.

The week following, from November 11-15, this same series was repeated in the First Brethren church at Grafton, with the pastor as speaker. Here there was a marked increase in attendance and interest which was very noticeable and encouraging to all. As a result of these services four members were added to the church by Confession of the Lord and baptism. As has been our practice for some time, the service of prayer and Bible study followed this series on Monday night in which there was a record attendance of forty. This is at least equal to the average attendance of our regular Sunday services and more than double the prayer meeting average attendance. The Lord is moving the hearts and lives of the Grafton Brethren, and we are praying that soon he will see fit to bring in a great harvest from the unsaved.

Will the Brethren remember us in prayer that this work may be built up in him; that the people may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and may be instruments through whom the Lord might save many more in these communities? Our fight is harder, due to the fact that these churches have been for some time without regular pastoral service until this year.

Yours in Christ,
L. E. LINDOWER.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH NEWS Johnstown, Pennsylvania

The church decided to have a revival campaign under the leadership of Brother Wm. Schaffer, of Conemaugh. The meetings began November the first and continued two weeks. From the beginning, Brother Schaffer fitted into the membership family and was heartily supported by the regular attendants. Like all church work in well church territory, the attendance was almost entirely Christian. Few unsaved people can be found among the average attendants of any service and our problem was the awakening of the unsaved.

Brother Schaffer's sermons were inspiring and the whole two weeks found the church pervaded by a deeply reverent feeling of responsibility. The final results were, first, four young people confessing Christ for the first time, three of whom are already baptized and the fourth will be shortly. Second, a general feeling of renewed hope and enthusiasm. Third, a larger attendance in both Sunday school and church. The congregation deeply appreciated the loan of the pastor from the Conemaugh church and feels a closer bond as a result of their kindness.

The general condition of the Second church is splendid. The Sunday school averaging a much larger attendance this past year than the preceding one. We hover constantly toward the one hundred mark and are aiming to make our attendance average the "century" figures. Not the least encouraging sign of growth is the church attendance, which for a city church and that located in a well church section, is the high average percentage at church. Normally we have a church attendance of the same number as the Sunday school and on several occasions larger. To the average city preacher this is an unusual condition. The pastor deeply appreciates the loyalty.

The undersigned is giving only preaching service to the Second church, due to several causes. The church is small and the Mission Board has been its main dependence in financial support, the past few years. The Board is not in a position just now to assist very materially, so the congregation must face the situation, depending upon itself. This is somewhat of a hardship in normal times, but rather a hard one in a period of depression. However, we have every reason to be thankful that so far, we have creditably "carried on." We are slowly liquidating our building debt, and hope in a couple of years to have a beautiful moderate sized brick building paid for and free from a burden of debt. We are looking forward to the building of a parsonage on the other end of our lot. At present we believe we have one of the prettiest brick mission chapels in the brotherhood. We bespeak the prayers of the brotherhood for this work. Then too the undersigned has an exceedingly full time job in handling some twelve to thirteen hundred Boy Scouts and an adult leadership of between five and six hundred men. This is preventing us from doing any pastoral work, and apparently with but little loss in morale to the congregation. However at best it is only a temporary arrangement. Just as soon as it is possible we will secure a pastor. Until then we are doing the best we can.

The Y. P. S. C. E. is ranking second in percentage of interest and activity in the group of Conemaugh Valley societies, which includes all of the societies in this area.

The W. M. S. is also functioning splendidly. These constitute the chief means by which a church of this size is able to face the tasks before it and consider itself in a position to do worth while work for the Master. Other organizations might be attempted, but with a small membership, the scattering of energy and enthusiasm over too great a field is more depressing than encouraging. Our goal is to do well, what we are doing, with what talent we have, until by the goodness of God, we are given greater responsibilities. We are glad to report that even if we do not have a great host of people, we surely "Be Brethren."

GEORGE H. JONES.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND "The Gateway to the South"

Sunday evening, November 22d, was the closing service of a three weeks' evangelistic campaign held in the Hagerstown, Maryland church. The pastor, Rev. Frank G. Coleman, delivered the sermons while Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer of Peru, Indiana, assisted by the regular church organist, Mr. Kretzer, took charge of the singing and music.

The weather was ideal and the most unusual in interest and attendance. The first meeting was well attended each evening saw an increase in attendance until on the first Sunday evening necessary to turn away perhaps persons who could not be accommodated in the church auditorium, the balcony and choir loft. All during the second week the church was well filled, with the Sunday evenings overflowing.

Each evening brought strangers, evidently well pleased as they were, and seen in the audience later, strangers whom they had no doubt met with them. Instead of a weariness might be expected at the end of a meeting of this length, there was an interest and the meeting came to a close with the expression of many regrets.

Too much cannot be said about the work and devotion of Brother Richer. Mr. Richer directed and congregational singing, favored the audience with several solos each evening, always gave one or two very good readings. Mrs. Richer played the piano while Mr. Kretzer played the church organ. She also delighted here hearers with a number of violin solos throughout the week and on one occasion was accompanied by violin duet by Mr. Boone of W. D. C. We were also pleased to hear several vocal duets with her husband, pleasing personalities soon captured the admiration of their audiences.

Rev. Coleman's masterful sermon, much thought and effort and the strictest attention of the laity. Although the church was warm on account of the weather, the audiences seemed eager to hear every word, so forcefully and in a way delivered unto them from God's Word.

The musical period of one evening over entirely to fifty children by Mr. and Mrs. Richer. Their program consisted of songs, scripture quotations, object lessons and was most effective and instructive.

The success of any such meeting can be measured in the number of conversions alone—thank God—although this is not the essential part of it. At a short meeting nineteen confessions were made and at the meeting just closed twenty-nine, making a total of forty-eight. Of this number one came by letter to another church, forty-two were new members and four are waiting for baptism. There are still others considering the matter, giving their hearts to Christ and hope that they may yet surrender to the effort put forth in the past week.

Notwithstanding the present financial disturbance, the budget for the next year met without personal solicitation and the offering was very good, showing that Christians still have a heart for God's work.

One of the finest things about Hagerstown is the splendid feeling of good ship it has aroused in the hearers, members as well as their friends. It is not measure the distance such friends reach, nor the everlasting good that come from it. Somehow we feel that the meeting has been exceptionally successful in the church and wonderfully instrumental in promoting interest in the church and the community.

Interest in the meeting was the Sunday school, which was closed Sunday, November 22d, with an attendance of four hundred fifty-five, breaking previous highest record by fifty. Honors went to the adult's men's class with an individual attendance of three hundred seven.

The final service of the meeting took place on the occasion of the loyal occasion to comment on the loyalty given them by the choir and to them and others for the splendid concert and entertainment given them during their stay. Rev. Coleman, in whose presence they had resided, responded with a message of appreciation from the church for their stirring efforts and enthusiasm which was so instrumental in making the success it was.

Mrs. Richer left Monday morning, November 23rd, enroute to South Bend, stopping off over Thanksgiving. Her brother in Scotdale, Pa., took with them the prayers and best for themselves and the meeting. They will hold with Brother Wirick church at Ardmore, Indiana, beginning November 29th.

EDUCATION FOR TOMORROW

Increasingly the slowing up of American progress on all lines is forcing a redefinition of institutions upon us. The emphasis on material expansion has run its course. The "interim" period between the era of production and exploitation and the era of leisure and culture is one of bewilderment, heartache, despair, and drastic re-orientation. Habits of life, yes, basic well-being are suffering serious redefinition. All branches of human learning are at a corner. Serious consideration is being given to the problems of Reality and the ability to know it. Men in social sciences look for the Real!

There is no doubt but that today education, which largely determines the outlook and basic cosmic attitude of the individual, will have to undergo a similar maturation. One wonders what will re-orient twenty-five years from now, when the impact of our modern floundering philosophy of education will be felt socially! Educational leaders must get busy as they come from the predominantly technical and scientific tendency of yesterday, and re-education along lines of culture—and

The emphasis upon technique and industrial leadership and expansion, which necessarily perish, but it must be modified and undergirded. In the colleges must devote more time to the branches which will not necessarily furnish the graduates with more than a strong philosophy of life.

College graduates out of work, or even the case, working at menial jobs, it is necessary that they be furnished with richness of inner life, so that when the material success, they will possess, is an education, as someone said, not only train men to get more bread, but men a greater appreciation of life, however meager.

Education must train youth in the higher wisdom that is its own reward. Education today is too utilitarian in its design. It is straddled as a pass into a better situated class, instead of an equipment for inner richness and social benefit. This pragmatic tendency will increasingly have to go.

What this implies for the Christian College of Liberal Arts is evident. It may involve sacrifice along many lines. The college may be compelled again to sell itself to folks, after years of independent existence upon endowments that have estranged it from the life of humanity. It will have to cease measuring its success by the number of graduates who make material successes. It may have to tread again the high and lonely road of the Cross, the absurd path of sacrifice, even a sacrifice in intellectual respectability! It may have to break off bravely its alliance with the Athenian custodians of worldly wisdom! For only Christian education can be the redeeming education of tomorrow!—E. G. Homrighausen in "Reformed Church Messenger."

The Newark Airport, at Newark, New Jersey, is the busiest airport in the world, according to Popular Science Monthly. Fifty passenger planes, each carrying six to eighteen people, land or take off every day, and twelve mail planes land and take off every night. Chicago ranks second, and Los Angeles third. The air traffic from each of these three cities is greater than that from London, Paris, or Berlin.

Part, at least, of the thrill of gliding can be had by bicycle riders whose machines are equipped with wings and tailpiece, says Popular Science Monthly. This glider outfit is the invention of a Dallas, Texas, World War flyer. It consists of small wings and a tailpiece that, he says, can be readily attached to any bicycle.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

DAGUE-MOORE—On Wednesday, August 12, 1931, at the parsonage of the Highland church, Mr. Ernest Dague of Scenery Hill, Pa., and Miss Mildred Moore of Marianna, Pa., R. D. No. 1, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock by the writer. Mr. and Mrs. Dague are both members of the Highland church and are making their home in Scenery Hill. May the Lord richly bless their home. WM. ORAY.

RORABAUGH-MACKALL—At the home of the bride in Vinco, Miss Margaret Mackall and Mr. Daniel Rorabaugh, Miss Mackall has been one of our loyal and devoted members of the Vinco Brethren church and in the presence of a large assemblage which filled the church, the beautiful ring ceremony was used to unite the young people. A Thanksgiving and Bridal dinner was served, after the ceremony, at the bride's home, the ceremony taking place on Thanksgiving afternoon. The best wishes of a large number of friends accompany the young people in their new life.

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor.

IN THE SHADOW

WORKS—Mrs. Anna Cole Works died Wednesday, Oct. 21, 1931, aged 45 years, 9 months and 21 days. She was the daughter of William Cole, and Emily Hager Cole. She leaves to mourn her loss, her father, her husband—Bernard Works, four daughters—Thelma, Marie, Elsie, and Duane, also one sister—Mrs. Thomas Martin and one brother—John Cole.

The deceased was a member of the Brethren church for a number of years and a faithful follower of Jesus Christ. She loved her church, she loved her Bible and she loved her God. She was confined to her bed for many weeks and though her sufferings were great she bore them with a smile and was willing for the Lord's will to be done, knowing he doeth all things well. Her favorite verse of Scripture was Romans 8:28—"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

Funeral services were conducted from Bethel church, Farmington, Pa., October 25, 1931, and burial was made in the cemetery at the church. The prayers and sympathy of their many friends are with the family in this hour of sorrow.

WM. H. CLOUGH.

BECK—John Alexander Beck was born on the Beck homestead, 14 miles south of Fort Scott, Kansas, and suddenly departed this life at the same home October 29, 1931, at the age of 68 years, 3 months and 7 days.

He was well known and highly respected by all who knew him. Many Bourbon County friends from miles around attended the rites as an expression of their respect.

Many beautiful floral offerings were made, and the service was conducted from the family home by L. G. Wood, who was an old friend of the family. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

PETERSON—Louise Lavin Peterson was born in Fort Scott, Kansas, on December 20th, 1930, and died very suddenly at the Mercy Hospital at Fort Scott, Kansas, on October 21st, 1931, at the tender age of 10 months and 1 day. She was the infant daughter and only child of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Peterson.

Funeral was conducted by the writer from the Konantz parlors on October 22nd, 1931, and the body was laid to rest in the family lot in Oak Grove Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

WHITTED—Merritt Whitted was born a few miles north-east of Mulvane, Kansas, and departed this life from the same community on October 30th, 1931, at the age of 27 years, 10 months and 17 days. In October, 1917 he entered the service of his country and served until the end of the World war. He served as private and was advanced as a non-commissioned officer.

For the past 10 years he has been a faithful member of the Bethel Brethren church of Mulvane, Kansas. He was very devoted to his mother and home, was a true friend, an upright citizen and always an accommodating and generous neighbor.

He is survived by his mother—Mrs. Marietta W. Edwards; one sister—Mrs. Emma Arnold of Texas; and two brothers—John and Arthur, of Mulvane, Kansas. His death is the fifth in the family, in the past few years. His father, H. O. Whitted, and one brother, Harold, died during the World war. His step-father, Bert Edwards, died about four years ago, and his brother Willy F. Whitted, died less than two years ago. The funeral was conducted from the Bethel Brethren church, Sunday, November 1st, at 2:00 P. M. by the writer. Burial was made in the Mulvane cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

FAHRNEY—Tilghman J. Fahrney was born April 15, 1860, and died at his home in Downsville, Ind., Oct. 16, 1931.

In 1880 Mr. Fahrney united with the German Baptist Church. At the time of the division of the church he cast his lot with the Brethren, and he and sister Fahrney became the first members of what is now the St. James Brethren church. Brother Fahrney served the congregation as deacon from the time of its organization, in 1884, until the time of his death. It was largely through his efforts that the Woodburn church was built. Here he served as a member of the official board, superintendent of the Sunday school and in other positions of trust.

It had never been my pleasure to be associated with Brother Fahrney during any part of his active church life, due to the fact that since some time before my taking the pastorate at St. James he had been confined to an invalid's chair. In spite of his affliction, he continued to conduct his business as a general merchant.

On visiting him in his home or place of business, we always found him cheerful and deeply interested in the church, not only locally but in the general brotherhood.

While Brother Fahrney has been called from our midst, he will not soon be forgotten but the influence of his life will be felt for years to come.

Surviving are his wife—Mrs. Mary L. (nee Poffenberger), two brothers—Norman E. and Walter S., of Hagerstown, and four sisters—Mrs. T. M. Kaylor, Hagerstown; Mrs. Harry Rowland, Paramount; Mrs. Cora Slifer, Hutchinson, Kansas, and Mrs. T. Rodney Coffman, Somerset, Pa.

Funeral services were held in the Brethren church in Hagerstown, conducted by the Rev. H. W. Nowag of Johnstown, Pa., a former pastor, assisted by the writer and the Rev. F. G. Coleman. W. S. BAKER.

NOAKES—Emma Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Wilke, was born in Carroll County, Indiana, February 28, 1868, and died at her home in Flora, November 7, 1931. She is survived by her husband, and three children, all of this county. She is also survived by three sisters. She had been a member of the First Brethren church of Flora for some twenty years. The anointing service was asked for and received a few days before her passing. Funeral services were in charge of the writer, her pastor. Burial was in the Knettle Cemetery, northwest of Flora.

FREEMAN ANKRUN.

HEPLER—Mary Ellen Hepler, wife of Jackson Hepler, was born near Nappanee, May 18, 1860, and departed this life November 13, 1931.

In early life she united with the United Brethren church and 25 years ago came into the First Brethren church of Nappanee, to which church she remained faithful until death.

She was a noble wife, mother, grandmother, and great grandmother. All who knew her called her blessed because of her untiring efforts to help all who needed her assistance.

Her living husband, six children, 23 grandchildren (Myrtal, a graduate of Ashland College, being a grandchild), and 3 great grandchildren, with two brothers and two sisters will greatly miss this dear one.

Services were held at the Hepton church by the writer. BENJ. F. OWEN.

RIBBLETT—Mr. Henry Ribblett of Conemaugh, Pa., was one of the aged residents of this community. Mr. Ribblett was 82 years old and a member of the Presbyterian church. He was buried from the Jackson Lutheran church, the funeral service being conducted by the undersigned, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Schultz, the pastor. Both ministers were old friends of the deceased, who was related to many of our Brethren families of that district. GEORGE H. JONES.

SHUMAN—Adam Shuman, an octogenarian, of Nanty Glo, near the Pike church, was the husband of one of our faithful and loyal old members of the Pike congregation. The undersigned spent many pleasant days with the family as a guest in the first days of our ministry. Mr. Shuman was hospitable and a splendid neighbor but never united with the church. Our sympathy and prayers go out to the loved ones who are bereft of a good father and husband. Services by the undersigned at the home of the deceased. Burial in the Pike cemetery. GEORGE H. JONES.

The Movie an Educator

When a twelve-year-old boy is shot to death in a New Jersey city by his sixteen-year-old companion while they are reenacting a gangster movie show—and it is not an isolated case—it is time to raise some questions. Parents and others responsible for the rearing and education of boys and girls make not be indifferent when such a tragedy takes place. When the lightning may strike in one's own neighborhood, there is no assurance. It is better to be insulated and protected. But more than a personal and family loss are sustained. Society is menaced.

The boys had been to witness a gangster movie film, and "this is the way they did it in the picture, Winslow," cried William as he pulled the trigger of his revolver and shot Winslow Elliot through the temple.

Gangster films educate children and young people, and are not without their strong influence upon more mature minds. As the Newark Evening Times puts it, "There is a glamour about the perilous occupation of the lawbreaker, or there would be none of the palpitating qualities about the picture which are supposed, usually correctly, to give it its drawing power." There must be other drawing powers in pictures, are there not?

It makes no difference if virtue ultimately prevails in the picture and that the enemy of society finally ends in the death chamber. The emotional reaction of the young is commiseration for the criminal who is "hunted by society." The underdog appeals to human sympathy. The Evening News calls attention to a gangster picture shown in a Long Island city when a crowd of happy-faced children screamed with delight every time a gangster shot a policeman. Cannot children be taught to think of policemen as their friends and of gangsters as enemies of the home and its members?

Children should be most diligently safeguarded against devastating pictures of this type. There is no reason why children should see every picture that is put on the screen. Many go every night in the week and sometimes to two or three different picture shows in one evening. Parent-teacher organizations, parents' magazines, and various publications provide lists of approved films. Children should be trained to understand that going to a picture show is a luxury, an event, which comes only often enough to be educational, inspirational, and a means of recreation and relaxation, but never a daily means of indulgence. The taste for wholesome pictures should be carefully developed. It requires time and patience but is rewarding as a part of education.

Parents in every community ought to be organized and the whole force of their influence thrown against every film which is not up to a decent educational, recreational, and moral standard. It seems useless to appeal to Will Hays and his organization. Resort then should be made to nonpatronage of questionable shows. When movies and firearms become a source of danger to life and morals, it is time to organize against them.

But there are other lines in this picture of the shooting of the twelve-year-old child. Where did the boy actor get his revolver? We need to protect children from firearms, and a sixteen-year-old boy, particularly if he has been in the hands of the law, has no business with a gun. A mail-order house is blamed for selling the gun to this lad. Why are mail-order houses or any other merchandising organization allowed to sell such instruments of destruction to minors?

It seems that the police had already arrested this unfortunate killer on a previous occasion. Why did they not relieve him of this deadly weapon? And why did not his parents know that he had a revolver, or knowing it, why did they not take it from him and prevent his carrying or using it? The parents, the police, and the firm that sold the revolver all share in the responsibility of this horrible manslaughter.

Boys have no business with revolvers. The temptation to use them, experiment with them, "play" with them is too great. It is better to keep guns away from boys until they know how and when to use them. It is better to build up a public sentiment against gangster films, depicting theft, robbery, hold-ups, murder, and such crimes. It is imperative that parents and teachers and church workers give more time and thought to the wise training and development of the growing persons for whom God and society have made them responsible.—Adult Bible Class Leader.

THREE FEDERAL COURT DECISIONS PROMISE NATION-WIDE ADVANCE IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

Far reaching effects and a nation-wide advance in law enforcement of Eighteenth Amendment legislation is foreshadowed in the aftermath of three notable Federal Court decisions rendered during the past 30 days, declares a statement from the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation headquarters here.

"These decisions mark a turning point in the progress of Prohibition administration," continues the Foundation statement, "and their influence will be felt throughout America.

"The three decisions of the Federal Court affirm:

(1) Property, including real estate, the owner of which knowingly permits the operation of a distillery on his premises, is subject to confiscation.

(2) The issuance of an alcoholic permit to a baker or food manufacturer is illegal.

(3) The legal confiscation of speakeasy furniture and fixtures.

"The nation-wide significance of these three decisions foreshadows a new efficiency in Prohibition administration throughout the entire country. Each of them gives judicial clarity and force to provisions of Government legislation relating to the liquor traffic that heretofore have not been well known or clearly understood.

Particular interest attaches to the decisions, in that in all three cases, initiation of the processes involved was begun in the Chicago, or Seventh Prohibition District, the first and third by Colonel E. C. Yellowley while he was Prohibition Administrator of this district and the second having been instituted in March of this year by Mr. Yellowley in his capacity as Supervisor of Permits in the United States Treasury Department.

"The effectiveness of the method of abating liquor nuisances by confiscating furniture and fixtures, has been strikingly shown here in recent years. In 1926-27 a serious attack upon Chicago's politeness with the illegal liquor traffic, the allies of Al Capone when Admin. Yellowley launched an aggressive campaign which resulted in the padlocking of an average of over 1,000 notorious in many cases, elaborately furnished sets and road houses. The basis for the campaign was the provision of the Excise Section 3453 R. S. of the Internal Revenue Code, the validity of which has just been re-affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. But, in not a single instance has this procedure been questioned or applied by defendants in the Chicago district.

"The decision of Federal District Judge Louis Fitzhenry, at Peoria, November 1926, denying Purity Bread Company of Illinois, the right to an alcoholic with permit, bids fair to cut a nation-wide in the illegal use of alcoholic liquors, to permitted under a mistaken Treasury department ruling.

"Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of permits have been issued in the past years and other food manufacturers throughout the United States, the renewal of one of which is now threatened by Fitzhenry's decision.

"The decision lifts into the limelight Section 4, Chapter II, of the National Prohibition Law, which, aside from medicinal industrial uses, permits the sale of all liquors only for use as an ingredient in flavoring extracts. 'The use of all liquor in any other way in food products,' declares Judge Fitzhenry, 'would defeat the purpose of the Prohibition Act.'

"The decision of Judge Fitzhenry, October 29, ordering the confiscation of farms where distilleries were found, was another victory for Colonel Yellowley and revealed a thoroughly long overlooked section of the Internal Revenue Law, which provided that all property, including real estate shall be forfeited where an owner knowingly suffered or permitted the business of a distillery there carried on, or has connived in the same.' Of course, this Section 3281 Internal Revenue Code, is applicable to every part of the United States."

Why International Lessons?

By Charles A. Bame, D.D., Sunday School Editor

A universal lesson system has not yet been discovered. No group of men can satisfy the entire populace. Men are vain, whimsical, egotistic, conceited and therefore, all will not follow the guidance of another. Many of the divisions of men into sects and schisms are the result of this spirit and not so much the lack of sincerity and truth. I do not attempt in this article to show why men thus react or why all do not use a method you or I find to our liking; I do desire to show the advantages of the plan of Bible Study which is followed by the International Lesson Committee and why our people should show their loyalty to our own publications.

I could not give a brief for any committee and do not know personally a man who is one of them, yet I have never doubted that this system is the best one to use.

Not long ago, a brother spent several minutes complimenting me on a Sunday school address in which I stressed the good of our literature and then ended by telling me that he was not using our literature as his class had voted to use only the Bible and that he had been several years reaching about half of the Old Testament in their study. To me, this man's course was not good. He had claimed the time of a number of youth and basing his action on their youthful judgment, had given them during the time when they might have gotten a whole course on the Bible, only a part of the Old Testament. This is a distinct and decided loss of a great opportunity to these young men, in my opinion.

Another says, let the teachers develop a method for themselves and use a quarterly and still another, "I use only a Bible." Well, I have seen the work of both. I can not say that in the main, I think their method is good. Not so many people can or do develop a method of their own. Not so long ago, I heard one of the great theologians say that "most of us use the outlines of others' themes." It was only because he was honest that he did say so. One preacher says outspokenly, "The only difference between me and others is that I use the material of others and admit it, while others use it and deny it." And Billy Sunday says, "Of course I use the thought of other men; I'd be a fool not to do so." I confess that my experience with many teachers who use the Bible is that they do not use it enough and their egotism does not do them any wisdom. God forbid that I should discourage the use of the Bible in the largest way and sense; but may he also keep me from rejecting the masterful wisdom of a Luther, Knox, Calvary, Matthew Henry and hosts of others.

Another objection to the use of a quarterly and the International Lesson is that they "hop, skip and jump" too much over the material of the Bible. Now, let us think of that a bit: this very system has tried all kind of plans. Dr. Ira S. Price who has spent most of his lifetime in this work says, "as far back as 1882, instead of splitting up that year between the Old and New Testament it took up the Gospel of Mark and split it into forty-eight lessons, and the next year was devoted to its rich contents. The year 1890 was devoted to the Gospel of Luke and 1897 to the Acts and Epistles." In the year of 1932 we are to study first, the book of John and follow that the next quarter with Genesis. Who could make a better? More and more this Committee is trying to adapt the lessons to the need of the class and school. I submit that it would be much better for the youth to get a whole course in the Bible during their school years than to spend most of it on half of the Old Testament or even all of either Testament. Any teacher could work out a complete reading of the books of John and Genesis during the next six months if he will, and I believe sincerely that a study would be better for the Sunday school than a whole year on the study of a single book. Indeed if they will use a lesson Quarterly and follow its Daily Readings and all its other helps, they will end with a delightful and profitable advancement in Biblical education and loyalty.

Let us now address ourselves to the advantages of the careful adherence to the International Lessons. And in the first place, let us note that these lessons are a course of Bible Study made out by men of large experience and the best of training for that purpose. It is a course of sometimes a six-year cycle, sometimes seven and for the present, beginning with January of this year, a cycle of five years. Teacher, if your lads or lassies are just entering high school, they will during their six years there, have had a chance to go through the entire Bible with you when they have finished. What an opportunity for you! While the secular education they are getting is diverting their minds to the material and popular, you will start them off with the Gospel of John which was written to show them the deity of Jesus Christ and follow immediately with Genesis which will start them right with regard to evolution and creation. Next year, they will start off with the Gospel of Mark and follow with the great leaders of the Old Testament from Joshua to Solomon and end the year with Paul. In 1934, the year starts off with Matthew, follows with the prophets and kings of Israel and ends with some studies in the Christian Life. Nineteen thirty-five offers three months in the study of the Life and Letters of Peter, follows with Some Great Christian Teachings and finishes the Old Testament; while 1936 offers six months' study in the Gospel of Luke and six months on the remainder of the New Testament in studies in the Spread of Christianity.

Now that's a course of Bible Study no matter who outlines it. They do not offer comments or ask how you shall study these outlines or lessons. Here the Brotherhood steps in and supports a man to direct these studies in Brethren channels with Brethren approach and Brethren interpretations. That makes the necessity for loyalty in support for this person can not be paid if the supplies offered are not paid for and used. This course may be too long for some; it may be too short for others, but it is a course of the entire Bible and allows all sorts of adaptations and deflections.

This course is doubtless the most universal course extant. With the Committee from our own country collaborates the English Committee and as much as twenty-five years ago there were 17,000,000 people following it. Following this course, one is in tune with millions of his fellow mortals and he may go from one city to another or from one school to another almost anywhere and find people studying the same portion of Scripture with him.

Neglecting or side-stepping this course, a teacher causes a parenthesis in a course-study of the Bible by his pupils which may rob that person forever of having a contiguous study of the Word of God. I know of some teachers who scarce go to teach a class until they are urging another course of study. But unless they remain with that class until they have finished a full course of study, they have perhaps robbed their pupils of the very thing they are attempting to do. Unless they remain with the class long enough to complete a course of the entire Bible, they have spoiled the chance for that very thing if the class were allowed to continue the regular lessons. What's the use?

And, just here let me answer another objection that is sometimes urged: that these lessons are not all they ought to be. Now, this is a very flimsy objection. The main difficulty with any lesson and most teachers is not that there is not enough material, but that there is too much. Most teachers try to teach too many lessons and thus do not get over any lesson at all. Any teacher who will work out a plan of study for himself, apart from this course can, if he will, work out a good course from this plan and it is planned so that a pupil may get a course in the Bible in a certain period.

Finally let me say that this system of lessons offers four courses covering the entire Bible:

One course for the Primaries covering a period of three years adapted to the little folks. It is a well-worked-out course for the little tots.

Another course for the Juniors. The more I study it, the more I believe in it; and I have now gone over two years of it, word by word.

The Third course is for the high school age and is done in our Youth's Quarterly. Continued effort is being made to make this a practical study adapted to the age and problems of the youth.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother J. L. Bowman of Linwood, Maryland, is asking for the names of members or friends of the Brethren church living in Baltimore, Maryland. Those who know of any such persons residing in that city will favor him and the cause he seeks to promote by writing him, giving names and addresses.

This is the time for the White Gift offerings to be made. Envelopes for that purpose have been mailed from the office of Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Ashland, Ohio. But he advises us that in case any have been missed or have not received a sufficient number of envelopes, the required amount will be sent to any address upon request.

Notice came to our office too late for publication preceding the date of dedication of the Muncie church basement unit on December 6th. Brother M. L. Sands is the faithful pastor of this church and Prof. J. Raymond Schutz of North Manchester, Indiana, was the guest preacher at the dedicatory services. An all day program was prepared, the dedication proper being in the afternoon. Brother Sands says: "We are dedicating free of debt", and promises to send more details later. We hope also it is possible to have a picture of what they have got thus far. Congratulations to the Muncie Brethren and their pastor on this achievement, and may God lead them on to the completion of their task.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, supplies us with a budget approved by National Conference and recommended by that body to the Sunday schools of the brotherhood for their support. Turn to his article and see how varied are the interests the Association is promoting. Contributions are being made to the teaching phase of both our Foreign Mission and our Home Mission work, as well as to the support of our seminary, to the Shipshewana Young People's Training Camp and in various ways to the promotion of Sunday school work among the churches. Always and everywhere it is teaching the Gospel of saving grace to dying men and building them up in the knowledge of its spirit and truth that the Association is concerned about. You can have a part in this teaching ministry by means of your White Gifts.

The Third church of Philadelphia has recently enjoyed a season of refreshing and a very successful evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. The much loved pastor of this church is Brother W. A. Steffler, under whose leadership the Lord is accomplishing a splendid work here. The church is about ready to join the ranks of entirely self-supporting churches and gives promise of going on growing in grace and strength until it becomes one of the strong churches of the brotherhood. As a result of the recent campaign thirty-two souls made the good confession, most of them for the first time, but a few being reconsecrations. The Sunday following the close of the meetings four more persons accepted Christ as their Savior. This church is one of the splendid examples of success in Home Mission work that give cause for encouragement, and justify confidence in and support of our Home Board on the part of all loyal Brethren.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble, missionary on furlough from French Equatorial Africa, writes of conditions on the African field. An epidemic of the "flu" is causing much and serious sickness among the natives, but our American workers have escaped the contagion thus far. One valued native Christian succumbed to the disease. At the time of the writing of the last mail received by Dr. Gribble, Brother Kennedy, whose passing we announced two weeks he was still alive but his passing was expected. At any rate no was held for him except the hope that possibly God might intervene and heal him for his glory. But the missionaries, even Kennedy herself, were resigned to the will of God. How great blessing it is to be wholly surrendered to the divine will, to be submissive to God. In this our missionaries are frequently setting us worthy and challenging examples. May prayer be of that sustaining grace may be continually given to Sister Kennedy as well as others who feel his loss most keenly, in this hour of sorrow.

The Pennsylvania young folks to the number of more than a hundred gathered from nineteen different congregations to the advantage of a very successful Sunday School Institute held in the First church of Johnstown, where Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor. The institute was fostered by the National Sunday School Association; Dr. Charles A. Bame from the Publishing House of the Association, one of the speakers for the occasion and the pastors of the churches cooperating, we understand, constituted the remaining members of the institute faculty. Among these pastors, two, Brethren Leeman and Jones, are members of the executive committee of the Association. Other churches or groups of churches may have the privilege of such an institute, if they wish it. This is a part of the very helpful work being conducted by the National Sunday School Association, for the support of which we are to make offerings at this Christmas season. It is the great teaching ministry of the church that our White Gifts are to promote—teaching the Gospel and preparing teachers to teach it more efficiently. This is a fundamental phase of the church's task and finds its basis in the Great Commission—"teaching them to observe all things."

The Loyalty spirit is spreading with regard to the support of Brethren publications. A number of the ministers have let us know that they are cooperating with us in our effort to bring about a wider circulation of The Evangelist and a larger use of our Sunday school publications. One of our splendid young pastors, Brother Conrad Sandy, who has charge of the churches at Gretna, Williamstown, Ohio, came into our office the other day and formed us that he was with us on our Publications Loyalty Campaign and presented us with four new subscriptions which he solicited at Williamstown. His other church is on the Evangelist Honor Roll and has been from the very first that we had an Honor Roll. Another church is wanting to know our advice with regard to an acceptable Sunday school paper for teen aged pupils. We replying that The Angelus is the best paper obtainable for Brethren boys and girls. One of its stories every week is selected for readers of their age. Besides it is safe theologically and it holds up high ideals. No common "movie stuff" is to be found in its pages. It is not as sensational as some story papers; in that it takes pride and have a set purpose to keep its stories on a literary and wholesome moral plane. But they are full of life of compelling interest. It is graded for every age. Use it throughout the school.

"Camp Black Hawk" is a new name in the vocabulary of Brethren institutions. It comes from the Illiokota young people who were recently convened in a training "camp" at Waterloo, Indiana. Brother S. M. Whetstone, who gives the report this week, has been long out of the state of Indiana, where he was an enthusiastic booster of the Shipshewana Young People's Camp. Another who enters into the origin of this district movement is the conduct of the National Sunday School Association to cooperate in the conduct of Sunday School Institutes and Training Schools in churches and groups of churches in the various districts. It is a very practical and important service that the Association is doing in thus helping in the training and inspiration of our young people. In this Training Camp held at Waterloo, the Foreign Mission Board cooperated by supplying teachers of missions in the person of three of our furloughed missionaries, namely, Brother and Sister Foster and Sister Estella Myers. Prof. and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey were the teachers provided by the Sunday School Association, Professor Stuckey giving valuable service in the field of church music, a service which her training so well fits here to render. Prof. Stuckey was the able Bible teacher and district pastors conducted various services. About eighty young people were present to take advantage of the splendid opportunities of Black Hawk Camp.

White Gifts and Our Brethren Young People

By Dr. K. M. Monroe

Marriage is a state of life which has a great effect all entering into it. The participants, by this state being, are lifted up toward heaven or dragged down to hell. It is not a new thing to say that our lives and natures are moulded by those with whom we pass our days.

And most certainly it is true that, as married people spend much of their time together, at least they do, husbands and wives are continually effecting each other's spiritual welfare. In marriage there is either harmony in seeking out together God's means of grace and living together the same, or there is misunderstanding, a lack of sympathy, a want of encouragement and support, spiritual incompatibility. Let all husbands and wives, and those who contemplate matrimony, soberly meditate upon these things.

The Holy Scriptures tell us that the parents of Jesus went to Jerusalem every year at the Feast of the Passover.

All married couples and all courting young people should do well to emulate the conduct of Mary and Joseph. Do not pray together? Why not read the Bible together? Why not go to the house of worship together? Do not talk with one another about spiritual matters? Above all things, beware of throwing obstacles and hindrances in the spiritual way of the one you love. Blessed are those husbands who say to their wives as Hannah did to Hannah, 'Do all that is in thy heart.' Happy are those wives who say to their husbands as Leah and Rachel to Jacob, 'Whatsoever God hath said unto me, I will do.'

The distance between Nazareth and Jerusalem was not easily covered once each year by poor people. To leave home and children for ten days or longer, to undergo the hardships of Palestinian travel, and to expend the needed money were among the problems facing more than one family from Nazareth home. But, had not God appointed the Passover Feast for the spiritual journey?

Yes, and it was their duty and privilege to attend the Feast in Jerusalem. So together each year it was their delight to

But why it is that observance of Biblical commands and exhortations by the father and mother is the spiritual life of the family is hard to tell. But, though we cannot tell the "why" and "how" we know that it is a fact, and that, to a greater extent than is sometimes realized, it is sometimes the only link between the children and the Father.

With in mind

the childhood advantages of our Lord, among them instruction in the Law and vivid descriptions of Jerusalem Passover visits by his parents and others, we do not doubt that his desire to attend the great Feast became more intense year by year. The devotion of his parents was contagious and tended to fan the flame within the heart of their Son. As parents, how they must have loved to watch their twelve-year-old Son the days following the promise that he might accompany them to Jerusalem and attend his first Passover.

At last the day of their departure was at hand. Mother, father and Son together, and with some friends leave Nazareth for the Holy City. They may have gone straight south across the plains of Esdraelon, climbed the mountains of Samaria, and passing old sites renowned in the earliest days of Hebrew conquest—Shiloh, Bethel, Mizpah, Ramah—thus reached Jerusalem. Probably, in accordance with the Galilean custom of the day, they traveled east in the plains of Esdraelon, through the valley of Jezreel, crossed the Jordan and south until opposite Jericho and then crossed the river up to the City. Which ever way was taken Jesus' first view of Jerusalem would have been from an eminence.

Behold! A panorama of Jerusalem, the city of his day. How thrilling is the first view of that city builded upon the mountains, "compact together." The temple of Herod standing apart from the other buildings both in size and beauty. Within its walls he was soon to say, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Could it be that he was thinking of Nicodemus, of the walks and talks with his disciples, of his Passion Week and of his glorious resurrection? With Messianic consciousness dawning, he no doubt was aware of some things withheld from the inner sight of Mary and Joseph.

Jerusalem belongs, even to this very day, to the memory of one Man, even Christ Jesus. The man comes as a child with his parents to worship by observing the appointed ordinances of his Father in heaven. What a beautiful picture: age and youth. Age leading in giving the opportunity. Youth following in appreciation and devotion.

The sentence, "Age leading in giving the opportunity," is the master key to our White Gift plea. Mothers and fathers of our Brethren faith should take the lead in encouraging their children in all spiritual exercises.

JESUS' FIRST VIEW OF JERUSALEM.

O. MENGELBERG, 1912-

Youth awaits encouragement. No matter what the age of the child, now it is the time. Following the example of Mary and Joseph, are you willing to sacrifice that your child, or another's child, may know our Lord and walk with him along the treacherous pathway of life, daily inspiring those he comes in contact with to know and love his Savior? There would be many less heart aches on the part of parents if they would, throughout the years of childhood and youth, take even equal proportionate care of the spiritual life of their children as they do of their physical and mental.

The natives of many southern countries grow bananas. They grow them not for the skin but for the fruit. They keep first things first. The humble function of the banana skin is to sheathe and protect the fruit while it is ripening. And so, the frail outer man, which is the sole objective in the life of so many, is but the temporary covering and protection during the growth of the spirit.

Your Sunday School Board, by virtue of your gifts, has been able, along with other work, to aid in our young people's work of the Shiphewana Training School, and in the training of young men and women here in our college and Seminary. Is the work worth while? Was it worth while for Mary and Joseph to take their son to Jerusalem? There is no answer but the affirmative! As a Board we look for your White Gift Offering to at least equal, or better surpass, that of other years for few things, if any, are more important than the Christian training of our youth.

That White Gift Offering

By W. I. Duker, President National Sunday School Association

It had been my thought to open this article with a statement relative to our present depression. I had thought to say that under the present situation we must attempt to do our very best and then be satisfied. Of course, that "very best" would necessarily cause us to retrench and limit our activities. Then a few common occurrences came to my mind. A few weeks ago there gathered at Notre Dame a crowd of some sixty-five thousand people at an average of some five dollars per person. It was a capacity crowd; no more tickets were to be secured as the game of football started. Our local field of high school football had its thousands at fifty cents per person. Driving through Chicago recently we saw a theatre with a capacity crowd and people outside standing in line for a good block awaiting a change in programme. After thinking these matters over a bit we just cannot go on with our original intention regarding this appeal. People still have money to buy the things they desire.

If we were celebrating a birthday of one of our friends we might tell our friend that we just were embarrassed, and felt mighty bad because we greatly desired to make a substantial gift, but could not. Of course our friend, not knowing our financial situation, would believe us and we would be saved the price of a gift. But this is the LORD'S birthday! Every day he looks over our books. In fact every morning he hands out the "talents" to every one according to their several abilities. His books are constantly posted and he can tell at any moment of the day just how "we stand." You just can't fool the LORD!

There are two classes of folks who will not give their regular amounts to "WHITE GIFT" this year. First there is the congregation whose people just cannot give. Then there is the congregation who can give but due to the depression and the common thought of inability, hide their talent in a cloth and bury it. The man in story at least gave back to the Lord that which had been given him, but many today even keep that which has been given them to invest. I wonder what the Lord would have said to that man!

It has been our plan in the past to have each Sunday School in the brotherhood to take an offering at Christmas time, in honor of the King whose birthday we are celebrating. This money then is used in the work which is authorized by our churches in National Conference. The work of course must be in keeping with the amount of the gift. If the gift is large, the work will likewise be "large work." If the gift is small, the work will likewise be "small." But since this is a national work, the work cannot be "small" without reflecting upon the church as a whole. Each pastor must not be forgetful that the church of his choice to which he is constantly calling attention will be measured by others by the type of work it is doing. Hardly does a week pass but that I am a relative to my local budget and our national work. Of course these "measures" are not the only ones by which a church is known, but he who looks lightly upon them will soon be surprised to learn that others are not looking upon your church as you would like to have them look.

We need not, we are sure, discuss the nature of the National Sunday School Association's work. Surely it is well known to its many friends. If there are those who would criticize its work, we are sure that nothing we might say at this time would change their opinion of its attitudes. The only matter at this time to occupy our minds is just how we shall arouse schools and incite their interests and secure the gift that alone honors the Lord. Many of our schools are as regular and as loyal as any one could desire. Others are as loyal as any one could desire. Others are as loyal as any one could desire. Their attitudes and others never as much as we have of regrets. We have several schools that not only send in a gift to this cause but after repeated announcements and letters, do not so much as write a letter expressing their regrets or intentions. Yet these congregations are in good standing and constantly send delegates to the conference that adopts this budget. Strange isn't it?

If this work was just a work of men, just a work arranged for by the Lord Himself, the neglect might not be quite so serious. But we have made this a "White Gift" in honoring the Master's birthday. Here is the seriousness of the affair. We are honoring, as an act of his command, the Lord whose we are and whom we serve. Then the opportunity is extended many congregations pass by the other side.

We were listening the other day to a radio program. This is something of what we heard. "Well, Christmas is here again. Christmas with all of its beauty and associations. The time of the year when our affections are warmed and our love is increased. Certain things are necessary that we might get the best out of this season. No one can enjoy to the fullest this blessed season of the year unless near at hand, within reach at all times, the box of our wonderful cigars." What a terrible travesty! And yet my Bible teaches me that the sin of omission is as actual as the sin of commission.

This article is presumed to be just the "Opening" of this season. We are not burdening ourselves with a discussion of the "White Gift" cause or a discussion of the spirit of the season. We are not attempting to lead the reader up into a conscious touch with the Master so induce the necessary gift. Others will certainly do for us. What we have attempted to do was to our interests and perhaps startle us into a realization of our failures. Those who have constantly remembered their duties and have received the blessings that will need but little from the pages of the Evangelist. These churches are in position to "hand out" and "take in."

One has said that our present economic difficulty is the result of the church forgetting God. In fact, our Babson is quoted as saying that it is a spiritual and not a material affair. If this be true, may we expect an early return of prosperity by an indication of a new attitude toward God? If we but follow through our agreement as to the cause of this situation may we anticipate that we are entitled to a return of prosperity due to a return to God? Is the church in a much closer spiritual contact with the Lord of Hosts than it was at the beginning of our present trouble? Are we ready for prosperity again? If it comes will we as Christians just what to do with the gifts of prosperity? When we ask over these questions it often seems to me that prosperity is not just "around the corner." What we do with the gifts of the Lord will undoubtedly determine his future attitudes toward us.

The season of Christmas approaches us again may we give serious thought to our pledges as a church and our abilities as congregations.

A Crude Package but a Priceless Gift

Hazel Keiser, Children's Division Superintendent

When Christmas comes, with gifts! gifts! gifts! covered packages, neatly wrapped in spotless white and chil-dred with red and green silken cord and of daintily packed within! gifts of books, pencils and pens, gloves, rings, necklaces. Dainties, cakes and flowers. Each a gift from a friend, so carefully chosen to fit the one particular one, and yet every one a gift so soon perishable! Is this the sadness of it all! Why be so concerned about perishable things of this life?

We were given to a particular people a priceless gift. It was given by the One most concerned an everlasting gift. The years that have slipped by find that gift still the same, still spotless from rust and soil, the one gift while sharing. Why choose the perishable for ourselves, and neglect that which never changes?

Where is such a gift to be purchased? Again we find an unusually merited circumstance, a gift that need not be bought, a gift that has already been given us, only to be shared with others. This gift, small yet so large, is like an overflowing the heart of the whole world. The gift of it cannot take from ourselves but only add to our enjoyment and welfare. Then why not choose such a priceless, unperishable, multiplying with the sharing and never ending.

Some time ago, there was sent to us, from the One friend of all others, the priceless White Gift in the form of a package. The package in which it was placed was very crude, made from the roughest and least polished of material, and ribbon nowhere to be seen. Tucked in and about it was only the dry hay of a stable. Only human hands had placed it there, yet it had been sent by the "Father of Gifts from whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning;" a gift suitable for all ages, a gift needed by all people, a gift large enough to reach around the whole world. The gift that has never run short with sharing. Let us choose this gift at this Christmas season as the gift most worth while for each particular person and each individual need. Let us give at this period of depression that which can best be used. This is a time of need, rather than a time of plenty. Let us choose, then, that gift which will best fill the need, that can give happiness when all other gifts perish with the years.

The world needs light and love. Our nation needs light and love. Our state needs it. Our town needs it. And what is more, our individual friends need it. I need it. God is Light. God is Love. He will pass himself on to others, if we will only serve as his "takers."

Then great will come the reward to us, as has long been promised: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," and "thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Then will come the reality to us, that in the giving to others has come a multiplied share to ourselves; in the giving and choosing aright has come that blessed happiness which fadeth not away, an eternal home in the heavens with our Giver and with those with whom we have shared while here on earth.

Let us choose aright for ourselves and for others this Christmas of 1931.

I choose Jesus.

When all my trials on earth are o'er, and the dark stream I see,

Jesus shall bear me to yonder shore, he is the best for me.

I choose Jesus when I need a friend, what I need I know that he will send.

I have proved him, good and true is he, I choose Jesus, he is the best for me.

Bryan, Ohio.

The Treasurer's View Point

By M. P. Puterbaugh, Treasurer National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church

Out of curiosity I consulted the files of the Brethren Evangelist to see just what had been said by the Treasurer each year for the last seven years regarding our Gifts of Substance. Almost every interesting and attractive device has been used to stimulate interest in the offering and the thought came that it has all been said. Anything we say now may be pure repetition.

The other accounts have told how the White Gift idea originated; how the Sunday School Association happened to assume the leadership of the present movement for the collection and distribution of funds to our brotherhood agencies of Christian Education. They have told the story of fifty churches diminishing their offerings in one year of economic plenty. They have reported offerings falling steadily below expenditures. They have shown our average White Gift for our Master on his birthday is something less than two thin dimes per member.

There is only this difference this year. We are now in the midst of a great "depression." If in our peak year we could only average a few cents per member what may we expect now? A pessimist would expect very little. But the Sunday School Board is far from pessimistic. It is hopeful that our people are devoted to the cause and will give most when the need is greatest. It is optimistic to plan a budget $600 larger than last year's offering because it must be agreed that the work of the Kingdom must not falter or necessitate or retrench or go begging because of a financial depression.

Of course, we do not have an Alladin's lamp. We cannot continue indefinitely spending a thousand dollars more than we receive. Our reserve will fail. Sometime help must come or we shall be unable to underwrite these worthy causes in our Church. As soon as our offerings indicate a vote of confidence and a guarantee of growing support for an enlarger Sunday school program we can undertake much more.

All this talk of money and Gifts of Substance is as important today as it was when James wrote, "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled;' notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"

It is simply a question of whether or not YOU get the Christmas spirit; whether or not YOU want to give a White Gift to your King on his birthday; whether or not YOU want to cooperate with other Brethren churches at this time in the support of our Teaching Ministry. The question is not "How much can you give?" but "Will you give the King something on his birthday?" If YOU have the right attitude, we need not worry about this Christmas offering.

Promotional Work of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church

By N. V. Leatherman, General Secretary

The officers of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church are seeking to make this Association true to name. That is, it is our desire that the organization serve the Sunday schools of our entire brotherhood. We believe that this very thing is being accomplished more and more. And at the same time we cannot help but see where there is much room yet for both more extensive and intensive endeavor in the Association's service.

In the first place the Association is seeking to cooperate with all the local Sunday schools. For this purpose the Hand Book of the Association was published and sent to all the superintendents of the brotherhood. This Hand Book contains among other things the Standard of Excellence which is a uniform standard for all our schools. This standard is coming to be more and more appreciated by our schools, as is evidenced in the increased interest in a large number of schools grading themselves according to this standard and making their report to the general secretary each year. We would like to give every help possible to our local schools in raising their percentage during this year. Particularly do we express our interest in the small school, where the percentage seems to be lowest. There are enough reports of these small schools having high percentage according to the standard to prove that it is possible for small schools to grade high as well as the larger schools. The officers and departmental superintendents of your association stand ready to help all our schools when our particular service is solicited. And neither do we wait for your solicitation before we can give you our service. For instance, note the Sunday school page in the Brethren Evangelist each week. There can be no doubt of the value of this page to the earnest and enthusiastic Sunday school worker.

Then, too, your association is seeking to help each local Sunday school of the Brethren Church by providing it with one of the best summer camps to be found anywhere. As teaching and environment is concerned. The Sheshewana Training School has been training the young people from many of our schools for the past five years. Each year an ever increasing number have attended from Indiana, Ohio, and as far as Iowa and Maryland. The grounds and equipment of our Brethren Retreat at Sheshewana Lake, owned and controlled by the Indiana District Conference are certainly ideal for this splendid project. The lodge, the tabernacle and the hotel, with many surrounding cottages, sufficiently house and feed the young folks in an excellent manner. They can go to the lake for swimming and fishing as well as recreation. There has never been need for serious discipline. The cream of the local Sunday schools have been sent to this school. The rules are not many but are enforced by the students themselves. Besides the program is so full that all of those attending this school that all are ready to retire for their night's rest when the whistle blows and the lights are out. Our local schools could do nothing better than to get a group of their young people started in this summer camp work. There is no tuition charge at this school. Three hundred dollars has been budgeted by the Association for financing this school. At no time has this amount been exceeded. In fact, it has never been fully used. Investigation will prove that the management of this summer camp has exercised the same economic concern as is ordinarily exercised in private affairs. There are no salaries paid teachers for this school. However, the expense of transportation, advertising and publicity, and the many incidentals do mount up. And it is to this expense that the Association makes the budget of three hundred dollars each year. Your White Gift is necessary to help meet this part of the budget as well as the many other purposes for which these gifts are given by the association.

Another way by which the association seeks to serve to the local schools is through the Sunday School Institutes. This work was just begun last year when Institutes were held in Indiana. The Sunday School Institute is not a new thing in Sunday School experience. Like many other things of value we are learning to look back through the years and view that which was successful and helpful in the past and then seek to reproduce that value, fitting our own present needs. Some one has suggested that the Sunday School conference or institute as a working and functioning organization even precede the district conference here in Pennsylvania. However that may be, we do know that the Institute for our Sunday schools does have a value. This is demonstrated beyond any doubt.

Thus far this year two Institutes have come to our attention. One held at Waterloo, Iowa, over the Thanksgiving giving season. Report of this Institute will be found through the columns of the Brethren Evangelist. The other held at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, to which Dr. H. H. made reference in his "Travel Flashes." This Institute was pronounced very successful by all. The purpose of the institute was stated thus: "To re-evaluate the importance of our tasks as Sunday school workers and to help encourage and inspire one another in meeting responsibilities and privileges." This objective was met to no small degree. A few testimonials of those attended follow:

The first Brethren Sunday School Institute of its kind in this district was to me very beneficial from a practical as well as an inspirational standpoint. One constructive suggestion I might offer is that the next time more time be allowed for discussion. Those who were responsible for the Institute should be highly complimented.

"Walter C. Wertz."

Personally I enjoyed the Institute more than I can express. And I will say I discovered the greatest need of our Sunday schools is more love for the Word of God.

"Fred W. Brant."

To take this means to voice our appreciation for the First Brethren Sunday School Institute, and for the excellent manner in which it was conducted. To us it proved a truly worth while experiment, a time of refreshing. Moreover it afforded us a more comprehensive view of the possibilities of Sunday school work. We were especially pleased with the prevailing spirit of Brethrenism, and the earnestness in faith. So we were exceedingly grateful that it pleased God to bring Brethren together in an Institute. This venture find continuance in this district.

"Carl J. Uphouse."

We never associate with a group of Christian people without absorbing some good. Meeting in a group like this and exchanging your ideas and aims for the betterment of humanity certainly is time well spent, and gives greater zeal for Sunday school work.

"Mrs. O. O. Swope."

The Institute was held in the First Brethren church of this town. It originated by the pastor of this church, Charles Ashman, accepting the offer made by the general secretary at the Pennsylvania District conference in Philadelphia, October last. This was an offer to cooperate with any church or group of churches in putting on an institute such as the one described. We appreciate the splendid spirit of cooperation on the part of all who had a part on the program as well as those who did not. The attendance far exceeded our fondest hopes. There were better than a hundred registered delegates from nineteen different congregations and Sunday schools. A very large crowd attended the evening session which was so splendidly addressed by Dr. Bame from Philadelphia.

It was decided unanimously upon motion that another institute should be held some time in May of 1932 in the reach of these same local schools. Certainly the action, unsolicited by the general secretary, demonstrates the appreciation and interest of those who were in attendance beyond any question or doubt.

Please note this, any similar group of Sunday schools may have an institute equivalent to this one held in this town. Write your general secretary for more information. Your association wishes thus to cooperate with you and serve you in every way possible. We believe it will merit your support of the association work, when you come to make your Gifts White at this Christmas in this town, Pennsylvania.

the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God.—Rom. 8:19.

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

IV. How to Understand the Prophecies

It is not proposed to tell how all persons can understand the prophecies nor how any person can understand all of them. Some of them are not to be understood until the time comes. But there are some suggestions which can be given which may help the ordinary reader to study them with profit.

1. It is necessary to be Spiritually minded. The revised version of 1 Corinthians 2:13 reads, "The Holy Spirit teacheth, interpreting spiritual things to spiritual men." Every person has his own individuality. Every book has its own atmosphere. Every theme has its own spirit. And to understand people or books or themes one must be able to be in tune with them. The Word of God is spiritual and its truths must be spiritually discerned. To the carnally minded they are foolishness. To men like Daniel, who refused the king's wine, who went to his chamber and prayed three times a day, and prayed with fasting, God could reveal the future; and it takes men and women of prayer to understand the revelation. To be spiritual it is necessary to deny "fleshly lusts that war against the soul" and to set the affection on things above and not upon things upon the earth.

2. It is necessary to compare each prophecy with the whole body of prophecy. In 2 Pet. 1:21 we read, "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." The Roman Catholic clergy teach that this means that the church must interpret officially, and individual believers must believe the official interpretation and not presume to think for themselves. But the word translated "private" means "its own" interpretation. That is, no prophecy may be properly understood apart from the rest. They explain one another.

For example, if we wish to know the meaning of "time, times and half a time" in Rev. 12:14, by comparison with vs. 6 and 11:2 we find that the period is (literally) 1260 days or 42 months. Of the historical or day-for-a-year meaning I will speak later. If Catholics would compare the prophecy of Jesus in Matt. 16:18, "Upon this rock will I build my church", with 1 Cor. 3:11 they see that, not Peter, but Christ is the rock upon which the church is built. If Seventh Day Adventists would compare Isa. 24:1 with vs. 15, 16 and many similar passages, they would see that only a part of the inhabitants of the earth will be destroyed in the great tribulation. The context as well as the other scriptures must be consulted. A multitude of examples might be given to show that this rule of interpretation which the Scriptures give us is of supreme importance.

3. It is necessary to know for whom the prophecy we are reading is intended. This is not always so easy as one might think. For example, does the word "elect" in Mark 13:27 refer to the saved of the church or Israel? The word is used of the church (Col. 3:12; 2 Jn. 1) and also of Israel (Isa. 45:4; 65:9), but from Rev. 3:10 we infer that the elect of the church will not pass through "the hour of tribulation which cometh upon all the earth" while the elect of Mk. 13:20, 27 do.

Likewise it is important to know whether the "saints" of Revelation are Jewish saints or Christian saints. A great division of opinion exists over this point. The follower of Bullinger believes that the entire book of Revelation is for the Jews. Others hold that it has been historically fulfilled, at least as far as chapter 13, in the history of the church. Others believe that chapters 1 to 3 are for the church and chapters 4 to 19 deal with the world after the rapture of the church. What shall we believe? If we take a good concordance (something indispensable for Bible study) and turn to the word "saints" we may note that in the Old Testament the "saints" are distinguished from sinners, whether Jews or Gentiles, and the same is true in the New Testament. Unbelieving Jews are not saints, and when they become believers they are Christians and form part of the one body of Christ (Eph. 4:4; 2:11-19), in which there is neither Jew nor Gentile for all have become one in Christ (Gal. 3:28).

4. To understand the prophecies concerning the coming of Christ we must distinguish between those of the first and second coming. The prophets themselves were puzzled to harmonize the "sufferings of Christ and the glory that should afterwards be revealed" (1 Pet. 1:10-12). The nation saw only the glory and so rejected the suffering Christ. The two comings are closely joined in Isa. 53:11 and 12 and in Isa. 61:2.

5. It is also necessary to study with a concordance the meaning of prophetic expressions which are often used, such as "at that time," "the time of the end," "the last days," "the day of the Lord," "the day of Christ" and "the day of God." These expressions refer to definite periods which should not be confused. If commentaries or books on prophecy are used, their statements should be tested by the Bible and concordance, for human books have their errors.

6. It is necessary also to know that there are different kinds of fulfillment of prophecy. Some prophecies are definite and have one historic fulfillment, as for example, that of the seventy years captivity (Jer. 25:11). Others are generic and are fulfilled everywhere. For example, "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. 18:20). Still others have precursory or typical fulfillments, and also a final complete fulfillment. For example, the prophecy of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit (Joel 2:28, 29) was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost for the church, but will have its complete fulfillment in the Kingdom of heaven (Joel 2:30-32; Isa. 61:3-11, etc.). The prophecy of the coming of Elijah was fulfilled in John the Baptist (Mk. 9:12, 13) but has a final fulfillment at the end of the age (Mal. 4:5, 6; Rev. 11:3-12). The "many antichrists" of 1 Jn. 2:18 were but precursors of the final dreadful man of sin (2 Thess. 2:3-12).

7. It is also necessary to learn the different forms of figurative language used in the prophecies. But this requires a separate article.

WHY INTERNATIONAL LESSONS

This study is just beginning in the five-year cycle and I commend it to all teachers of young people. I urge your starting January, 1932 and the use of the Brethren Youth's Quarterly written by such able writers as we command.

Teacher, why not align yourself with this great movement and give your young people the advantage of this five-year cycle? This course is a good course. Let all our Sunday schools begin with this cycle in as many uses of our literature as possible and help us to improve it as we obtain this added income.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Luke 1:36-38. There is scarcely a time in the complex life of mortals when we are not faced with some problem whose solution we cannot discover. However, when we come to the end of ourselves we have only come to the beginning of God, and it is comforting to know that "with God nothing shall be impossible." The only difficulty is that so often we prevent God's power from working through us; what might be accomplished in the world if all possessed the spirit of fine consecration and yieldedness of Mary: "Be it unto me according to thy word."

TUESDAY

Luke 1:39-56. Jesus was truly the Son of God, and his advent into the world was surrounded by the supernatural, his divine presence being sensed by Elisabeth even before his birth. The song of Mary, revealing much of her beautiful character, is well worth dwelling upon. It evidences familiarity with the Old Testament scriptures and of God's promises to Israel. It was not by accident that Mary was chosen for the honor that was hers, and if we would be greatly used of God we should meditate more upon God's word, upon his power and upon his blessed promises.

WEDNESDAY

Luke 1:57-66. Again the supernatural is in evidence. The neighbors at first were puzzled, and thought it strange when Elisabeth and Zacharias tried to follow God's bidding; but as they beheld new evidences of God's presence and power before their eyes they were filled with wonder. In our own lives, our neighbors are likely to feel that we are doing strange things in trying to follow God's commands, but if we follow on they may yet behold the power of God, and be converted. May we ever be faithful!

THURSDAY

Luke 1:67-80. The prophecy of Zacharias expresses the hope for which the hearts of men have been yearning ever since Adam fell: deliverance from the darkness about us, and guidance in the path of peace. How our hearts burn as we read these words, all too poorly expressive of the great work accomplished for us by the advent of our Lord! And how we thrill over the high mission of John! Yet ours is also the privilege of going before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways, to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins.

FRIDAY

Luke 2:1-7. The Christmas story that never grows old! God working through a Roman emperor to bring about the fulfillment of his Word that Christ should be born in Bethlehem, and the dramatic birth of our Lord under such poor and squalid conditions, because there was no room for him. No room for him who made the heavens and the earth and all that in them is! There is all too little room for him in the affairs of men and nations today, after nearly 2,000 years: may we always have room for him in our hearts, for without Christ born in our hearts there is no Christmas!

SATURDAY

Luke 2:8-20. What a wonderful experience those shepherds had! No wonder they went in haste to behold the Christ, and, when they had seen him, made known abroad all that had taken place, glorifying and praising God. We may feel sure they never forgot the first Christmas! Today angels do not appear unto us with heavenly music and a message from God, but we do have the witness of his Spirit with our spirits through the grace manifested since that first Christmas Day. Let us praise him for his goodness unto the children of men!

SUNDAY

Luke 2:21-35. Simeon also had a wonderful privilege, in beholding Christ before his death. God meant for every man to have the same privilege. At this Christmas season let us resolve anew to strive to show our Savior to the men of all the world before they pass on to eternal death.

New Analytical Indexed Bible--A Review

ized Version with More Accurate Renderings of the A. R. V. Placed in Brackets in the Text. Published by John A. Dickson Company, Chicago is one of the most interesting and Bibles before the public today. It is a Bible, with its various writings in the original tongues, but a Bible plus a helps unequalled by that of any company to the writer's knowledge, distributes the Holy Scriptures.

ote from the title page, it is a Bible ing "a system of helps comprising revision, analysis of the entire Bible, nt of the entire Bible, treatment of ling facts of each book, forty-two contemporaneous history, a specially d harmony of the Gospels, a con- dictionary of the Bible, and many atures of exceptional character and o facilitate the study and better un- ling of the Scriptures." Any student Bible will find that that quotation tedly quite modest when the volume ined thoroughly. It is a rich store- of vital information.

PREFACE announces the following

Textual Revision

Authorized Version is necessarily the this Bible. That there are many in- es in the renderings of this version only understood. To overcome this n a great many instances, and insure ling of more exact translations, the ons are placed in brackets in the d not in the margin. The value of angement will be obvious. For ex- John 1:12 reads, "to them gave the (the right) to become the sons of In this manner thousands of pas- f the A. V. are corrected and sim- without creating confusion in read- text. The advisability of using the s of the American Revision will be t.

Analysis of the Bible

acilitate a systematic study of the is necessary that each book of the e divided and sub-divided, and it is desirable that the analysis be given ose of the book, directly related to t. In addition to this outline, at the ng of the book is a chart giving a outline of the subject matter, the of the chart being attractive, instruc- l suggestive. Thus on a single page, sign of the chart in itself explan- e principal facts of the book are be e eye of the reader. The page pre- the chart is an introduction of the elative to authorship, date, design, ith which the intelligent Bible stu- ould be familiar. ### Outstanding Facts and History owing the analysis of each book, facts cial importance and interest are . The treatment of these subjects is ly and has an inspirational value. ight is thrown on the things pertaining to the book with which the ordinary reader of the Bible is not familiar. Thus, for a careful and systematic study of the text an analysis of the book is provided, and the outstanding facts of the book are set forth.

The Contemporaneous History is a valu- able feature. It is essential that we under- stand the relations the chosen people sus- tained to the other nations during the var- ious periods of Jewish history, and the spe- cial significance of those relations. In giv- ing this history in connection with the text the ANALYTICAL INDEXED BIBLE stands alone. What will be duly appreciated is the fact of compactness in the manner in which these various Helps are directly re- lated to the text, and do not have to be searched for in some other part of the book.

The Digest

This section, consisting of two hundred pages, one of the principal features of the New Indexed Bible, formerly published by this company, will continue to render an in- valuable service as one of the Helps of the Analytical Indexed Bible. The subjects are alphabetically arranged and it is a con- densed dictionary of the Bible.

Other Important Features

1. References. The method, hitherto adopted, of placing the references in the margin or in a center column, is not fol- lowed by this Bible; they follow the pas- sages. Every reader of the Bible knows how difficult it is to read the very small type ordinarily used for marginal references, and the inconvenience attending the use of ref- erences when placed at the bottom of the page, which frequently occurs.

2. The Gospels Harmonized. This fol- lows the Gospel of John and has exceptional merit. The facts fall in chronological order under the ministries of our Lord, with a brief but suggestive analysis of the par- ables, miracles and discourses. This is the only Bible having such a feature.

3. Following the New Testament are many Helps the treatment of which is pe- culiar to this Bible. The Chronology of the Bible is not found in any other Bible.

The space is too limited to give an ade- quate statement of what this Bible repre- sents. For the use of some of the charts, some outlines and other matter, we are in- debted to the "Students' Bible Guide and Helps," by Dr. J. R. Kaye.

The Analytical Indexed Bible is designed to encourage a more earnest study of the Word of God, and by the more compact and usable arrangement of its material to make the perusal of the Book of books a blessing and a joy.

The reviewer is indebted to the President of the John A. Dickson Publishing Com- pany for the privilege of carefully exami- ning this New Analytical Indexed Bible. He can highly recommend it. Further information concerning the work may be secured through the Chicago office. M. A. S.

Another Book Review

Recently the Young People's Union of the First Baptist church in New York City did our Seminary a great kindness in sending to our library (which is now separated from that of the college of arts and sciences) three excellent books by their pastor, the Right Reverend Dr. I. M. Haldeman. He is one of America's outstanding preachers and a review of his gift volumes for our Brethren readers is certainly in order at this time.

1. Christ, Christianity and the Bible.

In this book the great Baptist divine at- tempts to restate with force and lucidity the fundamental items of our faith. He consid- ers Christ in the light of Matthew 9:17. He suggests that "among the voices of common consent of the world that Jesus Christ was a good man, there are those who with equal insistence deny that he was Almighty God." He concludes the chapter by giving in the inexorable alternative concerning Christ: "If not God—not good?"

The chapter on Christianity itself bears 2 Tim. 1:10 as its text. "What is Christian- ity?" Dr. Haldeman queries. He avers that "the Gospel is the good news that our Lord Jesus Christ came into the world to accom- plish "by doing" three things which pro- claim its constituent and objective charac- teristics:

1. The abolition of death.
2. The gift of a new life.
3. Immortality.

Each of these are discussed simply, and with consummate skill.

The final chapter on The Bible has as its Biblical background 1 Thess. 2:13. It con- cludes this very general proposition: "The Bible is proved to BE the Word of God when it is shown to be NOT the word of man; and it is proved to be not the word of man when it is shown to be—not such a book as man WOULD write if he COULD; nor such a book as a man COULD write if he WOULD." Then the author proceeds to prove his point by suitable argument and apt references.

It is a rich volume and worthy of any reader's study and meditation.

2. Why I Preach the Second Coming

The author's own foreword is reproduced here as an excellent review of his own work: "The reasons for preaching and teaching the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ are manifold and each one worth while.

The Author has contented himself with presenting a few as follows:

The Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is the one event most often recorded in Holy Scripture.

It is bound up with every fundamental doctrine, with every sublime promise and every exhortation to high, to holy and prac- tical Christian living.

Only at the Second Coming of our Lord will redemption be complete and the blood of the cross be justified.

Not till our Lord Jesus Christ comes the Second time will the Church be exalted into her true function of rulership over the world.

Only at the Second Coming will the sol- emn and covenant promises of God to Israel be fulfilled.

Only at the Second Coming of the Christ of God will a government of everlasting righteousness and peace be established on the earth.

It is at the Second Coming of Christ alone that the earth will be delivered from the bondage of corruption and transformed into the paradise of God.

The Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ for his Church is the most imminent event on the horizon of time.

3. The Signs of the Times

The title of this monograph is one of perennial interest. It has always interested and perplexed men, yet not more so than the present depression. As a sample of the many books written on the subject, perhaps this is one of the best. It has a clear, forceful, and reverent style. It is not an extremist product. What an array of subjects are treated! Look at these: "The signs of the Times, The Faith, Progress of the Devil's Lie, Jericho, Theology, The New Religion, Thinking Above What is Written, The Devil's Righteousness, Mental Assassination, Present Day Miracles, Socialism, Emmanualism, The Kingdom of Commerce, The Scarlet Woman, The Parliament of Nations, and the Zionist Movement." Here are topics which challenge the student of prophecy and of history.

These books in order are published by the following book companies and with the following prices:

1. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago .....$1.25
2. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago ..... 1.25
3. Francis Emory Fitch, Inc., New York City ..... 1.75

Dr. Haldeman is the author of many other books on Biblical subjects. Our National Association will gladly accept your book orders and fill them promptly, saving postage for you.

Our Seminary professors will review other books from time to time on this page of The Evangelist. M. A. S.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for December 20)

The Supreme Gift of Love

Scripture Lesson—1 John 4:7-19.

Devotional Reading—John 15:12-17.

Golden Text—Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another.—1 John 4:11.

Introductory Note

While this lesson is not actually a story of the birth of Jesus, such as we find in Matthew, Luke, or the prophecies of Isaiah; and such as we might naturally expect for a Christmas lesson, we need not be disturbed unduly; because anything which John has written has to do so preeminently with Christ that it becomes easy to trace his entire life history in the writings of this beloved apostle. The lesson is especially fitting because it deals so beautifully with the fact of God's love for us as is evidenced by the sending of his Son, Jesus Christ, into the world to be our Savior.—Selected.

The thoughts of this book cluster about three great centers: Light, Love and Life. Its object is that believers may "know they have eternal life, and so their joy may be full." 1:4; 5:13. The Epistle shows John's mental habit, contemplative rather than argumentative, confident of truth, taught by intuition, confirmed by experience. The apostle of love is still "Boanerges," thundering against heresies that assail Christ's divine mediatorial character. Love is not laxity! The Gospel of John shows sinners how they may get eternal life by believing; the Epistle shows believers how to know they have eternal life.—Pierson.

The Apostle John

John was probably the youngest of all the apostles. Many think he was yet in his teens when Jesus called him to follow him. His youth is supposed by many to account for Jesus' special love for him and this special regard for him not exciting the jealousy of the rest of the apostles. His deep spirituality and mystical temperament predisposed him to the teachings of Jesus and gave him deep insight into his character and teachings. His first epistle ought to have especial interest for us because it in all probability contains his very last exhortations to the church. Since he outlived the rest of the apostles so long and this message was written so near the close of his life we may regard it not only as his own last message, but the farewell of the entire apostolic body. His favorite words were light, life, and love, three words which have the very largest possible meaning to those who honestly seek to know their origin, duty, destiny, and the power that is the arbiter of their fate. To know that this omnipotent power is a gracious heavenly Father and an elder Brother who has loved us even unto death, affords a glorious hope and inspiration for life.

Little is recorded of John after his arrest with Peter for preaching and teaching in the temple after the healing of the lame man at the gate Beautiful, except that he was present at the council in Jerusalem when the Gentile believers were freed from the yoke of Jewish observances; and that in his extreme old age he was banished to the isle of Patmos where he had a vision, which is the Book of Revelation in our Bible.—Otterbein Teacher.

The Love Which Transfigures Responsibility

When Horace Bushnell wrote Vicarious Sacrifice he was completely possessed by the idea that it is of the very nature of ethical love to take upon itself the burdens and the tragedies of those who are loved. It delights to accept burdens from which mere justice might turn away in anger and distaste. And so love transfigures responsibility. Of course there is one supreme example of this sort of love, the figure which we associate with the bright shining of the star of Bethlehem and the dark and terrible splendor of the cross. But this far-reaching and transforming love appears in unexpected places. Prince Kropatkin in Mutual Aid has shown how profoundly it is related to the very biological process itself. Benjamin Kidd in The Science of Power has suggested how potentially its application might transform our whole civilization.

Long ago Marie Correlli wrote a curious book entitled The Romance of Two Worlds. In a chapter entitled "A Miniature Creation", a human being created a sort of a dream world whose tiny creatures became so involved in tragedy and evil that it seemed there was no way to save them. At last it became clear that there was only one way really to help them. The creator of the tiny world must assume all the responsibility for its terrible problems, suffer for it, and pay any price of pain that might be necessary to bring its microscopic inhabitants to a better way of life. All this of course was just Miss Correlli's way of making dramatically vivid of God's supreme gift of love and triumphant strategy of the cross. Harold Hough.

Christian Love Regenerates Soul

God sent Jesus his Son from heaven to teach us how to live, how to help, how to save mankind. He taught man about himself in order to help the world to be better.

"It may be impossible to love God, almighty, incomprehensible Creator, but it is quite possible to love him as revealed in the person of Christ, walking among the living, pitying their infirmities, leaning into their bosoms, healing their diseases, weeping over their graves, removing their transgressions, bestowing on them the Holy Spirit, living and always with us, the same day, today and forever. This possibility is not a matter of speculation but of proof. Countless souls among the living and the dead have been able to say of the apostle, 'The love of Christ constrained me.' Multitudes have been willing to suffer and die for him. Love for him has been the strongest incentive to duty, a support under persecution and trial, a supreme affection that could be quenched."

Whatever Jesus himself, and those who believe in him as his loyal disciples, has done for the individual, for the society as a whole. Christ has given their faces toward the dawn. The Christian world is growing better. The difference between Christian lands and those of other religions is a hundred years. Wonderful. There are still vast changes to be made before God's kingdom shall cover the earth as it is in heaven. The opposition is still very strong. There are many who love their brother instead of loving him; that loveth not his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he has not seen?—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Deeper Meaning of Christmas

"A birthday is always a great day. Christmas is the greatest birthday of the year. There was no sounding of trumpets in any court about it, yet it was more important than any birthday of the Caesars. We have only to think of all that Christ has done—to be thrilled by the ineffable grandeur of the hour, when unto us a child was born."—George H. Morrison.

"As the eager human spirit looks forward once more to the celebration of Christmas, what is it that it looks forward to? It will be services and candles and gifts and singing and the playing of games, the mood of holiday. But the human mind will not get the best out of Christmas unless it hears the angel offering vision from on high, and power from on high, and life from the Most High, and then the Lord's prayer, 'Behold the instrument of thy salvation.' Lord: be it unto me according to thy word."

"Christmas is not merely something that happened once upon a time far off in hoary past, and that is the end of the matter! It is the reminder of a living presence today—the continual presence of God in the world, the continual offer of the life to the willing human soul."

Let the Holy Spirit be your teacher. You will get credits toward a greater degree of joy and peace.

can be glorified more through death than through life. It is hard for us to see how his name could be magnified by our losing

"During this season of bank failures, we are looking to the Lord, and we know that the Lord is not a bankrupt; surely judging from world conditions his coming must be

In speaking of the death of Mangou, my former chauffeur, the same letter says:
"Our hearts are drawn closer to the Lord because of those whom we have loved and lost awhile. I know that heaven seems nearer to you because of this one who has gone on before. Even though our loved ones have gone to be with the Lord, our hearts are oftentimes broken. Our encouragement is that the Lord knows best and that some day we'll understand." Another letter from Bellevue speaks thus of my dear Mangou's closing hours:

Bellevue, Sept. 11th, 1931.

Dearest Doctor:

This day will be long remembered by me, as it has been the saddest I have experienced on the Mission Field. The copies of letters enclosed will explain the situation here in regard to the flu epidemic which has been raging since early in August. Our first death occurred today and it was your faithful Mangou, who started to work too soon after he had the flu, and was taken with what we believe to have been double pneumonia. He was out to church last Sunday, the 6th, helped Mr. Sheldon with the car on Monday, was sick on Tuesday but I didn't know it. Wednesday I sent medicine with Yadeli and went to see him in the afternoon. His temperature was 103. Thursday morning I went down to see him again before going to the hospital and found him so choked up I asked if he wouldn't let the men carry him to the hospital. He said yes, and they brought him to the hospital.
I did what I could for him, and his temperature was down to a little over 101 in the afternoon, but he wouldn't keep the blanket over him. This morning I went to the hospital directly from church at seven o'clock, as I had the native service, and went right down. I could see he was very much worse although his temperature was but 102. He was delirious, and Yadeli said he had been walking around during the night and hadn't slept any. I sent for Mr. Sheldon and he came and talked with Mangou, but he couldn't speak, although he opened his mouth and tried to do so. Mr. Sheldon had prayer and went back to his work. I then took care of the flu patients in the other ward and went in to see Mangou occasionally. He wouldn't lie down but sat up in order to get his breath. When I went in a little after nine o'clock I heard what I thought was the death rattle and he was picking at his blanket. I then sent a note for Mr. Sheldon to come quickly, but he was dead before he reached the hospital. Even his people didn't realize he was going to die.

Doctor, I never saw such sorrow evidenced at anyone's death. His sister and other relatives were inconsolable. Yadeli's grief was piteous to see and of course she wept copiously, but she didn't "toto" and was very sweet and sensible. She told us that Mangou had told her in the early morning that if he died she was to stay here with the children so that they could be brought up under the Gospel, and she is going to do so. She said at the grave, because I was right beside her, "You can't do Madame Bombo's (Gribble's) work any more." I told her Mangou was with "Bom-bo" himself now. I told her we would write and tell you about him, so if you could write her a little note in Sango she would appreciate it. I will read it to her.

Under the date of September 13th, Mr.
Sheldon writes: "We were surely touched with Mangou's death ... Yadeli (his wife) feels it so keenly and she seems just lost without him. She has her three children to care for alone now. It was his dying wish that she stay here and that the children accept the gospel. His relatives who were here, especially his sister and brother-in-law were touched by his death. But they say they know the Lord took Mangou, that he is with the Lord, and that one day they will see him....

"I know this will be a heavy blow to you,
Doctor, as you had planned so much on him.
... Mangou was the only native (on our field) who knew much about a car. ... We can hardly realize that he is really gone.
We have known him since 1923 when he came to Bassai and accepted the gospel shortly after our arrival ... I would be so glad to do all I can in training another chauffeur for you ... but I have no one to suggest."

September 15.

From Yaloke letters the following news has been gleaned: "On August 29th, Mr.
Kennedy was returned here from Bangui.
... The Bangui doctor diagnosed his case as tumor of the liver, attached to the right lung. He looks very bad. ... How our hearts ache to see him in this condition. We have had a very serious epidemic of flu.
Miss Emmert and I (Miss Tyson) each spent a week in bed. We had on an average of 150 cases per day. We are constantly turning away yaws cases, as we have no medicine. (Hospital funds alone can be used for the purchase of medicines. Such funds are exhausted).

"Four deaths have occurred from the flu at Yaloke."

We close this letter with an urgent call to prayer for every department of the Oubangui-Chari Mission.

As a matter of information and missionary education we wonder if all are familiar with the fact that while our school, industrial and evangelistic support are payable from the General Funds of our mission, our medical work, by mutual agreement, is not so payable—but must be met by funds specially designated for medical or hospital work.

God has been wonderfully undertaking. One of our dear Brethren doctors is sending some medicines to the field, to arrive although he knew it not, at a time of crisis.

Two groups have become interested in providing funds for specific remedies for yaws and hydrophobia.

We praise God for those who are interested in the treatment of leprosy and for the assurance of his undertaking here.

May God himself enable us to intercede, to go, to give of our substance—or more—our loved ones, that our foreign fields may be evangelized!

Faithfully yours in him,

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

another. We covet your prayers half.

THE REVIVAL AT THIRD CHURCH PHILADELPHIA

This is a meeting we had looked for many months. In fact the had been scheduled for over a year. Steffler, the pastor, was a former member of mine in the First church of Philadelphia. It was my privilege to go into the ministry, and also I had of performing the ceremony that year and his splendid wife years ago. you can imagine the keen anticipation I experienced in looking forward to meeting with him.

The Third church of Philadelphia under the Home Mission Board years and is now about ready to go. Were it not for this depression which closed down the textile mills to such extent as to throw most of the men out of steady employment, they would have gone independent this year. However, instead of forcing them to do so, I felt it better to help another year, not to strain or discourage this congregation which is doing so finely. Another year under the splendid leadership of Brother Steffler will likely see them doing their work entirely alone.

For three weeks we preached to those who love the gospel, and who receive every truth it holds. They worked very hard, and the Lord gave them in return. Some refreshing was marked this meeting that we shall remember. The faithful attendance at services, and the fine support by the members who could play musical instruments contributed much to the blessing of the campaign.

The pastor is greatly loved by the people. In fact we have never seen a pastor so really loved by his people. He has really loved his pastor more than any other people do. How fine this is. How others to follow. Why shouldn't we help and love and pray for their pastor instead of criticizing him as is so common. A pat on the back is far more encouraging than a knock on the head. Many a man has been broken down by a critical congregation or its leaders. Weaker pastors have been made a loving, trusting, cheerful people at home was with the pastor and wife. It is a bright spot in my life. They were happy days that I shall remember.

The Third Brethren church of Philadelphia has a great future before it. It has been growing by leaps and bounds. The present pastor has taken it over, and revivals are held almost every week. There is a splendid congregation around the church which holds hundreds of people who can yet be won to the Lord. There is no reason why one of the churches of the brotherhood cannot be started right here. The Sunday school is taxing the building's equipment to capacity. Before the present structure for I believe a larger one will be needed. The Home Mission Board is happy to work and hopes that soon another can be started in the city of Philadelphia. We believe that right now there are opportunities beckoning to the church to enter and take them. The foresight has cost us many a fine ministry in the past. May it never be

PORTIS, KANSAS

Hello Pennsylvania! I suppose you think we have forgotten you folks in that section since our debut into the Kansas air last September. But we have thought of you many times, also the scenery of those beautiful hills you have there to enjoy. However, as we reflect back our minds soon centers on a couple of faithful groups of God's dear children in Morrison's Cove, located at Martinsburg and McKee, where Brother R. I. Humbert is now located as our worthy successor. It is simply marvelous as to how our hardships are forgotten as we look back through those six years of service together in the Lord. Your faith in him, is ever a source of strength to us as we press on in the great conflict against the teeming forces of sin that are confronting God's children in this hour. As we see the STORM CLOUDS GATHERING, and a DREADFUL DARKNESS settling down over the whole earth, surely there never was such a challenge for God's faithful army to do better soldiering than now. Let our works and our trials be a test of our faith in him. The shadows of "THAT DAY APPROACHING" seem to be upon us, and the rainbow of HOPE is seen in the CLOUDS. Our meeting in the air together with him may be nearer than many think. The way to WATCH is to WORK AND TO SUFFER WITH HIM. Let us manifest our faith.

In our journey across three or four states to Portis, Kansas, we encountered very little difficulty. The most outstanding was in the state of Illinois at my birth place. Here we left the slab, as they called it, for a couple miles to stay over night with my aunt. During the night it rained, and the next morning in our effort to get back on the highway, we slipped off into a ditch and had to be pulled out. I do not know that we lost any thing more than an hour's time, but in addition we carried quite a quantity of their black gumbo away with us. We left Indiana Tuesday morning and reached Portis Thursday evening. Our first stop at Portis was at the home of one of our deacons, Brother Ed. Boomer, who lives on a farm about three miles out from Portis. Brother and Sister Boomer gave us an urgent invitation to come to their home until our parsonage was in readiness. We appreciate this kind hospitality far more than we can express in words.

Kansas can certainly give warm receptions. At least it was so with us, and they were the protracted kind, lasting for weeks, when the thermometer stood around a hundred. Some said it was as high as 110 and I never stopped to question the statement for a moment. And oh, those hot winds, they soon put on the Kansas tan. Like the dear folks in California, they told us it was very unusual, especially at that season of the year, and we were perfectly willing to pass it up at that and try to forget it, at least until next summer.

However, a real reception was planned by the Brethren here, when they brought in some of their live stock from the poultry department, and other substantial gifts, and we met together in a social way to acquaint ourselves with a long list of new names. The list ran something like this, Smiths, Brumbaugh, Lemon, Staalduine, Garner, Bradskey, Boomer, Billmaier, Disney, Doolittle, Goodenow, Gentzler, Ratliff, Ryphma, Killinger, Garrett, Garver, Booz, etc., I had to make the fatal mistake, of course, in pronouncing the last name from the pulpit, "Booze." But the persons bearing the name have forgiven me and I have promised not to do it again. The hard question, of course, was when we met folks to know who was Tompson and who was Walter. But after three months and three weeks from that time, in revival meetings together, we can begin to call our own sheep by name, and I have no doubt now, knowing their love for the Word, but what they know our voice and will follow us, at least, as long as we follow the Lord. And here perhaps we ought to say, that we join with the people here in their praise and thanks to Brother and Sister Lowman for their untiring service and their faithfulness to the Word.

During our three weeks' revival, the weather was ideal, the response on the part of our people was very fine. Almost the entire church came forward and rededicated their lives. The young people, too, responded in a splendid way. Five of our young folks came forward, laying their lives on the altar for full time service. Three young men will enter the ministry if the Lord opens the way for them, and two young ladies are willing to go forth as missionaries. If financial conditions are more favorable perhaps some of these will enter Ashland College next year. One has been received into the church by baptism and one by letter. Our attendance since the meeting has been unusually good, and we believe our people are going to put Christ and his Church first, as a test of their stewardship, as the line tightens in these trying times. May we all stand united in prayer for one

We must have more wisely established churches right here in America or future and much that we now have.

RELISTIC MEETING AT THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA, PA., NOV. 2ND TO 22ND.

Third Brethren church of Philadelphia has had a real old fashioned meeting with many souls seeking. The evangelist was Brother R. Miller. The pastor and Brother Miller worked together in three meetings now have always found Brother Miller a proclaimer of the Word of God. The messages are of the highest spiritual value backed with a real sincere Christ makes Brother Miller one of the best evangelists of the Brethren

Interest of the meeting was good from beginning and the crowds grew until night. The weather was fine until to finish. We were pleased with the delegations which attended the meeting from the New Jersey churches, Philadelphia. The First church of Philadelphia cooperated nobly. Brother Miller, pastor of these people in days gone by, they retain a warm spot in their hearts.

There were strangers attending the meeting. We have never been able to reach out to many weeks to come.

There were thirty-two to come forward; these came to Christ for the first time. Others came to reaffirm their faith in Christ. In addition to this number the best young people of the church are living their lives for definite Christian

Next Sunday after the meeting closed we accepted Christ as their Savior. The spiritual condition of the church is the very best. We are indeed grateful to the Lord for making it possible for Brother Miller. He deserves the honor of the entire brotherhood in his saving souls for Christ.

The pastor's privilege to have Brother Miller in his home and this fellowship was greatly enjoyed. We trust that if we carry on, we will be able to work to many more campaigns.

During our meeting we had our communion service. It was the largest service ever held in this church. Brother Miller has aided the work greatly and are hoping for a real harvest of souls during the winter, if the Lord should Meet at the Third church of Philadelphia. Please HIM, in all our work. Pray for us, as we pray for you.

"CAMP BLACK HAWK"

The name adopted by the Illiokota people while in a Young People's Conference held in Waterloo, Iowa, over the coming vacation, November 25-29. Reference was made possible by the Sunday School Association in connection with the Foreign Missionary Board of the Brethren Church. The faculty consisted of Prof. and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey, of the Seminary; and Brother and Sister Miller, and Miss Estella Myers, of our missionary staff. Besides these, we had the vesper leaders, Rev. C. H. Miller of the Waterloo congregation, Rev.

M. D. Early of Hudson, Rev. Miles Taber of Leon, and many other local helpers. The student body consisted of about eighty young people who came from the following churches in the district: Lanark, Leon, Dallas Center, Cedar Rapids, Williamsburg, Hudson and Waterloo.

Great emphasis was placed upon the study of God's Word and it was a revelation to see how interested the young people were in this study. They brought their own Bibles, notebooks and pencils, and gave their very best attention to every instructor. The courses were: "Practical Church Music," by Mrs. Stuckey; Bible Study, by Prof. Stuckey, and Missionary Instruction, by Mrs. Foster. Besides the vesper services, the last service each day was a "camp fire" meeting held in the basement of the church. Mr. Foster and Miss Myers were in charge of these meetings. Free entertainment and free meals were given by the Waterloo W. M. S. and the homes were thrown open to the young people who came from sister churches.

It was decided by the young people themselves that this "Camp" should be continued through the years and a permanent organization be authorized to plan the work each year. From every point of view, it was a great success.

S. M. WHETSTONE.

SUGGESTION

Mrs. Upmore: "She is a wonderfully talented woman. I wish I had her vocabulary.

Mrs. Sudden-Klymer: "It's certainly a fine one; but it broke down with her the other day, miles and miles from anywhere, and it cost her fifteen dollars to have it hauled to the nearest repair shop."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE—BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

Any one knowing of members of the Brethren Church, or members' children, or friends of the church living in, or in the vicinity of, Baltimore, Maryland, are urgently requested to send their names and addresses to J. L. Bowman, Linwood, Maryland at an early date. In your reply, please state whether members, or members' children, or merely friendly to the Brethren Church. Please let us have your cooperation in this matter.

WHITE GIFT OFFERING ENVELOPES

White Gift Offering envelopes have been mailed out to the various Sunday schools, but if any have been missed, or have received an insufficient supply, kindly write me stating the number required, and they will be sent immediately.

M. A. STUCKEY.

NOTICE! HOME MISSION OFFERING!

By every means we have rightly at hand, the Home Mission Board has managed to pay each payroll up to the present but cannot pay the December allowance of our mission workers until the Thanksgiving Offering makes this possible. We are positively at the end of our string! THIS IS A CALL TO EVERY PASTOR AND TREASURER AMONG OUR CHURCHES TO SEND IN SUCH FUNDS AS THEY HAVE ON HAND AT ONCE. DO IT NOW! THIS IS AN EMERGENCY.

R. PAUL MILLER,
Secretary-Treasurer.

"WHATSOEVER YE SHALL ASK THE FATHER IN MY NAME, HE WILL GIVE IT YOU"

"In my Name!" How oft we fail in our petitions. In his Name, believing on him, trusting in him, not asking foolishly, waiting for the Father's own time, depending on his wisdom; all of these and more must we remember in asking our Father's help.

Remembering always, for the sake of our Savior Jesus:

When prayer delights thee least, then learn to say,
Soul, now is greatest need that thou shouldst pray.

Crooked and warped I am, and I would fain
Straighten myself by thy right line again.

O come, warm sun, and ripen my late fruits;
Pierce, genial showers, down to my parched roots.

Say, what is prayer, when it is prayer indeed?
The mighty utterance of a mighty need.

The man is praying, who doth press with might
Out of his darkness into God's own light.

While heat the iron in the furnace won,
Withdrawn from thence, 'twas cold and hard anon.

Flowers from their stalks divided, presently Droop, fail, and wither in the gazer's eye.

The greenest leaf divided from its stem,
To speedy withering doth itself condemn.

The largest river from its fountain head
Cut off, leaves soon a parched and dusty bed.

All things that live from God their sustenance wait,
And sun and moon are beggars at his gate.

THE Angel Song

According to the Gospel record, when our Lord Jesus was born in Bethlehem the great and long-expected event was announced to some humble shepherds by an angel of the Lord. When the announcement was finished, we are told, "Suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying:

"Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace.
Goodwill toward men."

For nineteen hundred years this angelic chorus has been repeated in sermon and song, celebrating the Birth of him who was named in Isaiah's prophecy as "the Prince of Peace." But today, as perhaps never before, men are feeling that there is something inappropriate about the middle line of this angelic chorus when applied to the world in which we live.

WHAT is the Problem?

As given in the Authorized Version of the Bible, which is the translation that most of us are accustomed to read, the middle clause of the angelic chorus reads as follows:

"And on earth peace."

But viewing the earth and its inhabitants as a whole, how much actual peace has there been since the angels first uttered their chorus of praise upon the ears of men? To ask that question is to answer it. The history of mankind, no less in the "Christian Era" than in the ages preceding, has been a history of wars and bloodshed. It is history written with the point of a sword dipped in human blood. The parchment upon which it is written is made of dead men's bones. It is punctuated with the clash of arms, the whine of bullets, the crash of shot and shell. Its chapters end amid the groans of dying men, the cries of starving orphans, the weeping of heartbroken wives and mothers. It is a book of horrors surpassing even the imagination of a Poe. And worst of all, it is an unfinished book. The concluding chapter has not yet been written. God alone knows what it will contain.

Little wonder that the world grows cynical of the Christmas message of peace, as it has been preached by the Church, and begins to ask, "Where is your Prince of Peace? And where is the peace on earth which he announced nearly two thousand years ago?"

The world has a right to ask that question, and the Church dare not evade it.

WHAT did the Angels Say?

It is not often that I appeal from the Authorized Version to the American Revised Version for the correct reading of a passage. The Authorized Version is a marvelous translation of the Word of God, and while it might be improved in places, I doubt whether it will ever be wholly supplanted by any other translation in the English language.

But I believe that the American Revised rendering of Luke 2:14 represents more accurately the original Greek record, and, as we might expect, provides the solution of our problem. It reads as follows:

"Glory to God in the highest,

And on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased."

I do not wish to take the space to explain the technical reasons for this reading of the passage, but merely call attention that New Testament scholars are practically unanimous in support of the Revised reading.

THE Divine Condition of Peace

If the reader will now compare the two different readings of the angelic chorus, it will be seen that in the Authorized Version "peace" is extended to the earth with no condition attached. It is "Peace on earth, good will to men." There is neither any limitation nor condition to the announcement. If this is what the angels said, they did not tell the truth, for no such peace has ever been realized upon earth.

But if we adopt the Revised Version reading, our problem is solved. At his first coming the Lord Jesus Christ did not come to establish "peace on earth" universally regardless of the attitude of men. (That is what he will do when he comes a second time.) But at his first coming he came to establish peace among a certain kind of men, namely, those individuals who would believe his Word and accept him as Savior and Lord. With this view the angelic chorus harmonizes exactly, as given in the American Revision, "On earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

This is the limitation of divine peace in the present age. It is not for all men, but only for those "in whom he is well pleased." And according to Hebrews 11:6, "Without Faith it is impossible to please him."

DID the Angels Speak the Truth?

Every human soul that has trusted in the Lord Jesus Christ will answer, Yes. Those who have come to know him in their own personal experience can testify to the possession of a "peace of God which passeth all understanding" (Phil. 4:7). The Apostle Paul speaks of it in Romans 5:1, "Wherefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." This was the peace bequeathed by the Lord himself, as he went to Calvary, to the little band of disciples who loved and followed him. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you" (John 14:27).

If you have nothing else to praise God for at this Christmas season, you should praise him for this "peace" which is yours if you belong to him. The angels spoke the truth. We who believe do have peace. "For he is our peace" (Eph. 2:14).

BUT What about "World" Peace?

As a matter of fact, when looked at from the Biblical standpoint, the term "World Peace" joins together two mutually irreconcilable principles. "Peace" in the Bible is a divine thing originating in and flowing from the Being and Will of the Infinite God, utterly unrealizable from any human source apart from God. The "World" in the Bible describes a cosmic-system which is completely opposed to God, builded by man, is a sinful rebel, headed by Satan "god;" and which must finally pass away. "All that is in the world ... is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the lust thereof passeth away, and the lust thereof" (John 2:16-17).

"World" and "Peace" cannot be joined together on any moral or spiritual basis. The gulf between them is unbridgable. The word "World-Peace" is like talking about "Light-Darkness" or "Good-Badness."

The prophet Isaiah laid down the principle many centuries ago: "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked" (Isa. 57:21). And every man is "wicked" who refuses to receive Christ as Savior and Lord.

The man who declares that there is lasting peace to the wicked world is guilty of preaching moral and spiritual compromise. He is guilty of saying that men can be saved from thorns and figs from a corrupt tree can bring forth good fruit. Such preaching is not only untrue, but must result in moral compromise. Preaching to be worthwhile must be based upon the eternal realities of the moral and spiritual universe. A great deal of the world calls "idealism" is simply a name for these realities.

"Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness" (Isa. 5:20).

PEACE on earth

There are only two possible ways to realize universal peace on earth. The first way would be to genuinely convert the living human soul. The smallest group of men left unregenerated would be a menace to the peace of the world. Moreover, if the entire world of men were brought to Christ, the work would be done all over again as soon as a new generation arrived on the scene, for spiritual life and salvation are not inherited. Those who are acquainted with the history of the Church and progress of evangelization, will understand that "world peace" by the way of "world conversion" is utterly remote.

The second way to bring universal peace is

"Where Is He that Is Born King of the Jews?"

was the question the wise men asked when they arrived in search of him whose coming into the world was to be revealed. Not that the thoughts of many hearts might be revealed. Not but it is the question of all men. The quest of all hearts, conscious of it or not, is to find a Savior, some one who would bring them a message from God and do for them the works of God. "Where is he that is born king of the Jews?" It was more than the earthly king that their hearts sought. It was the old, old story, that I knew where I might find him!" But it is new and different in every age and clime. "Where is he?" Through ages men had sought to answer the yearning of the human heart, prophet after prophet, as men were able to receive it. But revelation was always imperfect and poorly understood, for men were dull of hearing and hard of understanding. Finally, in the fullness of time God came to man in the person of his Son, Jesus, with his heart of love and showing forth his purpose and plan for the redemption of the world. As we are told at the outset of the epistle to the Hebrews (1:1, 2), "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

The quest goes on unceasingly. There are many who have never seen Christ and worshipped at his feet, and to many others he has been a reality, no vital force in their lives, though they have sought to have found him. To such there will come the challenge of the Christmastide to search for the Lord Jesus until they are rejoiced in his living presence. Aye, and shall we all not find him with a new sense of reality? And as we search unto deep, there will be a reply. God will be found of them who seek him shall find him.

Search Must Be Sincere

We are to find him, our search for Christ must be sincere and genuine. We must seek Jesus for what he is in himself, and not because in such a noble quest we can achieve the gratification of some selfish desire. Men sought Jesus in the days of his flesh that he might be a divider of their estates, and though talking with him, they never knew him. We must seek him because we really desire him, and not from idle curiosity. When he walked the streets of Jerusalem the curious, fickle crowds hailed him as the Son of David one day and on another, having no real concern for him, they cried for him to be crucified. We must seek him for what he came to do, and not for what we would like to have him do for us. The heavenly announcement said, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21). But many sought him, hoping that he might save them from the bondage of Rome. Others thronged him that he might feed them with material bread, not knowing that the bread that he sought to give them came down from heaven. We must seek the true Christ of God as revealed in the Word, and not as we might imagine or wish him to be, if we would recognize and possess him. Some thought of Jesus as merely the Carpenter of Nazareth, but John declared him to be "the Word" (or, the Christ) "made flesh" that "dwelt among us," and testifies. "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John 1:14). And there are false Christs, or mistaken conceptions of Christ today hanging upon the walls of men's minds, but he who is sincere in his desire to know and possess the real Christ must take the Gospel statement for what it says, that he is "the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father" (John 1:18).

A famous painting of the Christ-child by the Spanish artist, Murillo, was once tampered with. The man who purchased the picture as a true Murillo painting, discovered on close examination that the child-king had been cut out and another painting of the Christ-child inserted. The surrounding host was by Murillo,

✠ A Christmas Prayer ✠

By J. H. Jowett, D.D.

O God, the Father of all men, in whose grace all our light is born, and in whose love is the fountain of festivity, mercifully lead me into the holy secret of Christmastide, and take me into the innermost room of its holy joy. Forbid that I should remain in the outer courts, dwelling amid its merely carnal pleasures, satisfied with merriment that dies with the day, and contented with the happiness that passes with the fading flower and the withering leaf. Bring me into the eternal things of this blessed season, the things that abide, the love that manifests itself in unfailing good will, and the joy that rings Christmas bells all the year round. Let me draw water out of the wells of salvation, and let the joy of the Lord be my strength.

Graciously give unto me the joy of perfect reconciliation with thy will. May every disorderly power in my soul be subdued to willing obedience. Create in me the music of harmonious fellowship so that all my powers may be as a united orchestra to praise and bless thy holy name.

And mercifully give unto me the joy of spiritual liberty. Let thy statutes become my songs. Take the reluctance out of my service and the frown out of my obedience. Let me not be in thy house in the spirit of a bond-slave, but rather in the spirit of a son, finding springs of comfort in thy presence, and esteeming thy desire as my delight.

O God, give unto me the holy joy of human sympathy. Recreate the chords that become insensitive to my brother's joys and griefs. If the harp is broken graciously remake it out of the fulness of thy love. Save me from the death of selfishness. When Christmastide is over suffer me not to die again in moral benumbing, untroubled by my brother's sighs, and uncheered by my brother's songs. Unite me to my fellow with tender kinship, and let me be partaker of his triumphs and defeats.

And graciously impart unto me the joy of a glorious hope. Let my horizon shine with most alluring light. May the Christmas star always go before me, leading me to ever deepening revelations of the Lord, and giving me fresh surprises of heavenly grace and love.

Kindle thou the Christmas fire of holy love. Light the lamps of Christmas geniality and good will. Hallow and glorify my Lord's birthday with thy presence, and crown it with unsullied joy and peace.

but the Christ was false. The man searched until he found another picture which seemed to be a reproduction of the one he possessed, and labelled as a Murillo painting. He bought it and carefully examined it, and discovered that he had the Christ for which he sought. Deftly he removed the false Christ from the first picture and inserted the true Christ from the second picture, and the picture thus complete is now said to hang in one of the art galleries of Germany, under the title, "The Restored Christ." What was done to this picture is being done in all too many instances in religious life and thought today. Men want Christ after a fashion, but they have become so enamored with sin that they have shunned the true Christ with his demand for absolute sovereignty over life and thought, and have set up a false Christ who would be more tolerant of their loose thought habits and carnal standards of conduct. There is need of more downright sincerity and honesty in our search for the Christ at this Christmas time.

Lowliness of Mind

We must seek Christ in lowliness of mind and humility of heart, and not in personal pride and self-confidence. The Lord Jesus himself was lowly, lowly in birth and in life. His birth place was a stable and his cradle was a manger. He received no honor from kinds, but Herod sought to kill him. Humble shepherds were the first to visit him and his station was that of a carpenter. He was the Prince of glory, but he took upon himself the form of a servant. He was so great that the angels of heaven announced his coming and the Holy Spirit joined with a virgin to prepare him a body, yet he humbled himself and became obedient unto death. Knowing all this we are not surprised, therefore, to find him pronouncing blessings upon the meek and lowly in heart. Who could be so presumptuous as to seek such an one with thoughts of personal greatness or self-importance in his mind? Truly he rebukes and resists the proud and gives grace to the humble. The Pharisee who sought God boastingly and pompously in the temple received the censure of the Lord while the humble publican who dared not so much as lift his eyes toward heaven met with divine approval. Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt you to a place of fellowship with the Lord Jesus at this Christmastide.

Seek in Faith

We must seek Christ in faith, if we would find him. The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews tells us what seems a self-evident truth: "He that cometh to God must first believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6), but this he says to show that the statement he had just made, that "without faith it is impossible to please" God, is no mere arbitrary demand, but is essentially true in the very nature of things. Then he goes on to illustrate the importance of a vital, working faith. And faith does work; that is why it enables one to find Christ. Faith involves obedience and it is such faith, faith that leads to obedience, that makes one well-pleasing unto God. It was faith that caused the wise men to launch out upon their quest; they believed that Christ could be found, and they believed it with an active, obeying faith.

Faith is not only obeying, but it is far-seeing and gives spiritual insight. Were the wise men the only ones who saw the guiding star that came and stood over Bethlehem that "Holy Night?" If so, faith enabled them to see it. Or, did many see a new star and only three give it spiritual significance? If the latter is the case, still it was faith that gave them the spiritual insight. So it is ever, that faith enables the soul to see the things of God. Faith makes the presence of God real in the midst of the disturbing conditions that prevail. Faith makes the ways of God clear in the midst of the uncertainties of this life. Faith enables one to hear the voice of God in the din of multitudinous other calls and clam-

EDITORIAL REVIEW

When you make your White Gift, send it promptly to Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Treasurer, Ashland, Ohio.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, in "Travel Flashes" this week tells of his trip to Dayton to conduct the funerals of friends and former fellow-workers in the Lord's vineyard. He also comments regarding the large Sunday school and fine church congregation gathered to hear Brother Barnard, the pastor, under whose leadership this splendid church is going forward harmoniously.

From a personal communication from Brother Floyd Sibel, new pastor of the church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, we learn that one person has been baptized and two received into the church since he took charge.

Still the college advances in a very satisfactory and encouraging manner. President Jacobs states that the enrollment holds a high mark and that recognition has been given by the State of New York, which maintains about the most difficult standards of all the states. Such recognition is something of which to be proud, and adds to the value of every degree or diploma from the College grants.

Brother A. E. Whitted, pastor of the church at Louisville, writes that the people there are forging ahead in various ways in the work of the Lord. The Sunday school has reached a new record in attendance—215. A revival meeting conducted by Brother C. Beal resulted in fifteen confessions, two of which were made by persons who had been baptized and received into the church, and two await the rite. The campaign was also accompanied by a daily Bible reading record, aimed to encourage the habit of Bible reading. The total number of verses read was 113,400.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania, has recently experienced an unusually successful evangelistic campaign under the leadership of the pastor, Brother W. H. Clough, assisted by two Gospel singers. Attendance was maintained at a high mark throughout the campaign. Over one hundred stepped forward for Christ, forty of whom were for the first time and over sixty to make recollections. The spirit of unity prevails among the people and they are very much encouraged about the outlook of the church. Brother Clough has been there only since the middle of May, but he is already leading this people into a great work.

Brother I. D. Bowman pays fitting tribute in his article this week to the memory of the late brother T. J. Fahrney, whose home was taken in October. Brother Fahrney was a strong and loyal friend of The Brethren Evangelist, and did much to spread the Gospel among the Brethren of his own community. He was a friend of all the general interests of the church, and he will be remembered for the fine spirit of loyalty he exemplified. May the comforting grace of the Holy Spirit be with those who remain to mourn his going.

Brother Thomas Presnell, the faithful pastor of the Allegheny County circuit, in Pennsylvania and of Cameron, West Virginia, writes of a very successful revival conducted by himself at Cameron where twenty-five persons confessed Christ for the first time. A number of others came for membership in the church. The attendance was large and the interest fine throughout the meetings. As a result of these meetings the outlook of the Alleppo church is to be very bright. The work at Cameron has been hindered by financial conditions, a bank failure having delayed the building of their proposed new church. But the Alleppo field is said to be promising.

A good sister of the Evangelist family and a long-time subscriber, writes of the hard circumstances in which her family is living and states that they enjoyed The Evangelist so much that they would think of stopping the paper, they had their phonograph out, their radio taken out and ceased using their car. That is a mighty fine appreciation of spiritual things, and it is about what should be. Too many imagine that they are justified in being their compromising by cutting off their religious reading. Can they afford to do some real sacrificing before stopping the church? Renew now and send a subscription to a friend as a Christmas gift both for $3.00. One new subscription is only $1.35 per year.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

The request comes from Sister E. B. Gould of Vale, Oregon. "Pray for the two weeks' meeting to be held here by Dr. Bell, that many souls may be saved and that a Brethren church may be organized. May wandering Brethren be guided to help in Home Mission work."

A Christmas Meditation

By Dean J. Allen Miller

"It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold:
Peace on the earth, good-will to men
From heaven's all-gracious king;
The world in solemn stillness lay,
To hear the angels sing."

their flocks on the first Christmas night is pointed travelers. It is a rocky field and lies just at the s of the present city of Bethlehem. Five years ago visited Bethlehem it had about seven thousand a Virgin Birth. That makes it

English Commentator, David on this point. He says: "The less is every birth. There is ve said times innumerable to dents in my classes that the f our Lord was not the begin-his Life; neither was his the end. He was the eternal God who became flesh for us nd for our redemption. Our s that our Blessed Lord Jesus our Savior, was truly man. was not a mere man. He was rnal Son of God who left the of glory and made himself one identifying himself with us, and taking upon himself the burthe world's sin. This is the of the Incarnation and also ning. This is a source of prond ceaseless Christmas Joy as we meditate thereupon. May every reader have the joy of the Savior dwelling in the heart!

The heart will be empty and hopeless without the Savior as a living companion. The old earth is drear enough and men are troubled enough to crush out all Christmas joy unless indeed Christ lives within to sustain and cheer.

"Though Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born,
If he's not born in thee, thy soul is still forlorn."

The second thought I would like to stress for a moment and have you think out for yourself is this: The Birth of Jesus was unlike any other in that he has either made or influenced history on a vaster scale than any other ever born. He came out of a small province in an out-of-the-way corner of the old Roman World and from an obscure family of an oppressed and hated people. His earthly career was tragically brief as men measure a life-time.
And yet no human being can ever tell or write the whole of his life-story. He said so much, though he wrote nothing. He did so much, that men have difficulty to believe all he did. He lived so kingly and yet so human a life that none with a right mind for truth and beauty and goodness dare attack his manner of living. What he said is a Gospel for a lost world. What he did is all centered in the sacrificial offering of himself on the Cross for man's redemption. How he lived is a blessed example to all his true disciples and a stimulating challenge to follow in his footsteps.

What I am saying here is that men who believe this Gospel and accept this atonement for their sin have made history as no others. I mean of course history that has proven a blessing to mankind. The astonishing thing about it all is that men who have followed him so far off and have so stumbled and blundered in the attempts to carry out his will and his work have yet wrought far more significantly and fruitfully than merely human strength and wisdom would make possible. While multitudes of men and women have never yet heard the Gospel as a message of salvation to their souls there is not a nation on earth today that has not been influenced by the teaching and work of Jesus Christ. What is more, and of even greater significance, is the fact that without doubt the power of Jesus Christ, though denied and unrecognized, is more far-reaching today than ever before.

So as I ponder the meaning of Christmas to me this year of our Lord, for all History dates from him now, I am rejoicing that in Gods' wise and good providence I live now. I can think of no time and no place, and I have read a bit of History, in which my life might have been cast more propitiously and happily than here and now. I not only thank God for my life but I thank him for the time and place in which I live. My Christian ancestry, my church, my home,
—I thank God for them. To these I

THE CHRISTMAS ANGELS

By Rev. Addison Berg Collins, D. D.

*In the grayness of the twilight,
When the shadows come and go,
By the fireside I sat musing
On the days of long ago;
Then—I heard a gentle whisper,
Soft as falling flakes of snow,
And amid the clustered shadows,
In the firelight's ruddy glow,
Stood revealed a glorious vision—
Herald from afar I trow;
Yea, it was the Christmas Angel, God's rich blessing to bestow.*

* * * *

*In the brightness of the morning,
When the sun shone full and clear,
Saw I homes of poor and lonely
In which life was dark and drear;
Then—there came an humble mortal, Swiftly, surely drawing near,
Hasting down life's narrow highway,
Bearing gifts of love and cheer,
Bringing joy to sad-eyed children,
Drying up the mother's tear;
'Twas a blessed Christmas Angel, Earth born, Heav'n sent messenger.*

* * * *

*'Neath the stillness of the starlight,
Earth re-echoed once again,
With the strains of joy and gladness—
"Peace on earth—good-will to men";
Hand in hand two Christmas Angels Gently whispered an Amen.*

must hasten to add my country, my personal liberty which my country affords, and my work,—I thank God for these. And I am of the opinion that I could not and would not have these as I do had not Christ been born on that first Christmas so long ago in the little town of Bethlehem. So let us pray again:

"O Holy Child of Bethlehem!
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in;
Be born in us today."

The Birth was in the third place unlike any other in the genuine blessings it brought to a lost and sinful world. The burden of men's sin is a load which man himself cannot bear. The guilt of his sin he can never atone for and the consequences of it he can never blot out. Man needs a Savior. He needs one who can point him to God. Man longs for and seeks for God. All human records tell the sad tale of this forlorn search. The same records tell also of man's tragic and utter hopelessness when left to his own efforts. This Birth reveals God our heavenly Father to us men. It shows us that God loves and pities, that he is merciful and plenteous in pardon. It shows us something of the heinousness of sin and makes us hate it and forsake it. It reveals to us our real kinship to God and tells us how we may be restored to divine favor and find eternal life.

To attempt an enumeration of the blessings that Jesus Christ has brought to us and made possible for us is beyond the score of this brief meditation. I am anxious only to have the reader ponder how rich his life is in Christ. Perhaps one may learn this best by a sharp contrast with what is lost when without Christ. There is not a man or woman reading these lines whose life is not better because Christ was born in Bethlehem. There is not a boy or girl or little child, not a youth or maiden, whose eyes may fall upon these lines, or to whom they may be read, who is not blessed by virtue of this Birth upon which I am having you think with me. No, these are not idle claims. But the meaningful and worthwhile things of life today are just so far such as Jesus Christ gives them content. Let us give God the praise for our blessings.

But now I must close by reminding you again of what I have tried to have you think with me. It is the Christmas Time. It is a joyous and happy time to us because we rejoice in a Savior's birth. And his was a unique birth and that gives us added cause for joy when we think through its meanings. Life has meaning in the light of all he said and did. Life assumes eternal values and life's tasks sincerely done promise eternal reward. Friends enrich life and good men and good women, Christ-like men and women, enrich the earth and bless it to all generations.

"Silent night, holiest night,
Wondrous Star, O lend thy light,
With the angels let us sing,
Alleluia to our King,
JESUS THE SAVIOR IS HERE."

Ashland, Ohio.

MADE TO FEEL THE NEED OF GOD

It is good for a man to be checked, crossed, disappointed, made to feel his own ignorance, weakness, folly—made to feel his need of God; to feel that in spite of all his cunning and self-confidence, he is no better off in this world than in a dark forest, unless he has a Father in Heaven who loves him with an eternal love, and a Holy Spirit in Heaven who will give him a right judgment in all things, and a Savior in Heaven who can be touched with the feeling of his infirmities.—Charles Kingsley.

Christmas Sermon

By Claud Studebaker

TEXT—For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, though he was rich yet for our sakes he became poor, through his poverty might become rich.—II Cor. 8:9.

This text is an appeal given by the writer of the ture, in his letter to the church at Corinth, and among others contained in the eighth and ninth chapters. This with the context is a tremendous appeal for our giving. Probably the need for these great truths be proclaimed and applied was never greater than in a world abounding with food and starving people; a surplus of clothing but many ragged; work everywhere needing to be done, but men idle; with the great cumulation of wealth ever known and yet men of and security cannot find money to finance their business. The Lord has blessed us with plenty, but selfishness and greed has so clogged the channels of industry and distribution of labor and reward, that many who are industrious and capable, find themselves helpless in the face of a disrupted, bankrupted, corrupted, interrupted condition of affairs.

Our wise ones are saying, This is the way, or there, it is only the "Lo here and lo, there," of Scripture. For instance, we pay a Farm Board Member $75 a year for his wisdom to save the great industry and a $50.00 a week man might have done as well. I have disposition to dwell on the "depression," either its cause or cure, only in the words of the prophet who said, King Joash, who forsook the way of the Lord to take the counsel of his worldly wise princes, "Why transtervest the way of the Lord that ye cannot prosper?" Prosperity is short lived when it leads away from the Lord, and is the innate tendency of riches. Probably the most deadly enemy of the church and to individual spiritual growth is wealth. When Jeshurun waxed fat, he kicked. He forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation. No wonder Christ said, "No man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven who is laden with his own goods." The Holy Spirit said through Paul,—"The love of money is the root of all evil." "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high minded, . . . that they be diligent in good works, ready to distribute." The cause for the corruption of the Laodicean church was that, She was rich.

I do not hesitate to say the greatest enemy the church has is her wealth, which also might be her greatest blessing. It is generally true, that which has the greatest possibility for good has also the greatest possibility for evil; that which may bring the greatest joy may also plunge into the deepest sorrow; a bright light when extinguished makes the darkness more intense. Witness the history of the church when her wealth and power brought her a hideous demon, yet she dressed herself in robes and proclaimed her faith. Poverty has no power, but when the church was poorest she was purest and the most generous. The Protestant church today is in greater danger from fine edifices and highly paid ministers than she ever was from poor equipment and uneducated ministers. She no longer can say, "Silver and gold I none," but with her wealth she is failing to help the lame men in the world. With the many calls for giving now being proclaimed all over this land, the need of many who are facing hunger and cold, the land of surplus food and fuel, a land where our prayers give reverent recognition to the word of God who takes office, where the legislative halls are open to prayer, a nation rich in the traditions of Christianity.

amping upon our money, "In God we trust," surely ld not be hard to make an appeal and find a re-to generous giving.

There are many arguments used in this context—(1) is a Christian grace as much as faith, testimony, dige, diligence, or love. No use to proclaim your fundamental as that may be, unless you give proof sincerity of your love in the grace of giving of that has come to you. (2) The depression is no excuse, urging the church at Corinth to give, the citation e to other churches who have given out of deep y and great affliction, very liberally, bore than they ble, insisting that it be received. But they first themselves to the Lord, and then giving money could efully done, even to the point of self-denial. ("If an will come after me let him deny himself—") f our churches need to know how others are giv-well as certain individuals need to know how are giving, that there may be an equality, a prop-ribution of wealth, that poverty may be relieved at wealth may be saved from corruption, that the may be refreshed in body and in faith because of us Christian giving by those who have an abun-For we are members one of another and a proper of money one to another is necessary to keep an rium of spirit. This is absolutely essential if the is to be the true body of Jesus Christ and is to s gospel to the world.

It is a basic principle of life—sowing and reaping.
there is no sowing, there is no reaping." Sow bounreap bountifully. "He that giveth to the poor lend-the Lord; a good investment. Hoarding wealth cor-any life spiritually; distributing blesses. No soul er condemned for storing his surplus in the barns ows and orphans.

Pledges and promises and kind words is not giving.
at you perform the doing of it, and have it ready come." Missionaries cannot be paid, obligations ood and raiment provided, gas and light and rent p with kind words and well wishes. How much ou given and how much more will you give? Giva grace, "See that ye abound in this grace also."

It will be faithfully administered. "Titus is coming he has proved diligent in many things." The ase of faithful and economical administration can be the members of our church. You need not hesi-give fearing it will be wasted.

The greatest appeal to giving is "The Unspeakable "Ye know the grace of our Lord, that though he ch, yet he became poor for our sakes." No sense of in this great giving, we had wasted our wealth, tered our heritage, unworthy of even a pittance to s from starving. He did not arrange for a bread r a soup kitchen somewhere, that he, with his im-wealth, might feed us and continually remind us failure, and how we were dependent on him. O took our place; he became poor. Not only did he enerously but he gave all; he wore our rags; felt ng of our hungry; he felt the chill of the bleak of the world; he felt the lash of the tyranny of and power; he was a despised outcast, bearing the of a pampered aristocracy, even in the name of God ith and righteousness; he bore it all for me, for Though rich he became poor gracefully and purlly. It is not so unusual for rich men to become out it is unusual to become poor graciously, to go he highest to the lowest with no word of complaint.
nt from the brightness of the Father's glory to the darkness of sin; from the angelic chorus to the unbearable discord of demons; from luxurious wealth to grinding poverty. We could carry the contrasts indefinitely, but it should be enough to know that he stooped so low to pick us up. He gave the wealth of his estate to redeem us from the degradation of our poverty stricken condition and make us rich. In the wealth of his blessing he calls us to give unto others. "If a brother hath need—and ye say, Be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give him not those things which are needful to the body . . .

how dwelleth the love of God in him?" An increase of wealth and an increase of destitution cannot go hand in hand in a land where Christ is loved and worshipped. Our selfish fortunes shall destroy our nation unless the fountains of generosity are freshened by the love of Christ flowing from one heart to another, the sincerity of which is proved by our helpfulness one to the other.

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

V. PROPHETIC LANGUAGE

Language is the expression of ideas. Ideas are the reproduction and correlation of memories. Memory is possible because of the association of concepts in the brain, which with its billions of cells has everything classified and pigeonholed in order, and with every center in telegraphic connection with every other.

This law of association makes possible our varied forms of expression and different figures of speech. They are not only possible, but necessary. Even a child learns to talk by associating each new thing with something already known as when he calls a life preserver a wheel or a turtle a big bug.

As prophecy usually seeks to conceal from some what it reveals to others, and to excite continued interest until its fulfillment, it lays hold upon all the different forms of expressing truth. Some of these we will call to mind as an aid to understanding the prophetic word.

1. Simile and parable. One of the most common means of expression is to compare something with something else. In its simplest form this is called a simile. For example, in Mal. 4:1 we read, "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly shall be stubble." A careless interpretation might cause one to teach that the wicked will be literally burned when the Lord comes, But when we turn to Matt.
3:12 we find that John the Baptist announced that the Messiah would "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire,"—something that Jesus did not do literally, but which he did do according to the simile in Jer. 23:29, "Is not my word like a fire, saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?"

The parables are similes extended into stories. They may be true stories, but back of theme there is always a spiritual application. Jesus himself interprets the two parables of the sower in order to give us the key to the interpretation of all parables. Most of the parables of Jesus were prophetic and deal with the coming of the kingdom of heaven.

2. Metaphor and allegory. From comparing one thing with another it is but a step to substituting one for the other. The little boy does not say "I am like a bear," but,
"I am a bear." That is a metaphor. In the same way

Jesus said, "I am the light," "I am the door," "Take, eat, this is my body," but he explained the last saying, "The flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life" (John 6:63).

An allegory is a metaphor extended into a story. It may be an historical event, as is the case of the two wives of Abraham who represented the old covenant and the new covenant (Gal. 4:22-31). The statement of Paul in I Cor. 10:11 that "all these things happened unto them (the O. T. characters) for examples" seem to indicate that we may draw similar lessons from other passages, if we are careful to do so in harmony with all the other Scriptures.

3. Sinecdoche and hyperbole. These are forms designed to give emphasis through a change in proportions. The former substitutes a part for the whole or the whole for a part, while the latter purposely exaggerates to call attention to the fact stated. For example, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks" (Isa. 2:4) uses these two weapons of war to represent all weapons.

In Isa. 24:1 we read "The Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste and turneth it upside down." Seven Day Adventists, with their usual disregard of sound interpretation, use this as a proof text to show that the world will be a desert-waste during the millennium, but a study of the context reveals that the text is only a strong statement of the desolation of Palestine in the last days. Verses 13 to 15 show that a faithful remnant will be preserved to reign in the kingdom age.

4. A symbol and type. A symbol is something chosen to teach some truth which it represents. Thus the bread and cup are symbols of the body and blood of Christ, the body being broken and the blood poured out. "Therefore as oft as ye do eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show forth the Lord's death until he come" (1 Cor. 11:26). The symbol thus becomes a prophecy of its fulfillment.

A type is a person or object or event with a symbolic significance that has reference to the future rather than the present. The types all refer in some way to the person or work of Christ. Thus Abraham, Joseph, Moses, David and Solomon are all in some way types of Christ. So also the ordinances of the O. T. are said to be "shadows of good things to come, but the body is of Christ" (Col. 2:15-17).

5. Dreams and visions. Some of the most important prophetic revelations have been given through visions and dreams. Daniel 2 gives the great dream of Nebuchadnezzar outlining the Gentile age, while Dan. 7-11 give visions of Daniel which cover the same ground more in detail.

6. Prophetic actions and scenes. It was common for the prophets to do something to illustrate their prophetic messages, as when Jeremiah buried his girdle by the river Euphrates (Jer. 13) or Ezekiel besieged a city represented by a frying pan (Ezek. 4). They always explain the meaning of such actions.

7. Mysteries. The mysteries are the hardest to interpret because they are the least explained. They have their beginnings in enigmatical expressions such as "where the slain body is there will the eagles be gathered together" (Matt. 24:28), and they have their climax in the wonderful book of Revelation. Here several of the symbols are interpreted (ch. 1:20; 17-7) as a clue to the manner in which we should understand the rest. Some things in the book are plain statements which can be taken literally, and the mysteries will be unfolded as the time for their fulfillment approaches. Our attitude should be that of faithful watching, prayerful study and eager longing for the coming of the Lord.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

SENATOR SAYS LEAGUE IS IN RED

In an I-told-you-so spirit, United States Senator Hiram Johnson of California, declares that the League of Nations is in the hands of the Japanese, a member in disobedience to the League, has taken up arms against China. Senator Johnson thinks because of that cause the agreements of the League are not kept by every nation it is a failure. By the same logic the Senate, every lawmaking body in the world, all governments, all courts of justice, every business establishment, in fact everything on earth is in "red." The Senator's view with the Senator is that he is too emotional to reason well. He is a loud talker, but he is not convincing. The League is a result of the Japanese-Chinese war and will no doubt be able to exert an influence that will stop the trouble. But if it cannot the influence established it are miles ahead of Senator Johnson who did not try to make matters better.—The Christian-Evangelist.

SOVIET RUSSIA DECREES "SUNDAYS" AGAIN

On November 23 the Soviet issued a decree abandoning the broken five-day week which had been established when the Russian Revolution broke out. It abolished the customary "Sunday" day of rest, in line with the anti-church policies of Communism. Industrial and commercial life throughout Russia went on as before with a break only on the national holidays established after the revolution.

The decree establishes five monthly "Sundays" and reduction of the working day by half an hour. In the Soviet system every month is divided into six weeks of five days each. The national holidays—five in all—increase the number of working days in some months. The names of the days remain unchanged, but Monday and Sunday were dropped in the five-day week.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

WOMEN DEMAND MOVIE INVESTIGATION

For some years the Hays organization has succeeded in making its employee, Mr. Carl E. Milliken, as an American representative upon the motion picture institute of the League of Nations. This has effectually blocked any serious investigation by the committee of the business of the American producers of motion picture film. But Mr. Milliken and the Hays organization have slipped a cog in their smooth-running machine. The International Council of Women held a motion picture conference at Rome under the league's auspices in October. Among the recommendations adopted are the following:

The conference insists that an inquiry should be instituted into the mode of film distribution and on the steps which should be taken to overcome the difficulties of "blind-booking" and "double-booking."

Seeing that the majority of countries have found it necessary to establish a censorship of two degrees, it would be desirable that all countries adopting this, or that an effective government censorship be applied during the process of film production.

The conference urges . . . that official supervision should be effectively exercised over obscene films and that penalties should be provided after the proper court action against persons taking part in their production, distribution, and exportation.

Also that an international committee examine the system of censorship actually in force in the different countries and draw up a code which could be adopted by the majority of countries and so permit of arriving at a convention on censorship which would facilitate the exchange of films in their original form between the different countries.

On the other hand it is desirable that the artistic character of the films be respected and that no unnecessary cutting be made to the prejudice of the author's idea.

Doubtless the Hays organization, through Mrs. Winter, is doing its utmost to squelch these recommendations in America, but they will be discussed and acted upon abroad and by the American groups are not under the domination of the Hays office. Europe and Asia could not do better foreign missionary work than to help America free herself from the pollution which begins in Hollywood and permeates to the farthest corner of the globe.—The Christian Century.

"Where Is He That Is Born King of the Jews?"

Faith makes real the wonderful works of God in the hearts and makes it possible for us to trust those who have proven trustworthy. Faith is one of Paul's great triumvirate of things abide—faith, hope and love. Faith is indispensable. Therefore if we are truly seeking the Lord at this Christmas season, and would see him in all his beauty, we must seek him in faith, and yet more faith. "Lord, increase our faith."

Hope Essential

Hope is also essential, if we are to find Christ. It is second to the abiding qualities named by Paul. Hope involves desire and expectation of achieving it. Hope keeps the soul encouraged in the midst of darkness and uncertainty. Hope means persistence with expectancy. That was the spirit that possessed the men. Faith enabled them to envision the new-born King, but kept them on their way until they had found him. And what was it? More than a thousand miles over wild country, they led, crossing deserts, fording streams, climbing mountains, fighting robbers. What persistency and determination they must have had! What hope! Nor did they become discouraged when they reached Judea and found the people indifferent and careless of their great quest. Hope, to use Tryon Edwards' figure, like a taper's light, adorned and cheered their way, and doubt's darker grew the night of discouragement, it emitted a brighter ray. It is always so—he who would find the King must have hope. Hope leads to the "Land of Beginning Again." When it presses heavily upon the heart, men yearn for a chance to begin again. Thus the poet writes, almost despairingly:

When there were some wonderful place
In the Land of Beginning Again,
All our mistakes and all our heartaches
All of our poor selfish grief
Were dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door, and never
To be on again."

Could he have been so despairing? Is it possible to begin again? Hope says it is. If the poet had possessed the quality of hope he would not have despaired. David did not, but rather trusted himself for his despondency, saying:

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?
And why art thou disquieted within me?
Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him
For the help of his countenance."

Psalm 42:5, 11.

And Finally Love

Finally, but in no wise least in importance, love is necessary to cover the reality of Christ at this Christmas season. In Paul's words, "THREE, love completes and crowns the trinity. "The greatest of these is love," said he. If hope kept the wise men on their way, love caused them to bow in adoration and reverence. Love led them to worship the Lord Jesus, giving unto him costly gifts and pledging him their allegiance. Their allegiance was demonstrated by their willingness to endanger the wrath of Herod by turning home secretly another way, in order that they might save the Christ-child.

So it is, that love means service and sacrifice. They had to go, when they set out to find Christ, and when they found him, they gave to him their all—that was sacrifice. And he who would follow the Lord, must be prepared to sacrifice all his earthly store, to deny even friends, if necessary, and then to consecrate life to him in service, for Christ's sake. And when he has done that, love will cause him to say, I am an unworthy servant, I have done only that which was my duty to do. The sense of gratitude is so keen in the heart of the loving disciple that nothing he can do, nor all that he can possibly do, can begin to pay the debt due to his Lord and Savior. Love is willing to give everything to be anything or nothing, if only his Lord's will may be done out in his life and the glory of God may be enlarged.

"O Love, that wilt not let me go,
I give thee back the life I owe."

Love is just satisfied to stop there and to leave all with him, to love him and whom we serve. Therefore we thus seek Christ at this Christmastide and be able to see him in all the days of our lives.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

Luke 2:36-38. Anna loved God and served him constantly, and she was privileged to see her Lord. To them that loved his appearing his first advent was made manifest, and if we love and serve him we may rest assured that, in the words of Job, "in my flesh shall I see God." She found in him redemption, and she hastened to make him known to others who were seeking redemption. Could there be any better way of giving thanks unto the Lord?

TUESDAY

Luke 2:39-52. How well God chooses men for his work: to guard over the childhood of his Son he chose a man and wife who scrupulously performed all things according to the law of the Lord. With such parents today there would be more children of whom it might be said, they "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Perhaps Jesus had a peculiar understanding of his divine mission for the age of twelve, yet it is about that age that properly taught children seem to feel their responsibility to God and come into the church, yielding their lives to the service of their Father's business. God help us to be faithful parents, rightly teaching and leading our children in the way of the Lord.

WEDNESDAY

Luke 3:1-6. The human heart looks forward with hope to the day when we shall see the salvation of God, and the difficulties and heartaches of life shall be removed. If it were not for the blessed promise of God that these things should some day come to pass we should scarcely have the courage to continue, at times; but in his strength we may go forward, carrying this blessed hope to others, lovingly admonishing them to prepare for that day when they shall meet their Lord.

THURSDAY

Luke 3:7-14. We Brethren people are apt to be as proud of our doctrinal heritage as were the Jews. John here warned the people that such things mean little to God; the important thing is, what manner of lives are we living? Especially in these days we may well give earnest consideration to the practical message John gave the people—giving to those in need even though our own resources be but slender, and honesty in business. If the soldiers heeded John's message they were ruined as soldiers: imagine a soldier who was to do violence to no man! Perhaps if we took Jesus' teaching seriously today it would ruin OUR business; but if so, should we be in such a business? Let us carefully consider these most practical questions.

FRIDAY

Luke 3:15-18. How John might have flourished, and what a following he might have had for a time, if he had been willing to assume the role of the Messiah! The people were expecting the Messiah, and the dramatic figure of John fitted in very well with their romantic conceptions. Yet John was above any such petty consideration, and his one thought was that of preparing the hearts of men for the ministry of Jesus. He must increase but I must decrease! God purge our hearts of selfish ambitions and give us an ideal of service like John's.

SATURDAY

Luke 3:19-20. Herod is a type of the world, rejecting and resenting the gospel message; yet we are urged to save all that we can, plucking them out of the world as from a blazing fire that would destroy them. God give us grace, and the courage of a John the Baptist, that we may be true to our trust!

SUNDAY

Luke 3:21-22. It will be well worth reading this same story in the other gospels. It has often been pointed out that in these passages we have one instance where God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit were all in physical evidence at the same time and place. The mysteries of a triune God are past finding out, but we may love him who first loved us!

Teachers of Boys

By John S. Flory

First Requisite

One of the most responsible vocations to which anyone can be called is that of the teacher. If special preparation and skill are required to build a house or make a piece of furniture, certainly no less skill and careful preparation are required of the workman who would train and develop an immortal soul. From the nature of the case, the teacher's work is one of the most far-reaching and important to which a life can be devoted.

The prime requisite of the teacher, therefore, is character. The teacher of boys must be a true Christian. In most cases a man will succeed better than a woman with boys. In fact, he ought to be a model for the boys to imitate in life, character, and conduct, as well as in action. A manly, self-respecting, frank behavior toward the boys will win their interest and confidence and put the manly Christian teacher in position to exert a powerful influence in their development. He should be sincere and straightforward with regard to everything. A disposition to lightness of conduct, or a show of insincerity in word or act, will soon be detected by the boys and will be fatal to the teacher's influence in their lives.

Knowledge of Boy Nature

The teacher of boys must understand boy nature. He must recognize characteristics of the different periods of boy life and distinguish the prevailing trend of each. He needs to see things from a boy's standpoint, to be able to enter into his likes and fancies, and to understand the boy's standards and ideals.

Physical Nature

During the early period of a boy's life, when he is growing rapidly, both physically and mentally, the teacher will take the place of parent to the boy. He will teach his class with authority, and if he commands respect as he should, the boys will accept the teaching with unquestioned confidence.

Just before adolescence the physical growth is slow, and yet the quantity of food devoured by the boy is as great in proportion as formerly. The food does not now go primarily to the building of bone and muscle, however, but manifests itself in vigorous, riotous activity. In fact, the little system now becomes a real dynamo of energy, and if the teacher would win the boy and hold his respect, he will become a companion to him and enter sympathetically into his sports.

During the adolescent period the boy becomes unsteady, is easily discouraged, often lacks confidence in himself, and is given to morbid brooding. What he needs above all things now is a true and sympathetic friend. This his Sunday school teacher should become to him. The boy needs companionship, encouragement, and guidance, which his tactful teacher can give.

Obedience

Even more important it may be for the teacher to understand the higher nature of the boy. Restless and irregular as the actions of a boy may seem, he is fundamentally law-abiding and obedient. The boy is a stickler for what is literal and concrete. He remembers with wonderful accuracy and exactness the instruction that has been given, and with great detail as to how the instruction was carried out.

He is naturally conservative. He does not want to change. He wants to perform the same duty in the same way that it was performed before. He wants to play the game according to the rules. He demands of his associates that they play fair and observe all the regulations. He is even perfectly free in calling his teacher to account wherein he seems to transgress any rule of conduct. The boy is as exacting in the demands he makes upon himself as upon others. Therefore, the wise teacher will use this sense of honor, that every normal boy possesses, to appeal constantly to high standards of conduct and action.

Social Nature

The wise teacher will also understand the social nature of the boy. He will note the growth from the selfishness of childhood into the positive clannishness of the adolescent boy. In the former stage his problem was to cultivate the altruistic spirit and a disposition of interest and cooperation with others. In the latter stage his special interest is directed to controlling and guiding the social instinct, which must be dealt with not in the individual, but in the aggregate.

The disposition of boys to group together and form organizations, oftentimes secret and enshrouded in mystic rites and ceremonies, is to be observed and dealt with in a way that will win them rather than alienate them from their teacher. If the teacher can, during this stage, be literally one of them, enjoying their confidence and admiration, he may direct these youthful enterprises to the great good and everlasting benefit of the boys. In doing this, his best judgment and finest diplomacy may be put to the test, but he needs to succeed at all hazards; and if he is a successful leader and teacher of boys, he will win them and maintain his power of control in their lives.

The Heroic

In doing this he will recognize their appreciation of the heroic. They do not think of it as such, but this is the element that makes its appeal. If he can be a little more heroic than even their imaginations had fancied, he may make himself the ideal of their hearts. If he can be a little more self-sacrificing than they had pictured as the ideal of their ambitions, he may win them with everlasting bonds. If he can show himself a little wiser than they in turning events to worthy and noble ends, it will help them to enshrine him as their ideal.

Teaching Ability

The teacher of boys needs to be a teacher. He must have the ability to impart information. He must also know what he teaches. This means that he must know his Bible. He must know it not only on an academic point of view, but it is important that he should have religious experience. There will be problems and questions coming into the lives of the boys which he will need to help them. If he is to succeed in leading them, he must be himself able to assist them in their need.

Adapting the Lesson

He will be able to select his material and arrange it with reference to his particular class. Where the uniform lessons are the assignments will sometimes be of a nature as not to be readily understood by the younger scholars. For instance, some great doctrinal principle is involved, he must be able to adapt his teaching material to their particular needs. Any lesson, I believe, can be taught to any class in Sunday school by proper adaptation. The truth of the lesson can be taught in advanced grades, of course, than to more primary grades; and if the teacher carefully collect and correlate his material, putting it into concrete story form, he can go a long way toward enlisting the interest of the boys in the lesson, and making it distinctive in their lives. The wise teacher of boys will, therefore, select and adapt his material, teaching them what they can understand and should know, and will not try to teach what is beyond their comprehension.

Use of Biography

Biographical studies are particularly important to boys. One of the things of special importance for the teacher at this point is that he makes the teaching of the Bible center as largely as possible about the lives and experiences of great men and women. The great Bible characters are notably in teaching material of this kind, and this is a good place for the boys to become acquainted with the heroic men and women of the Church. The teacher ought to be able to relate these stories in simple, striking and interesting form, so that the boys can catch the great principles in the lives of these Christian fathers. They will get great delight in such study, and it will give them material and ideals to build up their own lives.

The Reading Habit

It is during the period just preceding adolescence, when the energies of the boy's life go out in activity rather than in building, that the mind also becomes usually alert and active. It is under conditions that the reading habit usually is formed. Almost every normal boy at this time has a tendency at least to read. Things may divert the main interest to some other line, but in a great many instances boys at this time take to reading and cultivate a habit which grows in strength with the years. The teacher, of course, observe this and direct it. If the habit is once cultivated, the boy will read anything, and he is at this time not particularly particular about what he reads. He does like material to possess snap and action, and he is helped to the right kind of reading if he is not naturally prone to read that which is unworthy.

Here is a fine opportunity for the teacher to be of great assistance to the boy. (Continued on page 16)

And the time is coming when every knee will bow, and every human "confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, glory of God the Father." Ph. 2:11. Only overcomers who have suffered in to him will reign with him on his throne. Re. 3:21. Jesus came to his triumph from Bethany, the home of who lovingly anointed him as "Lord." Rev. 1:11. The following words are found in my Bible, "The King ... is in the midst of thee." Zep. 3:15; and I like to sing the coronation hymn this way:

And now with yonder sacred throng at his feet do fall; joining the everlasting song, crown him Lord of all." However, I love Frances Ridley Havergal's lines: "thy sovereignty rejoicing, we thy chosen, bow and praise, we know that kind and loving, just and true are all thy ways. In the eye of sovereign mercy and the love of sovereign might, our great and strong salvation, in thy sovereign grace unite."

The biographer of this sacred singer tells us that on her dying bed, Miss Havergal lay up with a radiant face and shouted, "King! my king! my king!" "King of all and Lord of lords." This is his title when he comes as "Son of David," Mt. 21:9; to "reign where'er the sun doth his seven journeys run."

THE UNFINISHED TASK

By Frank D. Slutz

Instead of attempting an inadequate review in this limited space, we are giving you the following very suggestive article by Dr. Slutz, taken from The Churchman Journal.—Editor.)

We have the habit of associating geography and missions. "All the world" means most of us, "all the geographical divisions of the world." Our missionary effort has always been horizontal; we have tried to reach East, West, North, and South in the same two dimensions. This has been a commendable and a very worthy enterprise. The lesson is the first chapter in the history of this geographical spread of Christianity. Not all the world is geographical, however. If any of us have excused ourselves from the geographical extension of the gospel we might find our missionary work in some other kind of enlargement of opportunity of the good news of God. There is yet need for the geographical spread of missions. There are tribes and places where the gospel has not been heard; many where it has been only mentioned. No argument is being presented here for the abandonment of that kind of missionary endeavor which Paul and his assistants inaugurated. The Christian message needs to be translated into languages that have never yet uttered it, and by-places all around the earth wait to be visited by the ambassadors of Christ. However it may be profitable to investigate some areas not geographical which need to have the gospel spread through them.

The area of education is one of these. Our schools, especially our tax supported schools, elementary, secondary and of college grade, do not think themselves free under our laws to teach religion. We are instructing our youth about the materials of the universe but we are not training them in the spiritual use of these dangerous materials. It is very necessary that week-day schools of religion and our church colleges be helped to carry the gospel into the areas neglected by our education.

How little religion there is in business! Multitudes of men and women say very frankly that religion and business do not mix; that one has to forget on Monday in his office what he talked about Sunday at the church. "Business has no place for impractical theories of brotherhood." "Business is business." "Close your eyes and mark your tax return." These are among the advices one hears "on the Rialto." Well, something dreadfully undesirable is the matter with business; maybe it is a lack of the vitamin of religion. Why not carry the gospel into this area, experimentally?

Then there is the field of international relations. Up to now diplomacy has, in most instances, been a clever use of language to conceal the truth. Nations believe that everything that will aid the winning of a war is fair. If treaties are an obstacle to the right of a nation to do as it pleases, let the treaties be torn up. If public covenants need amending, let secret agreements be given precedence over them. It is a nasty, un-Christian mess, the whole of it. The gospel has never yet had its chance at the council tables of nations. We must carry it there!

Selected Committee Helps

KNOW YOUR WORK IN THE MISSIONARY COMMITTEE

Seven Essentials for Good Work

1. The committee should include persons who are vitally interested in home and foreign missions.
2. Know your own denominational field. Know your missionaries personally by corresponding with them. Know their needs and do what you can toward supplying these.
3. Read to your society letters directly from the mission field. Obtain and exhibit pictures of your missionaries.
4. Support (or partially support) a missionary on the field, provided that is in line with your church and denominational policy. Write personal letters to those whose work is so sponsored. Remember them at Christmas and on their birthdays with personal gifts. Let them know that you are remembering them daily in private devotions and in the society's prayer meetings.
5. Conduct a mission-study class, reading circle, or school of missions. Write to the International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, for a free list of recommended study books. Study at least one text book on home missions and one on foreign missions each year.
6. Present at least one missionary pageant in the church. Write to the International Society for leaflet and prices of missionary plays. Stereopticon slides of various mission fields may be obtained from denominational headquarters.
7. The committee should prepare a prayer list of missionaries. Give each Endeavorer the name of at least one for whom to pray. Let the member know as much as possible about the work, difficulties, and accomplishments of this person.—Mamie E. West Salem, Illinois.

Clodfelter, in C. E. World.

KEEPING THE PLEDGE ALIVE

Some societies have been very successful in giving permanent value to the spirit of the Christian Endeavor pledge. These are typical methods by which the pledge is made a living force in the life of the society.

1. Display the pledge; a wall-copy of the form of pledge your society uses should be prominently displayed in the room used for your meetings.
2. Memorize the pledge. It would be a fine thing to turn the printed pledge to the wall some Sunday and let all repeat it from memory. This will be less difficult for many than you might think.
3. Speak of the pledge in prayer meetings. Use the various points of the pledge in connection with the discussion of topics dealing with Christian life.
4. Print the pledge on your topic-cards. This will permit the members to have a copy in the home, perhaps used as a bookmark in one's personal Bible or New Testament.
5. Treat no part of the pledge with levity.
6. Allow no part of the pledge to become obsolete.
7. Accept the pledge for what it is, a standard for membership, based on high ideals and supported by our united faith in Jesus Christ as the source of our strength.
8. Accept the opening phrase of the pledge ("Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do") as the central principle of our personal Christian conduct.—C. E. World.

Some Past Christmases

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

In speaking of Christmases that are past, let us give all honor to the first one, and to him of whom it was said "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."

As we understand our subject we are to speak especially of Christmases since 1917. In studying them they naturally divide themselves into groups. One American Christmas, that of 1917 itself; one Brazzaville Christmas, that of 1918; two Carnot Christmases, those of 1919 and 1920; two Bassai Christmases, 1921 and 1923. We must delay speaking of the Bangui Christmases of 1922 until after we have described the Bassai Christmas of 1923. Then came two Yaloke Christmases, 1924 and 1925; and then the only French Christmas, 1926. Then again two Yaloke Christmases, 1928 and 1929, and last, but not least we shall speak of two Bellevue Christmases, 1927 and 1930.

As you follow the thread of this outline, doubtless you think "Why thus divide it? Why thus group it?" I note in the subject assigned to me the word "reminiscences." One can only reminisce about that which one has experienced. At all these Christmases with one exception, (that of 1921 at Bassai) I was myself present. Of them therefore, and of them only do I have the right to speak.

And now, lest we should reminisce too long, let us plunge at once into the first point that we wish to consider—an American Christmas. The Christmas of 1917 was spent by the one who is reminiscing at New Cumberland, Pennsylvania, with that dear husband who has now long been in glory, and with the little daughter, who was then but two years of age. We quote a few words from the book "Undaunted Hope." "James Gribble left New Cumberland on December 18th for Philadelphia and New York. The intervening days were busy ones for himself and his wife. After two busy days in New York with the baggage, the balance of their business was left in the hands of a forwarding agent, for they had received secret information that their boat was to touch at New Orleans, at which place all passengers must embark. He reached New Cumberland again for the last time December 21st. The boat had left New York, and now (it was just at Christmas time) the last farewells were said. For the last time loved ones so dear were tenderly embraced, farewells were said to dear ones never again to be met in life. It was a soldier going forth to a soldier's life in dark Africa, and a soldier's death upon the battle-field. But what mattered it to James Gribble? He was not thinking of himself, but of One who died for him, of One whose abounding grace had thus far sustained him, and who, he was persuaded, would sustain him to the end. He was thinking of the restless ones in fields afar who knew not Christ. Could he have left a message to his friends and acquaintances in a few brief words on that last Christmas Day, that last day of days in his own home, it would have been:

"The restless millions wait
The Light whose dawning Maketh all things new.
Christ also waits
But men are slow and late;
Have we done what we could?
Have I, have you?"

Six years of service in Africa were behind him, (on this Christmas day of 1917); something less than six years were ahead of him. He went forth again rejoicing in God's wondrous provision, his loving-kindness, and above all his abounding grace, doubting nothing, fearing nothing."

The Christmas at Brazzaville, 1918, was a vastly different one. Again we quote from "Undaunted Hope." "The epidemic of Spanish Influenza, which had been brought from Europe, spread rapidly (at Christmas time) along the coast of Africa and the shores of the Congo and Oubangui Rivers. Brazzaville was terribly stricken. The little Oubangui-Chari Mission party, now for some months ensconced in a partly fallen house beyond the outskirts of Brazzaville were wonderfully protected (During the worst of the epidemic). Dr. Gribble and Miss Myers had thrown themselves into the care of the sick and dying. Little Marguerite had been cared for by her father and by Uncle William (Mr. Haas) who was throughout this long period likewise waiting permission to enter his desired field in the eastern part of Oubangui-Chari. Mr. Gribble, Mr. Haas and Marguerite had escaped the infection, though both Dr. Gribble and Miss Myers had contracted it, the former having an extremely severe attack from which she did not fully recover until January of the following year. Both had been ill on the same day, Thanksgiving Day, and deep were the waters through which the little party had passed (and were still passing at Christmas time). Neither of the ladies were again permitted to assist in caring for the epidemic, as long before recovery was complete in the little Mission Camp, the epidemic in Brazzaville was overpast; many including the Mayor of the city, having succumbed to its dread ravages. Christmas letters for this year are strangely lacking. No one had time or strength to write.

Yet, (at this Christmas time) the Lord was with them in all faithfulness. He had in his faithfulness watched over them during the year, when crushed and suffering, the myrrh and aloes of their experience had been brought to him, and in spite of their sufferings they thanked him for bringing them "to the other side." (And so between these two Christmases) God had brought them to the other side of the vast ocean, to the other side of the world war, to the other side of the devastating pestilence, to the other side of misunderstanding and criticism, to the other side of danger and culty. (And now at Christmas time) continued to bring the myrrh of their cession and the aloes of their continued to him, believing that he would yet them "to the other side" in Oubangui-

And now we must relate the story of Carnot Christmases, 1919-1920. Conceal their experiences this time we read in "Undaunted Hope." "And now a new shadow was upon them, the shadow of a financial crisis (brought about by inability to pay checks at Carnot.)

And now throughout this long year of God's unchanging faithfulness never failed. Houses were supplied rent free. Food was often and freely sent them in a kindly neighborly way from Mr. Pinnelli's garden. ... Though tested from day to day, never was there a time without a ray of light, sometimes simple, but always sufficient. Thus under the shadow of this new crisis they found their changeless God their refuge. ... Surrounded by a friendly people with God caring for them, though the shadows of illness came and went, hovering over one and then another, yet they continually rejoiced in the unchanging faithfulness of God. He had brought them through the last Christmas) through a year of suffering, a year of sorrow, a year of bereavement (Mrs. Rollier having died), yet it had been to them a year of advance, a year of victory, a year of joyous experience in God's unchanging faithfulness. They were about to enter, though happily they knew not, on the darkest and most discouraging year of the Mission's history. A year of deepening shadows hung like heavy clouds above them and obscured their vision, but did not quench their faith; a year which was to end without deliverance. ... It passed as with the twilight before the dawn (Christmas of 1919, closing) a year of changing but ever deepening shadows, as dense darkness settled down about them yet they enjoyed the Light of Life.

And yet the dark year of 1920 closed with hope. (Christmas of 1920) was sorrowful with illness, with sorrow, with bereavement with separation, with losses, with misfortune, with hindrance, with poverty, with pain, with struggle on the human side. It was a Christmas of God's sustaining power, of his comfort, of his nearness, of his consolation, of the infinite gain of his cross, of clearer understanding of himself, of revelation of his own conquest, of perception of his wondrous riches, of revelation as to the ministry of suffering, of learning to rest in him, to wait patiently for him, to hope continually in him."

And now we come to Christmas 1921 at Bassai. One missionary and that missionary not myself, but my husband. It is only Christmas of which I speak of the roundings in which I was not included. Nearing Christmas James Gribble wrote: "Yet things move slowly. The ladies still live in the house I built for the men. For ever Jobson will have the boys' house, which is small and good. The boys must build the kitchen of the future ladies' house. I am still in my tent." Concerning isolation and hope deferred he wrote at this Christmas time—"I will soon begin to won-the earth or on Mars, or if the Lord

e and taken his own and left me Karre and the Baya. The other ceived a letter from Bangui written ed in October. Well, if I hear noth-the outside world, and if the miss are delayed, or if this party like rs fail to arrive, I will by the grace continue to open up this station and shape to accommodate missionaries.
God answers prayer. It is his will his land be evangelized, and the called out from these tribes. He leave me alone!" On December 28th e, "Tomorrow afternoon, the Lord
I expect to start for Bozoum to
r. Jobson, Miss Hillegas and Miss
The party arrived at the Mission December 31st, 1921. (At this as time) James Gribble had been ore than six months. Almost an-ear was to elapse before his wife return. Yet God had given him a er in Mr. Jobson, for whom he was thankful, and Miss Myers rejoiced ranting of her heart's desire, in the forth of Miss Hillegas, to be not co-worker, but to fulfill her heart's or companionship.

* * * * *
we must pass by for a moment the as of 1922, in order that we may f the second Christmas at Bassai, 1923. Two years have passed. One loneliness waited at Christmas 1921 arrival of his coworkers, is now in ut the Station presents a degree of ip in marked contrast to that of the ss of its beginnings, two years before. Many of you who are here today shared in that Christmas at Bassai. As I look back I see with my mind's eye a large party in the little mud house, which no longer exists. In this house dwelt Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway, Miss Bickel, Miss Deeter and Dr. Gribble. There were only three rooms to accommodate five people. Down on the hillside in the house now used as the Bassai School, Mr. Sheldon dwelt alone, taking his meals with the larger party in the mud house already referred to. In a small house on the hilltop, which also no longer exists, lived Mr. and Mrs. Jobson. Yaloke Station was not yet opened, but the site had been definitely decided upon, Mr. Hathaway having returned some three weeks previous to Christmas to Bassai Station, after his trip to Yaloke's village.

That afternoon a White Gift service was held, the native offering being sent to Miss Myers to aid her in returning to the field.
After the service all the missionaries on the Station gathered in the larger of the two mud houses for dinner. The "piece de resistance" was a portion of a huge capitaine, which had been brought to us from Ouahm River, seemingly by the hand of man, but in reality by the hand of God, especially for our Christmas dinner. You who were there will remember how we exchanged our little gifts, and how we told our little personal reminiscences. It was the first Christmas that Mr. Hathaway's party had spent upon the field, the second for Mr. and Mrs. Job-son, who had arrived, you will remember, something less than two years before as Mr. Jobson and Miss Hillegas.

and fellow-worker in the Master's Vineyard.
With it came the request to assist in the funeral on Saturday and I was glad that my work at the office was in such shape as to make it possible for me to go. Accompanied by my faithful companion and traveler, Mrs.
Bame, in a few minutes more than four hours, we had arrived.

Sad and Strange

Scarce had we arrived when we learned that Dr. Shively was also in the city and Prof. McClain was expected—all three for funerals. Three splendid men of our acquaintance were lying dead and we had all been called to try to comfort the bereaved —Dr. Shively to conduct the funeral of our mutual friend and brother, Edward P. Musselman, architect of wide reputation, and of the Dayton church buildings; Prof. Mc-Clain to assist Dr. Shively in the funeral of his very close friend, John King; and myself, with Pastor Barnard for that of Brother I. Oscar Stutz, who was for many years a trustee of the Dayton church, and one of the building committee.

Musselman and I planned the Dayton church and he put it on paper and then, with the aid of men of faith and courage, like Stutz and the others, we put it on the corner which, for many years now, it has made prominent. I have not often returned to former pastorates to preach funerals but this call was of such intimate connections with former associations that I went, and it was most striking that I was the living one of these men who remained, when both of the others had bade me good-bye several years ago, with the feeling, perhaps, that they would never see me alive again—I being then a nervous wreck.

Passing

Thus we pass. Dayton Brethren church has laid away so many of the leaders in that movement which made her one of our strong churches, that one feels almost a stranger there. However scores are still there whom he received into the group. But we are all passing. Our end approaches and perhaps, the end of our "present age." It remains for us to remain steady, "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" and watching for his return.

Sunday

We remained over the week-end and saw once more just lacking three of 600 in the Sunday school and a great crowd for the morning service in a service of giving, called there, "Storehouse Day." The pastor preached a great sermon and I believe the audience responded well, though we were unable to remain to the end of the rather extended service.

Inspiration

It was a great inspiration again to see the work going on with a new smoothness and harmony and doing great things for the Lord. But one is impressed that it will take a lot of sacrifice and devotion on the part of many to replace the outstanding men and women they have laid away in the recent years. I am sure that their Sunday school could use a good deal more of our literature and should do so, if they expect to raise up men to take the places of men like Bowman, Stutz, Teeter, and hosts of other good members who have gone to their reward.
They will also need to keep an aggressive program of evangelism, for there is no other method of making new friends and melting them into the church work as these two agencies. By them, the church was built and by them she will remain great in the

with a great deal of satisfaction announce that the College was recently admitted to recognition in New York
The readers of this paper may not be that New York is probably the most difficult of all states in which to gain recognition. It has been taken as a test for many years. So now, so far as I the recognition of the College is coming but one exception, and that must, very near future, be met, viz., membership in the Association of American Universities.
Recognition in New York means that our and B. S. degrees will admit to enrollment in all institutions of higher learning state, including entrance into Law, Medicine, etc. For the past three years we had a graduate teaching on Long Island and it was particularly important to gain this recognition for him, as not only teaching within the confines of state, but also was seeking full standing in New York University. of which is very gratifying.

Affairs of the College are going forward as usual, with the usual minor difficulties but in the main affairs are encouraging. The Saturday enrollment keeps up and the enrollment in the arts college, therefore the income, for the next semester promises to be increased. Dean

Mason reports that he has never had so many inquiries.

The last meeting of the Faculty Club was held as usual when Dean Miller read a paper on the general subject of ancient manuscripts and sources of the New Testament writings. The meeting before that was held at Dean Mason's home when the writer read a short paper upon some recent conceptions of Mendelism. The next meeting will be held at my home when Professor Garber will present the paper.

The Men's Gospel Team, the Girls' Gospel Team, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., the four student religious organizations on the campus, are all interesting and active.
The Y. W. C. A. has several projects always going and that gives zest to their work.

Dr. Shively was recently called to near Dayton where he had charge of two funerals.

The College was recently favored by a visit and address by Brother Foster from Africa. These returning missionaries always bring an inspiring and helpful message.

College will close this Friday, December 18, and re-open Tuesday, January 5, 1932.

A FEW WORDS OF TRIBUTE IN BEHALF OF TILMAN J. FAHRNEY OF DOWNSVILLE, MARYLAND

In my paper read at the State Conference in Philadelphia in October entitled, "Ministerial Experiences," I said, "After I announced my sale Brother Tilman Fahrney (God bless him, he is one of a thousand) came to me and said, 'You hold a meeting for me at Downsville and I will attend to your sale.' He advertised a time sale instead of cash. At the close of the sale he cashed all my notes and I left for Ashland. REMEMBER THIS UNSELFISH KINDNESS WAS WHEN I LEFT AND NOT WHEN I CAME TO MARYLAND."

During the time I was there he gave me groceries from his store, gave wife and children dresses and assisted me in every way possible. Today he is an invalid. I would rather do him a kindness if possible than any other man on earth."

Only a few days after I made this statement he died. His noble wife, now almost an invalid from a broken hip, had a dear friend to write for her and tell me of our great loss but doubtless his great gain. It has made me a little more homesick for heaven.

He suffered for eight long years, almost helpless and then fell asleep. Doubtless he was almost forgotten by many, who owe their spiritual lives to his almost unbelievable sacrifices, that made it possible to have a church at St. James, Maryland, where I had my first pastorate.

I was inexperienced and just out of my teens, and he was more than a spiritual father to me. He gave money, hundreds of dollars towards tracts and booklets, setting forth our distinctive doctrines. He scattered them by the thousand and did more than any other man to make it possible to build up the church from four members (and only one within four miles of the church) to about seventy-five within two years' time. He was quiet, unassuming, often not letting his right hand know what his left did.

When I held a meeting at Downsville, tremendous pressure was brought by the Disciple church to crush out Trine immersion and other distinctive doctrines of our church. He distributed tracts on eighteen reasons for "Face forward Immersion," on "Trine Immersion," "Feetwashing," etc. He would wrap up tracts in the goods he sold, often in bundles bought by the worst enemies of the Brethren Church. This was indeed a great help in my beginning ministry. I baptized the Sunday school superintendent of the Disciple church and seven of their members, a church of nearly a hundred members and bent on swallowing us up and we only had a few members in the town. I have always been an advocate of the use of tracts ever since, and of the five thousand members that I have received into the church since, hundreds have been converted from tracts, the value of which I learned from this man of God.

I believe he did more good with tracts than a hundred churches combined does today.

I have been informed that our good Brother Baker, pastor of the St. James church will write an obituary of this man of God. So I need not write more. Neither he, nor many of the Brethren now living know much of the sacrifices of this man who has been so long afflicted. His faith was strong till death. His love was always strong for me and just a few months before his death he scribbled a letter when he could scarcely write at all. I wept when I read it, and I thought how soon we forget, but God does not forget and will give faithful reward for service.

I am sending a carbon copy of this imperfect tribute to his broken hearted wife, who was equally kind and sacrificing to me and mine. How kind it was in her to immediately inform me of his death and wrote me if she was able would have had me to assist at his funeral.

I pray that this letter may save her a few tears, and her departure to meet him in glory will be one of peace and that when the time of her departure shall come to meet him in glory, it may be one of peace.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

The Louisville church observed Rally Day on October 11. We experienced a very profitable day. In attendance we reached a higher mark than had heretofore been attained by our school at the time the records were closed the attendance had reached 215 and several others came in for the morning message.

Since that time the Brethren here have been forging their way forward in many ways, keeping our attendance up in this neighborhood of that record, showing an interest and loyalty that makes a pastor's heart glad, even in these times of uncertainty.

Our next special day fell on November 22, when we had our Homecoming and rededication anniversary. Prof. M. A. Stuckey of the Seminary, one of Louisville's own boys, was our guest speaker. He brought a message that was full of helpfulness and encouragement. His talented wife gave several musical selections in her pleasing manner, which added much toward making these services a success.

In the evening of this same day we began a two weeks' evangelistic campaign with Dr. J. C. Beal as our leader. These two weeks were crowded full of good things from the Word. Each afternoon at 1:30 we had Bible Study with some 20 present, then the 7:30 service was distinctly evangelistic. Dr. Beal, though somewhat tired from some 5 or 6 weeks of special services, seemed to be at his best, and gave us wonderful messages from the Word. The choir was very faithful with the music, bringing a fine inspirational service in song each evening, and the Lord seemed pleased with the effort. Fifteen confessions were taken, two of these were reconsecrations, and of the thirteen others, eleven have been received into the church, two await baptism, while several others are seriously weighing the matter, and we hope to receive them into the church in the near future.

On the closing evening of the campaign we observed our Communion service. There were 125 communicants, which proved to be not only the best but largest service of this nature the church ever experienced.

One other thing I must mention was a special campaign which we launched through these two weeks to create a crease interest in Daily Bible reading; entire membership responded very nigh young and old—and on the closing of the meeting 113,408 verses had been reported. I trust this interest will have created a real desire in the minds of the church for a better knowledge of the Word. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, might not sin against thee." Remember to work at Louisville when you pray.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear Editor: We have just closed a two weeks' revival meeting which proved to be the most remarkable and successful in the history of our church—it seems fair we tell you and the rest of the Brethren about it.

The campaign began Sunday evening November 15th, with two weeks of meetings planned. The interest was so keenly felt, along with the success of the first weeks that it seemed to call for the second week, which proved to be the best of the three. There were confessions of faith every service beginning with the first last, with one exception.

Along with our own beloved pastor Wm. H. Clough, we had two gospel preachers with us for the first two weeks, E. J. William Viehweg and daughter Lucy Camden, New Jersey.

The church was crowded to the very night of the campaign, with only two exceptions. Our church is a small building, seating about 160 people. A kind friend, Mr. A. D. Ferguson, made it possible to seat the large crowds that came every night by lending us folding chairs. The attendance went as high as 240 with an average of about 240 each night.

There were over one hundred to stand for Christ during the three weeks; 150 confessions for Christ were made by public profession for the first time and over 100 consecrations of life for the service of the Lord.

One of the finest spirits prevailed in the service of the series, bringing commendations of visiting friends from other churches. Each Sunday morning was a special service which resulted in a new entire membership offering their lives to God in a definite way.

The church will long remember the revival, in fact it has proven the revival what once seemed to be a work that was impossible to revive. We now feel the church has a church in this city they can be proud of, and one with a very promising outlook. Interest was manifested in the meetings, especially the last night on December 6th, when a number of decisions for Christ were received. It seemed the revival was coming to a close entirely too soon.

For the success of the revival we are rejoicing and praising our Father God for the preparation that was the secret of the success. Weeks of cottage prayer meetings were held, personal instruction in soul winning, advertising by hand bills, daily news and personal calls.

Our own beloved pastor, Rev. Wm. H. Clough, was the evangelist. He is a man of God, filled with the Spirit, and loves souls of men, and is one who believes with prayer all things are possible. After night Brother Clough demonstrated only his ability as a successful evangelist.

at the old fashioned gospel is not oute and is still the power of God unto on to every one that believeth. Our came to us May 15th, 1931, and was ly a member of the First church, Phila and a graduate of the Philadelphia of the Bible, class of 1930.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

on earth is to establish and enforce peace by supernatural and divine power. This will be done by our Lord when he comes again.

He shall rule the nations "with a rod of iron" (Psa. 2:9). FORCE is the final argu- ment, the only argument which is possible with men who spurn the offer of God's Grace. Every prison, every police officer, is witness to the truth of this statement. The reason that men cannot enforce peace universally, is that no body of rulers have been found in whose hands there can be en- trusted the Force necessary to enforce peace. But such power will be safe in the hands of Christ.

"THERE IS NO UNEMPLOYMENT"

"There is no unemployment in the King- dom of God." Never has the Church faced a greater task than it faces in these days. Never has there been greater need for that which the Church alone can supply. It is perfectly evident that if the work of the Church were productive of financial profit men would be falling over one another to invest in it—for it has more business than it can take care of.

Now I believe that most of us are con- vinced that there are greater values to be realized from religion than those of financial profit would be. Then the cold logic of the situation is this: Invest your time, your en- ergy, and your money in the Church, so that it may meet the demand for its services and may be productive of those high values for which it stands.—Bishop Rogers of the Episcopal Church, Akron District.

The teacher will also use this period to store the mind of the child with a fund of useful biblical passages. The boy will now commit to memory with great ease and wonderful tenacity. The teacher can make almost any reasonable demands, in this respect, of his class of boys, and they will not disappoint him. In fact, they will take pleasure in vying with each other to see who can commit the most verses or the largest number of Psalms or chapters in a given length of time. This rivalry can be fostered in the most helpful way, but, of course, it needs to be all the time directed and controlled by the teacher.

Sunday School Notes

I find little to excite my pride in the press. Wherever there has been a drinking orgy, or a family triangle ending in murder, it gets a prominent place on the desirable pages. Our press is wet to saturation. "Give the public what it wants," is the easy creed behind which many editors hide. A splendid American editor, recently asked if he would accept the place of chief of a Christian daily, replied that much as he disliked to believe it a Christian daily would not succeed. Our press needs a spread of the gospel to its lairs.

All normal people like drama. The theater will live as long as people are alive to patronize it. It is a marvelous agency for making or unmaking ideals. What of our modern theater? Here and there a noble play, like "The Enemy," or "Death Takes a Holiday," has a success. For the most part the plays portray disloyalty in marriage, sex gone mad, the underworld in action, and the flouting of the laws against alcohol. This wonderful institution, the theater, needs to be captured by the forces of righteousness! That capture is not an impossible one but it is difficult. We can all help in the attack by attending only those plays that are worthy and high.

Is it possible that the home should be listed in those areas which need the spread of the gospel? Sadly but truly it must be answered, "Yes." The altar has almost disappeared in the home. I do not plead that the old-fashioned altar be reerected; I do plead for a time in the home for worship. The family may plan that worship in a meaningful manner in terms of their needs and ideas. I plead for a hearty cooperation between the home and the church, and for the training of very young children in the expression of reverence and in the feeling of awe and wonder when they see God at work in stars and storms.

We need to continue the spread of the gospel geographically. We must add to that the taking of Christ's high way of life into areas that are not bounded by oceans but by our wrong social habits.

THE LITTLE OLD LADY'S CHRISTMAS

By Emma Florence Bush

Once upon a time there was a little girl named Mary Louise. Every day on her way home from school she passed a place called, "The Old Ladies' Home," and every day she saw sitting in the window and smiling at her a Little Old Lady who always waved her hand, and Mary Louise always waved back, so she felt that she knew her very well indeed.

"Mother," said Mary Louise a few days before Christmas, "I should like to give the Little Old Lady a real Christmas present. I am going to give her the pretty Christmas calendar I made in school."

"That will be fine," said mother, "and I shall give her something, too. I shall give her the pretty pot of hyacinths that are just beginning to bloom. Why don't you ask some one else to give something, too?"

"I shall," said Mary Louise, and she went into the kitchen where Ellen was busy with the Christmas cooking.

"Ellen," said Mary Louise, "I am going to give the Little Old Lady my pretty Christmas calendar, and mother is going to give her a pot of hyacinths. Will you give her something, too?"

"Indeed I will," said Ellen heartily. "I shall give her a little frosted Christmas cake and a dozen raisin cookies," and she began to mix the cake right away.

Then Mary Louise went into big sister's room. Big sister was working on Christmas presents.

"Margaret," said Mary Louise, "will you give me something for the Little Old Lady's Christmas? I am giving her my pretty Christmas calendar; mother is going to give her a pot of hyacinths; and Ellen is giving her a Christmas cake and a dozen raisin cookies."

"Indeed I will," said Margaret. "I shall give her a pink pincushion for her bureau," and she placed it in Mary Louise's hands.

When Daddy came home, Mary Louise climbed up on his lap. "Daddy," she said, "will you give me something for the Little Old Lady's Christmas? I am giving her a pretty Christmas calendar; mother is giving her a pot of hyacinths; Ellen is giving her a Christmas cake and a dozen raisin cookies; and sister Margaret, a pretty pincushion."

"Indeed I will," said daddy. "I shall give her a new book to read. And here are ten dollars to buy a duck for her and the other old ladies. Ask Ellen to help you to buy it."

So Ellen and Mary Louise went to the store and bought the duck, and Mary Louise carried it home in the big market basket. Nips, the puppy, came along behind with his own basket full of bones that the butcher gave him.

Mother gave Mary Louise a big book she found in the cellar, and they put it in the pretty Christmas calendar, the pot of hyacinths, the Christmas cake, and the dozen raisin cookies. Then they put in the pretty pink pincushion and the new book, and the duck. Mother filled the empty places with nuts, grapes and candy, then Mary Louise went down the street to the Old Ladies' Home, rang the bell, and asked to see her Little Old Lady.

How happy the Little Old Lady was! She hung the calendar on the wall, put the pretty pink pincushion on her bureau, and the pot of hyacinths in the window. Then she put the candy, nuts, and grapes in a dish, and the new book on the table; she gave the duck to the cook, and asked her to have it roasted for Christmas dinner. Then she gave Mary Louise a hug and a kiss and the Sunbeam.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

GRIM-ELSASSER—A quiet and beautiful wedding place at the First Brethren parsonage in Bryan, Ohio, November 19, when Mr. Lehland S. Grim and Miss Elsass were united in marriage. The single ring ceremony was used. Their attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Walter of Bryan. These young people are well known and respected in this community. Miss Elsass was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Elsass who were well known members of the readers of the Evangelist. These young people have the well wishes of their many friends and will home to them on East Mulberry Street in Bryan, Ohio. C. A. STEWART.

IN THE SHADOW

EBIE—Walter William Ebie was born July 14, 1913, slipped away to be with Jesus, September 15, 1931, at the age of 2 years, 2 months, and 1 day. Little Walter died by drowning in the little brook close to his home. He leaves to mourn his going his fond parents, Brother and Sister George Ebie, a brother, William and a sister, Mrs. Irene Irey. May God richly comfort these who have left so sad and lonely. Services at the church by the pastor. A. E. WHITE.

STUTZ—Ira Oscar Stutz was born on a farm near Dayton, Ohio, May 24, 1870, and died at Dayton, Ohio, December 1931, aged 61 years, 6 months and 8 days. He was a son of George and Mary Stutz, farmers. He was married to Minnie Marshall, April 15, 1896. Five children blessed the union.—Ralph, Paul, Forest, John and Janet, all of whom survive, together with one brother and one sister.

Brother Stutz was a man of unusual balance and never excited nor angered in all the years of his life. In the work of building a great church which he loved, much faith and courage, he never faltered. Business transactions and church obligations were alike to him, as was notes to pay. Duty and honesty and gravity were his guiding words to him. It seems strange that at the suddenness of lightning, the second stroke took him without the time to say a word. Finishing his last fast with his daughter, he bade her "good bye" and had she gone until a crash warned his wife that so had happened and he was gone. Beyond human cries, or help, he had heard the call of his Master and he went to be with him.

Dayton has lost and the brotherhood has lost but gained. His life will go on in the memories and hearts of his sons and daughter and those who knew him and remember things of his life worth emulation.

Good Night

The shadows of the long night fall upon the year. But a moment more and this year will be in an unbroken sleep as are the ages of Babylon and Tyre. It is a moment of solemnity. It is a moment of farewells. We will awaken; we will arouse ourselves to the new life and the new destiny of a fresh-born year; but the dying year will be gone and we shall sigh for it in vain; earth to earth; ashes to ashes; dust to dust.

Old year, thou hast brought to us sunlight and shadow, meetings and partings, the joy of living, the compensations of friendship and love, the happiness of work, the discipline of failure, comparative or absolute opportunity, struggle, self-conquest, the new friend, the long farewell, experience, the voices of the Spirit, aspiration for that we did not as yet attain, the sense of weakness, the ever increasing hunger for something—for some One—to satisfy a heart crying out in its isolation for that which could satisfy.

We have made mistakes: forgive, thou Searcher and Strengtheners of the heart of man. We are nearer the grave: speak to us, thou God of love that it is well ahead. We have wept: touch us, thou Christ of Bethany, that our eyes look up to heavenly hills where sorrow is unknown. We would be good: we would do good: speak to us in the deep silence; strengthen our wills; illuminate our understanding of thy purpose and of the part thou hast chosen for our feet, that we do not stumble and miss the high prize of the mark of our calling in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

We are thankful to have lived. We are thankful for the privilege of learning even in those things in which we have suffered. It is well. And that which we regret is that we have not more truly learned by the discipline which the experience of life has brought to our door.

Good night, old year. We build upon the past. We will not forget. We will cultivate all that is good, the good of friendship, the good of sympathy, the good of service, the good of aspiration, the good of communion with God and Father of us all. We will scorn no one; for we ourselves hunger and thirst and perish for sympathy. We will help the lonely; for we ourselves are weak. We will

And whether crowned or crownless when we fall
It matters not, so as God's work is done.

Good night. Good night to all the past. It is gone but it is not lost. In the treasure house of the soul it is still our own. In some fair clime, in some near dawn, in the land of immortality, in the house of many mansions, we shall overtake and find it again.—Central Christian Advocate.

Signs of the Times

THE World Moves—But Whither?

"Turkey, once the military and religious head of Islam, produced only five pilgrims! (to Mecca last year). Could anything be more eloquent of what is taking place—Islam crumbling at its centers. The old moorings are slipping—and what have you?

Right here is our changing front. If the fading of the old order meant moral advance; if it meant turning to Christianity; if it meant seeking for truer spiritual light; it would be one thing. But the consensus of opinion seems to be otherwise. The trend is what you will—materialistic, religiously indifferent, agnostic, sometimes social minded, sometimes idealistic, often quite otherwise; but certainly it is in new and untried directions, with a constantly decreasing hold of the age-long sanctions. The baleful effects of western night-life and drinking, of "our worst movies, cynical after-effects of the war among so-called Christian nations, with the loss of western prestige—all these and other influences are insidiously and sweepingly at work."—The Missionary Review of the World—Kaleidoscopic Glimpses of Asia—E. M. Dodd.

In the light of the above facts, the church of the Lord should move quickly to seize the opportunity before it becomes too late.

THE High Cost of "Progress"

Anyone interested in the phenomenon of human life must watch with interest the efforts of that infant, "Psychology," to attain the stature of manhood in the universe of science. Unquestionably, progress is being made, but there have been losses along the way. The following quotation suggests one of the losses (Bold face is mine).

"This is a large responsibility for psychology, which has its own preconceptions to deal with. In particular, it has been very much occupied with getting rid of the preconception that psychology is the description of the soul. As any one can see, the soul is a perfect storm-center of preconceptions. To be scientific, psychology also has to be objective, to deal only in established facts, to avoid ancient beliefs. Consequently psychology has become a laboratory science, and has more and more excluded from consideration anything which can not be examined with instruments. The result of this has been, as every one knows, that psychology has become more and more a branch of biology and less and less a department of philosophy. The more it has had to say about "the organism as a whole," the less it has cared to hazard an opinion about man, the mysterious author of civilization.

Surely there is no reason for disparaging the science of the organism. If psychology and neurology between them succeeds in unraveling the structure and working of the nervous system, we may be in a position to cure many diseases which now resist all treatment. This will be no small gain. But curing epilepsy and preventing dementia praecox are very different matters from solving the mysteries of human motives, just as different as stopping yellow fever and preventing crime. Psychology may become more scientific by such procedure. It may even become—what William James hardly dared to hope—a regular branch of science. But it does so at the cost of ceasing to peer into the human soul. The more it knows of reflexes and secretions, the less it is able to choose among them. If "all human behavior results from conditional reflexes," what conditioned reflexes should Supreme Court judges have? This, it will be seen, is not a scientific question."—Science: The False Messiah—C. E. Ayres.

WHAT is this "New Freedom?"

Mr. Ayres also has some interesting opinions on the subject of the "New Freedom." He says: "The new freedom . . . is not the "freedom to worship God" of the Pilgrim Fathers. Nor is it the independence of the United States, upon which rests our official title as a free nation, independent of his

A Time of Looking Both Ways

Years is a time of looking two ways, a time of retrospect of prospect. The name of the first month of the year comes from the word, Janus (Latin, janua, a door or gate), the name of the god of doors, of all beginnings. Janus was represented as having a double-faced head, looking both ways. So every year comes to us with both the backward and the forward look. The backward look reminds us of what we have been and have done and the forward look kindles hopes of what we may do and achieve. No two of us will see exactly the same past, nor yet the same possibilities for the future. For some the past will reveal a good done and for others very little. Some good habits have been strengthened and for others there has been little improvement, or even the strengthening of evil ones. Some will see duties done more or less regularly, and others see only neglect and infidelity. But all there will be no small amount of dissatisfaction with the records that have been made. It would be strange to find one who would not say that the year has fallen far below their ideals for it at the beginning. If that is true, how must the record appear before the judgment of God's decision?

We do well to take cognizance of the past and learn the lessons it has for us, to be profited thereby for the future. Let us bear in mind, that to recognize our imperfections in the past is no cause for discouragement, but rather the converse, for it reveals possibilities of improvement. And the more candidly we look into the past, the more hopefully can we look into the future.

Looking into the past we see, in all too many instances, the record is blotted by sinfulness and carnality, that nullified our God-bearing and made us stumbling blocks to fellow-pilgrims and hindrances to the cause of Christ. Our conduct is not in keeping with our professed belief in the transforming and keeping power of the grace of God, and if we are wise and sincere we will put away this inconsistency from our lives. If we repent of our sins by turning from them and committing our ways unto the Lord, he will receive us, and we shall hear him say: "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." And again comes the assurance: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." If we thus "right-about-face," we shall learn to look into the new year with old things passed away and new things become new, and the brightness of the prospect will fill our hearts with confidence and joy.

Looking into the past, we shall find it filled with suspicions, with sinfulness, sordidness and cynicism. Life was nearly smothered by sin and made puny and unwholesome. Suspicion undermined confidence, selfishness drove away magnanimity, and sordidness and sin dragged the soul down from its loftiness and beauty and robbed it of its benign influence. But be not dismayed, for, if we turn from these things, we can look into a bright and nobler future. A watch scientist, some years ago, took some insects from Holland where the sky is damp and foggy, into the rich tropical atmosphere of South America, giving them a friendly environment and the best of food. Finally, after five years of experimentation, these insects doubled in size and the dim, subdued colors became gay and brilliant, and not only so, but they left off their crawling habits of Holland and began to spread their wings and to fly up to meet God's sun. Marvelous? Yes, but not more marvelous than is the change that is possible for the soul that will turn his back on his sordidness and selfishness and move into the sunshine of God's kindness, great-heartedness and trust. Such a future is both possible and glorious.

The past had its impulsiveness, hap-hazardness and waste of time. There was much idleness and failure to "redeem the time" and to "buy up the opportunities." There was so much changeableness and instability. We undertook to do good and to be good by spurts and starts. Time passed with little thought of its value and with no protracted effort to make it count for the most and the best. We made no plan and estimated no cost, but plunged in hap-hazardly, as if we expected to win on an impulse or become good by accident. We were living too superficially, too much in the shallows, we made our way in too light a bark. A wise man once said, "Little boats always totter about on the surface of the water going always as it happens, and overturning in a breath, whilst the great ship sinks deeply and more deeply in and goes steadily on. The cause of its steadiness is its depth. Under all the pressure of error and unbelief and false doctrines it is immovable, abounding in the work of the Lord." The future can be like that, if we will have it so. If we will allow our lives to sink deep into the ocean of God's grace and power, we shall not "be tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive" (Eph. 4:14). A look into the past shows neglectfulness and indifference to the church and to religious duties and responsibilities. Other things were allowed to come into our lives and to claim first place in our interest and affections. We slighted the house of God for other things of lesser importance; we had no time for daily prayer and Bible reading; we had no taste for religious books; we did not value the fellowship of the saints, and were neglectful and grew more neglectful of all the other means of grace that divine wisdom has made possible for struggling Christians. And being thus indifferent about our own lives, we were unconcerned about the welfare of other souls, like the young medical student about whom George Adams Smith tells us in his "Life of Henry Drummond." The young man, a graduate of an American medical college, spent a year in post-graduate work in Edinburgh and at the close of that time came to Drummond to bid him good-bye. Whereupon the distinguished professor said in essence: "You have lost your opportunity in Edinburgh. You are a professing Christian. You have had as a side partner in the laboratory this year the most pronounced skeptic in the entire student body, yet you have done nothing by word or example to win him to the Christian faith. I am sorry for your sake." It was a blow that staggered the American student, but he came to himself and decided to put off the opening of his practice another year and to stay in Edinburgh for the sole purpose of winning his fellow-student to Christ. And

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS

*I will start anew this morning with a higher fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;
I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;
I will waste no moment whining and my heart shall know no fear.*

*I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;
I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze.
I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.*

*I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;
I will not deny his merit, but I'll try to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;
I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine.*
—British Weekly.

he succeeded not only in winning him to an acceptance of Christ as his Savior, but to the dedication of his life as a medical missionary in some needy foreign field. And the American himself went into his life work with his spiritual indifference changed into a vital personal experience and a zealous concern for others. It was with a great new strength of character that he faced the future, and by that same marvelous change we too may look forward with new seriousness and zeal.

The past had its times of aloofness from God and of dipping into sin; its times of self-dependence, pride and wilfulness of way. Vast numbers of us know from sore experience that it is possible to get away from God, to withdraw our hand from the Father's hand, though, if we persevere in faith and obedience, there is no power in earth or hell that can snatch us from him. But God does not compel us to stay by his side. The love of Christ constraineth us, but it does not compel us. We are free to choose Christ or to reject him, and we are free to desert him after we have become his disciples. Judas did permanently, and all the rest of the twelve did temporarily, and Peter even lied and swore that he never knew Christ. And such apostasy is anticipated, for we read, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9), and the aged apostle was writing to Christian people. So, let us be warned by the possibility of being separated from Christ, even in the least, or for only a moment, for such separation may go from bad to worse and lead to serious consequences. But let us look forward with trust in and dependence upon his guiding hand, and with all self-dependence and pride cast aside, acknowledging, as did Jeremiah of old, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in him."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We conclude Dr. Florence N. Gribble's "Some Past Christmases" in this issue, and you will be interested and profited by reading these experiences.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, writes a well-deserved appreciation of the late Brother William A. Crofford, a former member of his church and concerning whom we have previously paid tribute in these columns.

Dr. R. R. Teeter writes on "What Does Loyalty Mean" in his Business Manager's Corner this week, and it will do you good to read it. We believe that, in our effort to build up a greater spirit of loyalty toward our Publishing House and its several publications, we are working to the best interests of the entire brotherhood and to every congregation thereof.

We sincerely hope that many will avail themselves of the new Family Altar department which is to be launched with next week's issue, conducted by Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, who will use the daily readings of the Sunday school lessons for the basis of his devotional suggestions. Brother Lyon always brings us good things and those who have been following him during past months will not need to be urged to read his new department.

The work at Dallas Center, Iowa, is going forward encouragingly under the able leadership of Brother A. R. Staley, who is highly respected by his church people and the community. This church is still enjoying the district conference that was held there in October. There have been seven new members added to the church roll since last report, and with these entrance is made into four new homes. The Sunday school attendance is said to be much better than last year, and all the other departments are active, the W. M. S. being determined to meet all their goals for the year and the S. M. M. having added several new members to their society.

The First church of Philadelphia continues to reap souls for the kingdom of God and to make progress in other ways. Recently a family consisting of a father and four sons and daughters were received into the church by baptism. As our correspondent suggests, it reminds us of apostolic times, when on more than one occasion entire households were won to Christ. Their Sunday school continues to grow, as also does their giving spirit. This church felt the death of Brother Kennedy very keenly, possibly more so than most other churches because of his close connection with them, and it was fitting that they should conduct a memorial service to his memory. The able pastor of this church is Brother A. V. Kimmell.

The church at Rittman, Ohio, has recently experienced a spiritual refreshing from the Lord under the joint leadership of Brothers Everett Niswonger and Norman Uphouse. Brother Niswonger, faithful pastor, did the preaching for the first week and Brother Uphouse for the second. Two souls were led to accept Christ, their Savior and the membership was greatly inspired and strengthened spiritually by the meetings. A Bible reading contest was a feature of the meetings and two members practically read the Bible through during that time, or at least, read almost as many verses as are in the Bible. Nothing is more important than to get the people of God to reading the Word of God, and to read it thoughtfully. May God bless every effort to this end. The singing and singing of brief choruses was also a feature of the meetings, and helped much to kindle enthusiasm and spiritual responsiveness.

A very successful evangelistic campaign was recently conducted in the Brethren church of Washington, D. C., by Brother R. Miller as evangelist. Brother Homer A. Kent is the efficient pastor of this church and under his leadership it has been making steady progress from one victory to another. The evangelist was at his best and God used his messages and the many home calls that were made by preachers and laymen to lead twenty-four souls unto Christ. And this was accomplished, notwithstanding very successful campaigns conducted on the two preceding years. This church made pledges and gifts to their own church building fund in the amount of six to seven thousand dollars, and yet a Thanksgiving season they did not reduce their offering to get Home Missions, but greatly increased it, their offering amounting to $359.00. We believe God will not long deny a completed church building to a people who give so sacrificially as do our Washington Brethren, and who also work their field so intensively.

We are not dropping any of the good and valued features of The Evangelist for the new year. Prof. A. J. McClain will continue his widely read department—"Signs of the Times." Our Study department will be enlarged and three able Bible teachers will cooperate in bringing us messages that will instruct the church and strengthen faith. They are Dr. G. W. Rench, Dr. C. F. Yoder and Prof. M. A. Stuckey. Dr. Yoder will continue his series on Prophecy through a number of weeks. Dr. Rench will begin his series on "Great Texts of the Bible" in the first issue of the new year. At the conclusion of Dr. Yoder's series, Prof. Stuckey will begin his series in which he will summarize the messages of the books of the Bible. Thus two Bible teachers will be coming to us each week with their vital messages from the Word. This arrangement will lessen the space for the regularly contributed articles since the Family Altar is being transferred to the Sunday school department. Also, Dean J. Allen Miller will renew his department of Questions and Answers on page 2, and all who have puzzling Scripture passages they would like to have explained or questions related to the church or the religious life that they would like to have light on, are invited to send in questions to the Editor in care of Dr. Miller. The Sunday school workers may continue to send helpful material on the Sunday School Magazine page, conducted by Prof. Stuckey, and the Christian Endeavor department will continue to offer opportunities for Society reports and discussions under the editorial leadership of Brother C. D. Whitmer. Missionary and church news will continue to be the departments of chief interest, and we covet the faithful cooperation of missionaries and missionary leaders, and pastors in an effort to keep these pages filled with live news from the fields at home and abroad. And last of all, the editor will endeavor to keep his pages filled with something that will be helpful and worth while. So, with all these good things in prospect and many others which we cannot now mention, we trust that every present subscriber will not only renew, but will get a new subscriber to our church paper. If every one would do this, it would be a wonderful piece of missionary and evangelistic work. We hope you will try it. If you renew your subscription and secure a new subscription and send them both together, you need only send us $3.00 for the two, and every new separate subscription is only $1.35. This is below cost, but we are making this offer with the confidence that if we can get people to reading our church paper for one year, they will want to remain in the evangelist family thereafter. Now, every one win one.

The New Year Through the Years

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier, Head of the Department of Modern Languages in Ashland College

As we celebrate New Year's Day we may not be conscious that it is a very old festivity. We may even fail to note that various peoples have celebrated and still celebrate their New Year in different months.

The Jewish New Year or "Yom Kippur" is celebrated on the 10th, while among the Druids the celebration was on the 10th. In Anglo-Saxon England the celebration was on the 25th and among the peoples of the Greek arch it is about a week later than with us.

An outstanding peculiarity about the New Year everywhere is that it is a season of real in the Latin language we have the word "strena," a New Year's gift, which lingers in the Italian "strenna," the French "etrenne" and the Spanish "estrena."

This word goes back to a very remote period when, as a mark of reverence, branches cut from a sacred tree to the goddess "Strenia" or "Strena," were sent to the magistrates.

The word "strena" has come to denote among the Latins of to-day the idea of "luck," e. g., the sale of the day, the initial of a drama, etc. Also it denotes a gift book.

On the first day of the year the Romans exchanged greetings and gave presents. This was, under the Caesars, a source of profit to the emperor, but a burden to the subjects.

In Japan the New Year is a season of much festivity and innocent mirth.

Among the Chinese it is the latest festival of the year.

The Persians make each other a present of eggs at this season.

Among the Saxons it was a day of drinking and feasting.

In France, French Canada, Scotland and Italy the day is observed more than Christmas, and, paradoxical as it may seem, the Scotch men in Scotland, and in some parts of New England, to the last day of the year, when it is the custom of persons to go from door to door asking in rhymes for cakes or money; and as the clock chimes midnight, friends "first kiss" each other. The "first foot" to bring luck for the New Year, ought to be a male.

The word "Hogmanay" is from the old French "aguil-leuf," a corruption of "Au gui de l'an neuf!" This means literally "to the mistletoe of the new year" and is an exclamation in memory of the celebration in which the ancient Gauls distributed the "gui" or mistletoe.

The mistletoe was sacred to the Gauls and they believed that it would heal diseases and that it brought good luck. Doubtless, as Lavissee says in his "Histoire de France:" the Gauls thus held the mistletoe because they had no doubt that it remains ever green and to them seemed to be immortal like the soul."

The ceremony of cutting the mistletoe was extraordinary among the Gauls. A large crowd would gather around an oak tree. A Druid would climb up into the tree and cut the "gui" with a golden sickle. Then followed the giving of New Year's presents.

Among the Druids the priests cut down the branches of the sacred mistletoe and then feasted and offered sacrifices.

Here mention may be made of "Hogmanay," a name of great hilarity and even drinking and fighting.

After the restoration of the Bourbons it became the custom in Paris to send bonbons to one's friends. In 1822 there were 2,000 tons sold during the two days preceding the New Year.

Even the American Indians made much of New Year's.

With us here in America the formal custom of receiving New Year's calls has become nearly obsolete in the larger cities. Yet the good old Knickerbocker custom is still maintained by some families.

As a day of calling and social intercourse New Year's was introduced in the colonies by the Dutch of New York.

In the Roman Catholic church New Year's Day is a holiday of strict obligation.

It is easy to see then that in the Latin countries the celebration is much the same because largely an ecclesiastical affair.

For the French middle class the "etrennes" mean practically a bonus to servants and even to other employees at times.

This New Year's gift (etrenne) goes to janitor, mail carrier, telephone operator, garbage men and to a thousand persons, many of them unknown to the donor, but who "impose" by going around on this day of joy to wish the well-to-do a Happy New Year (souhaiter la bonne annee).

In France some employers double the salary of their employees the last month of the year.

If the New Year was the occasion of so much joy to the ancients who were guided mainly by superstition; and then was and still is so much made of by the Catholic church which is credited at times with being medieval, how much more joyful still should this great day be to us who claim to study and know the Word of God with its emphasis upon right use of time and talent and the value of a RIGHT new start?

Resolutions? Yes. But we may well remember the words of the famous Horace Mann: "I have heard much of the Acts of the Apostles, but not a thing about the resolutions of the disciples."

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

*Ring out wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.*

*Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.*

*Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.*

*Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.*

*Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.*

*Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.*

*Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.*

*Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.*

—Tennyson.

A New Year's Message

By N. W. Jennings

The Old Year has gone with all of its joys, its pleasures, its pleasant associations, its holy fellowship and sacred worship, its sorrows and disappointments.

Our blessings in the past year have been innumerable. Of course we haven't been without sorrow and heartaches and some disappointments, but the God of all Grace stood with us, and in the darkest night we saw his heavenly light and felt the beat of his warm heart.

The Good Shepherd's loving voice was heard calling us to follow on with him, and the leadership of the Holy Spirit has been very definite.

We may with him be most happy when everything combines to make us miserable! There is all sufficient help in God. Indeed the whole Trinity waits to bless us! The Father ever listens—the Son ever intercedes! The Spirit ever dwells within.

It is true in the future there may be death, bereavements, afflictions, but faith points to the grave and cries, "O death, where is thy sting?" As to losses "What harm us if we be the followers of that which is good?" To temptations, God has said, "My grace is sufficient. I shall not be tempted above that ye are able to bear."

There will be sunrise as well as sunset, singing birds as well as birds of prey, sabbaths as well as journeying days. Some are weak and feeble, and may be almost crushed

The Bethlehem Child

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

*If I were a beautiful star in the sky,
And could shine for eternity,
I would like to shine over Bethlehem,
And on to all nations and tribes of men,
And thus be a witness of Christ to them,—
Of the Christ who would set them free.*

*If I were the voice of a nightingale,
And could sing for all peoples and times,
I would like to sing with the angel throng
That sang o'er the plains that Christmas song
Of glory and love in a world of wrong,
To the peals of the heavenly chimes.*

*If I were a rose of Sharon fair,
With a beauty forever bright,
I would like to grow by the stable there,
With the glory song still borne on the air,
And broadcast fragrance everywhere,
For the babe that was born that night.*

*If I were a gem from the throne of God,
And could shine in this world of woe,
I would like to adorn that manger child,
That the world might know him, undefiled,
And learn through him to be reconciled,
To the one who loved them so.*

*If I were a child with a human heart,
In the midst of this world so wild,
Oh how I would like to be pure and true,
And live for the good that I might do,
In the one brief life that I must pass through,
In the name of the Bethlehem child.*

*If I were a Shulamite maiden fair,
As the fleet gazelle of the wild,
I would like to serve in the flower of my youth,
The immaculate babe in that barnyard booth,
In exchange for his gift of love and truth,—
The beauty of the Bethlehem child.*

*If I were the mother of a beautiful babe,
As goodly as Moses of old,
I would like to imprint in his innocent heart,
The virtue of him whose marvelous part
Was to suffer and die, but, with deathless art,
The glories of Heaven unfold.*

*If I were Beethoven, inditing a song,
That might echo that song from above,
I would go to the Bethlehem shepherds and learn*

*The song that abides in the hearts that burn
With the vision of God, reflected in turn
In the life that the world can love.*

*If I were a painter with vision inspired,
And could paint with the pencils of light,
I would like to paint a fair picture of peace,
In which all the woes of the sin-curse would cease,
And the gardens of virtue and joy would increase,—
I would paint the Nativity night.*

*If I were a poet, a weaver of dreams,
Of a prodigal race reconciled,
I would like to describe such a picture of love,
As only is seen in the city above,
A vision whose symbol, the heavenly dove,
Came down to abide in the Bethlehem child.*

*If I were a skillful physician to men,
And could labor in each Bethlehem,
I would like to restore people, body and soul,
With the water of life that makes men whole,
And the love that serves from pole to pole,
Transmitted through me unto them.*

*Were I a philosopher, learned and just,
An eloquent teacher of truth,
I would like to reason of righteousness,
Of the endless life that men might possess,
Through the one who in Bethlehem came to bless,
With the fount of eternal youth.*

*If I were a statesman, a maker of laws,
That the entire world might obey,
I would like to proclaim that wonderful law,
Of that wonderful life, without one flaw,—
That wonderful love, that once men saw
As they passed by the Bethlehem way.*

*If I were a Caesar, unrivelled in power,
With the wealth that an empire brings,
I would like to learn of the incarnate Lord,
The power of his cross, of his love and his word,
And surrender to him my scepter and sword,—
To him who was born King of kings.*

*But, being a man like the rest of men,
With a heart that has been defiled,
I will come to the fountain to be reborn,
And will live in the light of that Christmas morn,
And bear to the world, all bruised and torn,
The gift of the Bethlehem child.*

EDITOR'S NOTE—This splendid poem by Dr. Yoder arrived too late for our Christmas Evangelist, but the Christmas season is still on and it is appropriate. And besides, we ought to extend the Christmas emphasis over more time than we do anyway, so we are glad to give it publication in New Year number.

of the possibilities and responsibilities of another; we need not fear if we are sanctified through the Blood of Jesus Christ.

ust in God. The path may have more thorns, but matters if your shoes are iron and brass; there may be more slippery places, but he will "hold us up." More than others but we can cry "God is our shield." More solid, he hath said, "I will never leave you."

stand as a band of travelers ready to enter on a new journey and as we are on the threshold of our new journey let us commune with our own hearts. Look at the path of fear, it points forward, saying: "Boast not thyself of tomorrow." Consider the uncertainty of human things. But be not afraid to ponder the possibilities of the New Year.

This year calamity may come—poverty, pain, death, fatherless, Motherless, are we ready for what God may permit? Remember his promise, "as thy days so shall thy strength be."

you would have comfort of future trials and labors, and of the mercy and grace of the past.

There is a veil on the future which God places, and none can lift. Do not forget the former mercies of the Lord, and cry: "Our God is gracious."

sum up all. Here lies before us the year 1932. Its threads like golden threads, you may weave into a robe, of honor or shame—like empty vessels, we may fill with fragrance or ointment, ointment of good deeds, or poison of evil.

like a sea over which we may sail to the haven of success and gladness, or in which we may be wrecked and perished. Here it lies: God waits to go with us, "Lo, I am with you." We will prosper in our spiritual life in proportion to the measure of our Faith.

the Christ of Galilee can do "No mighty work" for the world or town or the Nation that is locked up in unbelief. Victory for us as a church and people is to love the Lord and "bearing his cross, and loving each other bearing each other's burdens."

Failure will never be written over the church door or floor of a home or a Nation where the atoning blood of Jesus is accepted.

Let us not only spend much time praying for ourselves and our work, but for our beloved brotherhood and all our activities, and work "All men everywhere."

your pastor I covet your prayers, your full cooperation this year as in the years past. And may the dynamic power of the word and cross hold us near his loving presence each day and each step all the way.

Studies In the Types

By R. I. Humberd

Study No. 11

JOSEPH A TYPE OF CHRIST

Jacob had twelve sons. Joseph being one of the young-est members of the family was an object of special love to his father. Jacob showed special favor to Joseph and gave him a coat of many colors. When the brethren saw the manifestation of their father's love it made them hate him.

Joseph dreamed dreams which made his brethren hate him yet the more. One seemed to set forth a time when his brethren would all come and bow down to him. "Behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and, behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf" (Gen. 37).

Joseph Seeking His Brethren

The brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem and after some time Jacob sent Joseph to enquire about their welfare. Leaving his father in Hebron he came to Shechem, but not finding his brethren he journeyed on and found them at Dothan.

When the brethren saw him coming they "said one to another, Behold this dreamer cometh," and taking Joseph they cast him into a pit and later sold him to a band of people going down into Egypt and to all intent and purpose killed him.

All of this reminds us that the Father had a beloved Son whom he sent into a far country for the welfare of his brethren, the Jews. But they, like the brethren of Joseph, rejected his superior claims and hated him and finally killed him.

Joseph left Hebron (the word means "fellowship") and went to Shechem (shoulder or servitude) in search of his brethren but found them in Dothan (law and custom). This reminds us that Christ left the "fellowship" of the Father in heaven and came in search of his brethren the Jews, and should have found them in "servitude" to God but in reality he found them bound by "laws and traditions of the elders."

Blessing to Gentiles

When Joseph was rejected by his brethren and sold for twenty pieces of silver he went to the Gentiles in Egypt. The Pharaoh of Egypt had a dream and hearing of Joseph he called for him and heard the interpretation. There were to be seven years of great plenty, followed by seven years of great famine. Joseph advised Pharaoh to "look out a man discreet and wise and set him over the land of Egypt" (Gen. 41).

Pharaoh chose Joseph for this position and through his wisdom, he became a great blessing to the Gentiles during the time of rejection by his own brethren. It was also in this period that he gained his Gentile bride, Asenath.

It is thus with Christ, being rejected by his brethren, the Jews, he was sold for thirty pieces of silver and crucified. But he arose from the dead and became a blessing to the Gentiles and during this period of rejection he wins for himself a Gentile bride, the church.

The Brethren Tested

The seven years of plenty came and went and the years of famine drew on. Jacob and his families began to feel the pinch in their home in Canaan but being informed that there was grain in Egypt, Jacob sent his sons in quest of food.

They came into the land of Egypt and were directed to the man in charge of the store houses. Joseph immediately recognized his brethren, but—were their hearts so hard as when they sold him? Did they deserve his favor? To test them out he made himself strange and they, little thinking that this great man of Egypt was indeed their own brother, were greatly troubled when he spake roughly to them and charged them with being spies.

On their second journey for grain, Joseph's cup was secreted in Benjamin's sack. Lighthearted and happy the brethren started home but just outside the city, Joseph's steward overtook them and charged them with stealing Joseph's cup.

They stoutly maintained their innocence but when the cup was found in Benjamin's sack their hearts sank within them and they went back to plead their case with the prime minister himself.

The Revelation

There stood the great man of Egypt, frowning and haughtily accusing them of theft. Their case indeed seemed hopeless and Benjamin was doomed to be a slave in Egypt. Had this been a few years before, the hard-hearted brothers, who had sold Joseph into a life of slavery, would have forsaken Benjamin and hurried home, rejoicing at their own escape. But it is different now. Judah pleads to bear the punishment and just as the dark clouds hung low and heavy and the wrath of the prime minister seemed ready to thunder out the terrible sentence, a sudden rift revealed a silver lining. The prime minister of Egypt was indeed their own rejected brother and stepping from his exalted position he fell upon their necks and wept and kissed them all.

This sets forth in type the time when the Jews will indeed go through the time of "Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30:7), a time of unparalleled tribulation on the earth (Matt. 24:21), a time which will end in the great Battle of Armageddon, when the nations of the earth will gather against Jerusalem (Joel 3:2) with a determination to wipe them off the earth. The fatal moment will arrive; the Jews in utter dismay will turn to Jehovah for help and suddenly the heavens will burst open and their rejected Messiah, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7).

Rich Provisions

Joseph sent word to his father, "Regard not the stuff; for the good of all the land of Egypt is yours" (Gen. 45:20). The good of all the earth will make the Jews a favored nation when "He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. 31:10).

STUDIES IN THE PROPHECIES

By C. F. Yoder, B.D., Ph.D.

VI. PROGRESS IN PROPHECY

Like the waters which Ezekiel in his vision saw issue from the temple of God and flow with increasing volume in the land of restored Israel so is the Word of God. It is an inexhaustible fountain from which the more we drink the greater is our capacity to drink. It is a great river and the more we explore its tributaries the more we find to explore.

This is especially true of prophecy which continually bears us on to greater heights and wider outlook. Gradually it reveals to us that man's relations to God are not limited to those direct and miraculous interpositions which attract the most attention. History has its relations, not only with providence, but also with biology and geology, and to some extent with astronomy and mathematics, and prophecy touches these relations.

Progress in prophecy means that revelation was given by stages as man was able to receive it. It does not mean that the Bible was evolved from man's growing speculations about himself and God. "I have many things yet to say unto you," said Jesus to his disciples, "but ye cannot bear them now." So God had many things to reveal to the ancient world, but men were not ready for the sublime heights of the Gospel. Many are not yet ready, and therefore they reject the Gospel with scorn. Such need first the reign of law as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ.

The messages to the ancients must therefore be understood in the light of the Gospel. God "hath in these days spoken to us by his Son." Jesus rectified the adaptations to former ages. He said, "Ye have heard that hath been said of old time . . . but I say unto you . . . Let us therefore notice briefly some marks of progress in prophecy.

First, we may note that there is progress from vague to the specific. The first prophecies are very general, as, for example the statement, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and seed. It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." Compare this with the triumphal proclamation of Paul, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thes. 4:14-17).

Second, there is progress from the shadow to the substance. That is to say, prophecy began with symbols, the sacrifices, the bow in the clouds and significant dreams, to which, under the law, were added many ordinances and feasts and ordinances, of which Paul says that they were a "shadow of things to come" (Col. 2:17). The furniture and materials of the tabernacles were symbols of spiritual realities which in this dispensation we enjoy in Christ (Heb. 9:9, 23).

Third, prophecy reveals in order the progressive work of Christ. He is announced first as the Savior from sin and then as the glorious coming King. This the prophecies themselves only partly understood and therefore they searched "what time or manner of time the spirit of the Lord which was in them did point unto, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow them" (1 Pet. 1:11). The altar of sacrifice came first to teach that cleansing from sin precedes communion with God. The feasts of Lev. 23 show the historic order of events in the plan of redemption: (1) The sabbath, representing rest in Christ through faith (Heb. 4:1-8); (2) The passover, typifying Christ's atonement for sin (1 Cor. 5:7); (3) The feast of first fruits typifying Christ's resurrection from the dead (1 Cor. 15:20); (4) The feast of Pentecost typifying the coming of the Holy Spirit to the church (Acts 2:1); (5) The blowing of trumpets pointing to the convocation of the saints at the coming of the Lord (1 Thes. 4:17; 2 Thes. 2:2); (6) The feast of atonement representing the future repentance and restoration of Israel (Heb. 9:23-28; Zech. 10-13:1); (7) The feast of tabernacles, typical of the kingdom age (Zech. 14:16).

How marvelously is history following this inspired program of events!

Fourth, prophecy reveals in order Christ as prophet, priest and as king. The law contained commandments, ordinances and statutes, prefiguring Christ who came, teaching, then offering himself as the perfect sacrifice and continuing his intercession in heaven, from which he shall return as king (Heb. 9:26-28).

Fifth, the prophecies reveal first grace and then judgment. Each dispensation begins with a new covenant, a new opportunity for man, and closes with man's fall and consequent judgment. This age will be no exception. The world has long been sowing to the wind and must reap the whirlwind.

Sixth, prophecies reveal the extension of the people from a chosen family to the elect of all races. As a rist crosses several varieties of plants to get diver-and then chooses the type he wishes and cultivates rt to preserve it, so God has repeatedly selected the of the race to be the start of a new and better type.

 ose Noah, and Abraham and the faithful remnant ael and now is choosing the church from all nations.
 venth, the prophecies consistently put the night be-he day. As the darkness over the deep was followed e light, so the six days of creation toil was followed e sabbath rest, and the ages of sin will be followed e kingdom of love and peace. The world has its es of the golden age in the past, but the prophets of out the city of God in the future and time will con-their words.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

ACTUAL COST OF PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT 4.2 CENTS A PERSON IN U. S.

Prohibition Director Amos W. W. Woodcock gained considerable agement November 11 from the latest statistics on dry law enforcement. In October, he said, Federal agents initiated 5,756 in which arrests were made, compared with 5,948 for the month last year. At the same time 1,341 state cases were d last month and 983 the same month a year ago. "It is a le deduction that whenever the number of Federal cases to fall off enforcement is becoming more effective, provided is no let-up on the part of the agents," he continued. "There en no let-up." He announced that it cost only four cents and ills for each person in the United States to enforce prohibi-

THE CHURCH PAPER

ain and again it has been recognized in print that religious, specially denominational papers, are having "hard sledding."
 is not because they are lower in standard, for, on the whole, were never better than now. It was evident before the deon came upon us all. It has become steadily more acute. It een due in part to the home life of church families. Very hink a church paper essential. It has been due to the widely ised weekly and monthly publications, which have been d with consummate mastery. Some are good and wholesome h, but certainly not religious, many are inane, and a great is hurtful as poison. One finds them in every house. Family s such that a church paper, if admitted, is not read and is not esteemed important. Pastors have deserted us to a great degree, with conspicuous exceptions. . . . Many articles commending church papers have been written. We are confident the church and its pastor can have no better aid. We hope a few devoted men and women will not have to carry the burden of a good church come into its home every week.—The Presbyterian.

A LOVABLE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN

The recent celebration of the 40th anniversary of Dr. Robert E.
 Speer, as secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, was notable for many reasons. Our own beloved Dr. Bartholomew was chosen to speak as the senior secretary in point of service of the sixty Foreign Mission Boards in the United States and Canada.
 The tributes to Dr. Speer were given with unusual warmth and sincerity. It is certainly difficult to think of any forward movement in the Church of Christ in recent years in which this man of God has not had a noble share. There is no Christian worker anywhere, who does not feel under deep obligations to Robert E. Speer.
 As long ago as the college days of the writer, Dr. Speer and John R. Mott were already the most inspiring young leaders of the Church in the eyes of the Christian youth of America. And in the generation that is past, what man can measure the extent of the influence of such a consecrated layman? As a preacher and public speaker Dr. Speer has ranked as one of the most eloquent in the land. Much might be said of his presidency of the Federal Council of the Churches and his outstanding service in a hundred sacred trusts committed to his hands. But most of all we would exalt his Christian spirit, which has caused so many to think of him as pre-eminently a warm-hearted friend and a brother beloved, whose beautiful life and labors of love made him a blessing to us all.

Under the title "A Church Lay Statesman," the New York Times has this fine editorial appreciation: "Robert Speer is a layman, though the University of Edinburgh after the great world missionary conference, held in Scotland in 1910, conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He is a graduate of the Princeton Theological Seminary, but entered immediately upon the work to which he has given these forty years, and was not ordained as a minister. Nevertheless, he has been one of the men most sought by the pulpits of the world. Though he has served as Moderator of the General Assembly of his own church, he is widely known for his ardent support of inter-church work and for his leadership in missions. He has lived up to the meaning of his name in the language of the sturdy race that gave him to America —'to inquire', 'to search out'—for he has circumnavigated the earth in becoming acquainted with the peoples who make up the human race. Mr. Speer has a rare gift of speech and has been able to inspire and lead as well as investigate. His written word has also been used in thousands of churches. It has been said that no man living has more friends in India, China and Japan, and indeed in all parts of the world. And prophet though he is, he is not without honor in his own country."—Reformed Church Messenger.

Proclaim a crucified Christ, but not a dead Christ. Jesus died and rose again. Do not let the two phrases separated. The genuineness and power of Christianity depends on their being kept together. Jesus lives, he lives for evermore, and the fact that he lives gives proof of the worth of his death.

self: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" (Jer. 10: 23). And the Psalmist (5:8) pleads, "Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness." Again he petitions, "For thy name's sake, lead me and guide me" (Psa. 31:3). And Jehovah replies, not merely to David, but to all men everywhere who seek him, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide face the future with confidence.

We need the two-way look at this season—the backward look to

Teachers of Boys

By John S. Flory

Teaching and Experience

No successful teacher can overlook these natural conditions that make for the success of his work, yet there is one other thing that must not be neglected. The boys are wonderfully shrewd observers. They remember things with great exactness and clearness, and the teacher needs to be constantly on his guard that, in his teaching, he does not become merely theoretical; that is, he must not leave an opportunity for the child to think that the teaching is contrary to experience. The boy is now at the point where he sees and learns and knows things for himself, and if what he has learned in this way proves to be contrary to the instruction that he has received, he can not reject his experience, but he will reject his teaching. Therefore, the teacher can not be too careful to have his teaching of the consequences of good and bad actions, and all matters of this kind, perfectly to square themselves with the practical, concrete experiences that come into the boy's life. If he does not carefully safeguard this matter, the confidence of the boys in his teaching and leadership may be seriously impaired.

Teaching Self-Expression

In all of his work the teacher of boys should emphasize the matter of self-expression in the boy nature. His efforts should be so directed as not only to give instruction to the boy, but that the instruction shall express itself in action. One of the finest forms that this will naturally take will be for the boy to cultivate a fixed habit of regular attendance at Sunday school and church. If this can be secured, the teacher has the conditions from which to develop other lines of self-expression.

An Example

Particular phases of religious work can be taken up from time to time in more or less definite order, that the attention of the class may be securely riveted upon them. For instance, the lives of the missionaries, who are on the foreign field representing the particular denomination, may be used as material illustrative of the teaching. The children may know some of them, or may have seen them. They may be related to them in some way. Some may have gone from this particular congregation. All this tends to make a point of contact that helps to secure interest in the work. Besides, the children ought to be taught who are the men and women that are giving their lives to the good of the poor people in heathen lands. All of this material can be used to develop self-expression on the part of the boys with reference to missionary work.

Giving

If the right kind of appeal is made to them, based on concrete information as to the work that is being done by these missionaries, the boys will readily respond to a definite effort to contribute to their support. They can be taught to earn small coins for this purpose; and the teacher will go a long distance in developing the best interests of his class if he can get them to work in some legitimate way and undergo certain privations and sacrifices for the good of those who need help. Any other worthy cause can be used by the teacher in the same way.

Service

But he can go a step farther in developing them in the art of self-expression. They should be taught not only to be willing to give of their self-earned means, but also of their service. Opportunities can be found by the wide-awake teacher in which he can use his class of boys to be of real helpfulness in the neighborhood. He can teach them to make sacrifices, to do little errands for some needy one. If he can then find a suitable illustration in the Bible or in literature, embodying the same or a similar sacrifice on the part of some great person who appeals to the boys because because of his heroic or self-sacrificing character, they will take the greatest delight in this kind of service. This tends to bring the contact between the teaching and the expression of it in their lives.

Embodiment of Boy Ideals

The teacher ought to be a concrete example to his boys of all that they should become. If he has completely won them and is the power in their lives that he ought to be, every boy would like to be just such a man as he is. Then he should especially appeal to them in several ways.

Character

He should be manly, straightforward, and frank in all of his dealings. Anything of cunning or artifice or insincerity, either in word or deed, will soon be detected by the boys. Likewise anything of a "goody-goody" nature in life or profession will soon reveal itself, to the detriment of his work and influence. He must go "straight" if he would be a leader of boys.

Unselfishness

In life, as well as in profession, he should be dominated by a spirit of generosity. He should be willing to give freely of his time, his thought, his effort, to the good of his class. This should be his paramount interest, and if it is easily put aside for other things, the lack of interest in their welfare will soon be observed by the boys. But a willingness to give himself freely to them and their interests will likewise be as keenly observed and as fully appreciated.

Sympathy

Power to enter sympathetically into the real life of the boys is one of the strongest bonds that can bind him to his class. If he can see life from their point of view, appreciate their trials and difficulties and struggles, enter sympathetically into their sports and enjoy the fullness of life as enjoy it, he has a bond of relationship them that makes their interests one.

Self-Control

He needs also to be master of himself should never give way to anger or any passion, or otherwise show lack of self-restraint. This should apply also to his life. He should be willing to deny himself the indulgence of any habit that would be a good example for his class of boys, such as the use of tobacco, indiscreet words or any form of light conduct. The boys expect of their teacher that he be master of himself in every respect.

Love

The teacher should have such a feeling of interest in his boys as to be willing to them his very best out of the depth of his heart, and they will soon detect his devotion to their good if his every action is prompted by the love he bears them.

Should Look for Results

From his labors with his class of boys the teacher should confidently look for results. He should expect that even during the preadolescent period they had so led into an understanding and appreciation of the beauties of Christian living, they would want to be enrolled as disciples of the Master. The most natural conversions in the world are such as are made at this time. There is little of sin in the heart, there is little to repent of; and the change is not a reformation, as in the case of adults. Such a conversion is attended with almost no struggle or sense of guilt, but is prompted by a feeling of incompleteness or insufficiency. The boy will have a somewhat human conception of his Savior, but he has been presented to him properly, and he will desire very much to be like him. The natural conversions the teacher ought to expect, and if they are not forthcoming, he should seek to find out why. The teacher may be at fault.

Ideals

If all the boys in the class can be won to an acceptance of the Savior during boyhood, the teaching certainly has been well done; but regardless of such results, the teacher should constantly look for to the planting of the highest ideals in the minds of his class. Whether they accept Christ as their Savior now or later, the chief purpose of the teacher should be to fill their minds with true ideals—ideals of manhood, of purpose in life—ideals of fullness in the world, and with a conception of the social position that every true Christian should hold in the society in which he moves; and it is not too early during boyhood period to instill in the minds of boys some great purpose for which they should live. The teacher who can give a kind of direction and impulse to his boys has done them an everlasting service.

Conclusion

If the standards here set for the teaching of boys seem to be exacting, let him remember that his is one of the most important works that can be performed by any man. The church needs the best talent available. Nothing is too good for our boys. Like every teacher should demand of himself the best in his power, and ought not to be satisfied with anything else. If he is conscious that he does not measure up in any particular to what a teacher of boys should be, this should be no cause for discouragement.

teachers are usually developed in long periods of earnest effort, and is no reason why any consecrated of boys, with average ability, may wholly devoting himself to his high make himself a very valuable asset Sunday school. Let us, as teachers, er forward and upward, realizing at we are building now into the lives rising generation will bear its full e in the years to come.—Selected ul.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday-School Lesson

(Lesson for January 3)

The Son of God Becomes Man

Editor's Note—Next week, the first is the new year, we will begin a combination of the Family Altar Program and Sunday School Notes, with Rev. Thos. Lyon, of Washington, D. C., prepare the lessons for us. Brother Lyon in writing the Family Altar department a number of years and has contributed us something thought-provoking and devotional. We have discovered any like to follow the Daily Reading the Sunday school lessons in their worship, and so we are providing our worship suggestions with those references as the background. The Editor's in the Sunday school lessons will be continued, as Brother Lyon's comments give us helps to the study of the lesson as well as a guide for family worship.)

Introductory Note

On the first Sunday in the new year we begin in our Sunday schools a study of the Message of the Gospel According to John. The purpose of the Gospel of John has been stated for us by the sacred text itself: "That ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that believing ye may have life in his name. This should be the key to our study, but we should also get an insight into the entire Gospel in its historical setting."

John has been stated for us by another text: "To bring the pupils to a deeper appreciation of Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God, and to win them to an active faith in him as their personal Savior; to strengthen the faith of those who already trust him and to quicken their zeal in leading others to Christ and in accomplishing his purpose in the world" (Adult Class).

It will be noted that John is strikingly different in style and content from Matthew, Mark and Luke, each of which present a somewhat orderly manner the life of Jesus, while John rather interprets the life and person of Jesus in terms of historical matter to its setting.

Beginning the Lesson

The lesson is that part of the first chapter commonly called the prologue. Maclaren, the great expositor, calls it "the prologue page in the New Testament." In the Greek philosophy the evangelist presents the distinctly Christian doctrine of incarnation. Reduced to simplest terms, the use of "Logos" to represent Christ means that just as a spoken word is an expression of a thought in the mind of the speaker, so "the Word" (Christ), is, in his incarnation, the expression of the thought of God toward humanity. God can and does communicate with men in the person of Jesus Christ, by whom the worlds were made, and who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life.—Church School Journal. Friedrich Niebergall says of the prologue of John's Gospel, it is "a bridge thrown down from eternity into time; and the full significance is that thus the Eternal appears unto men."

"It has been reserved for Saint Paul to proclaim that the deepest principle in the heart of man is faith; it was reserved for Saint John to proclaim that the essential attribute of God is love."—Dean Stanley.

It was an old Scotch custom to teach children the rudiments of reading from this first chapter of John. It had been so employed with my father by a Wigtownshire mother, and that father, who died when I was a very small boy, gave me my first reading lessons from it; long before I went to school; Sunday afternoons, holding me upon his knee. The simplicity of its Saxon English was suitable, if the subject-matter wasn't. I remember how quickly I mastered "In the," and so slowly "beginning." It was a fine thing, though, to have the divine character of Jesus thus impressed upon the mind in the earliest years.

He Is the Word of God

Christ is the Word of God and the Word was and is God. "In the beginning," that is, back of all manifestations of God was the Word which proceeded from him. The Word is the revealer of "the incomprehensible and invisible God." Words are the expression of what is in the soul—reason, conscience, will, purpose. We are told that "the Word was with God." The Greek preposition expresses not merely being beside, but a living union and communion; implying the active notion of intercourse. M. R. Vincent says: "The divine Word not only abode with the Father from all eternity, but was in the living, active relation of communion with him."

The Source of Life

"That power which creates life and maintains all else in existence was in the Word. He was the fountain of existence to all things, including every form and degree and kind of life, natural and spiritual, says the Expositor's Greek Testament. "For as the Father raiseth the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will" (John 5:21-26; 6:47-58). In the first chapters of Genesis, the word create (whose meaning is interpreted by v. 3 of this chapter, "to cause to come into being") is used only three times, (1) of matter, (2) of life, (3) of the soul of man; and at each of these points the efforts of men to produce either of these by the forces of nature have proved complete failures. Life must come from

Crusade with Christ in Christian Conduct and Devotions

By Clifford Earle

Published in two parts. Part I.

The Ideal

The people of every society enlisted in a united study in private devotions of the life of Christ as found in the four Gospels. Every Endeavorer striving to double the power of Christ in his life by daily engaging in worship and prayer, and practising the teachings of Christ.

Jesus Is Our Strength and Guide

We believe that Jesus is the Savior of all who seek him diligently, and the way of life for all who follow him faithfully. We believe that God definitely strengthens and guides in Jesus' way of life all who practise communion with him. We believe that the standards of the Christian Endeavor covenant are an excellent guide in Christian conduct and devotions.

The World Needs Earnest Christian Young People

In these changing times the world needs earnest Christian young people who increasingly understand and appreciate the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, who by constant communion seek to discover the "mind of God" for this generation, who witness for Christ through aggressive Christian living and service, and who give voice to convictions for which they are willing to sacrifice and suffer.

Discovering Standards for Conduct and Worship

Study and discuss problems in Christian conduct in regular meetings. Consider actual "life-situations" that the young people face. Determine basic truths involved in each case, and study them in the light of Christian principles. Each discussion should "arrive" so that members leave the meetings with definite convictions as to what Christ would have them do in the situations considered. It is usually true that young people can discuss in the regular meetings all of the problems of conduct that they must solve individually. Problems that are worthy of discussion should be more than matters of plain right or wrong. They should be problems about which the young people have honest differences of opinions as to the correct Christian solutions.

Study and practise private and group worship. Study each of the elements of worship (prayer, Scripture, music, talks, stories, dramatics, pictures, ritual, the offering, responses, quiet). Consider worship themes, the need for unity in each service, the selection of elements and materials, the order of service, and the ways for securing continuity in the service so that there is a single total result. Understand that each bit of material should contribute to the worship attitude in the right way at the right time. Have worship services, however short, in every meeting, preferably at the beginning. Frequently make a whole meeting devotional. Consider the practices of family worship, grace at table, evening prayers, etc. Enroll Comrades of the Quiet Hour.

Urge the Endeavorers to unite in studying in private devotions the life of Christ. This study may begin on January first. In meetings discuss incidents and sayings recorded in the Gospels that will help the young people to apply Christian principles to everyday problems. Suggest commentaries, devotional guides, and other helps. From time to time have the members tell of their progress and of the benefit derived. Suggest ways of holding private devotions. Emphasize the value of the united study and its significant relation to the whole Crusade with Christ.—C. E. World.

My Resolutions

By L. M. Dorreen

By God's Grace I Will—

1. Yield my life to Jesus Christ, without any reserve, for delay means spiritual loss to me and to others and may mean Eternal Death. Acts 2:12; Jno. 3:16.

2. Show the Spirit of my Master in all my words and deeds, though slighted, insulted or derided, for Jesus wants me to. II Cor. 12:9; I Jno. 5:4.

3. Put away every old grudge, all malice and envy, that I may as is commanded, love my neighbor as myself. Luke 10:27; Eph. 4:26.

4. Put away every known sin and strive to live a holy life, following all the commandments of God, that the gospel be not blamed. I John 2:1-2; Heb. 12:14.

5. Put aside all timidity, and let men, angels, and devils know that I am a follower of Jesus Christ, and purpose at all times, and at all costs, to please him. John 1:9; Matt. 10:32-33.

6. Attend church services regularly, as Jesus did, for failure to do so, whether to read my newspaper at home or go for a visit or a drive, would close all the churches, if everybody followed my example. Heb. 10:25; Ps. 84:1-2.

7. Attend church night services, for if Jesus should come for me that night, I would want him to find me there. Matt. 18:19-20; Acts 2:42.

8. Return thanks to God at every meal, and have family worship each day. I Cor. 10:31; Deut. 6:6-9.

9. Study prayerfully the Word of God, and devoutly listen to the Holy Spirit. II Tim. 2:15; John 14:26.

10. Strive to live so as best to honor God, most to help my fellowmen, and thus be ready any moment to heed Father's call to the heavenly home. Matt. 25:34-40; Acts 20:32. Country-Club Christian.

station, which has now become an established fact in Mission history. Since present we will not speak further of but will speak of the festivities at Yaloke. Dinner was served at one of the ladies' gifts were exchanged as usual. One lady was very homesick. She said she could conquer the disease any day on Christmas Day. Another lady was lonely! Was not her husband some away. Another was looking forward to leaving in another week or so for the inevitable furlough, which comes to us occasionally. One was sad because she was there; one was sad because her husband wasn't there; one was sad because she was going; and I believe there was only one who was thoroughly Christmasy happy. Was it needless to be sad. Was it not Christmas? Was not the missing husband to be restored? Did not the feeling of "de pays" pass with the day? So we passed these two Christmases, the first in the history of the Station, and will proceed to the French Christmas.

The scene was Montpellier, the Hotel de France. A spacious room on the "deuxieme etage." But when you have said so you have said all that can be said. The room was cold; the radiator might have been used for a refrigerator; the floor was stone; the wind whistled through the window; a little girl was homesick for home; was not mother there? but there were no little companions to talk the day with her, and somehow or other, as she would, she could not keep back the tears. And mother thought, as mother does, that the best way to do was to tell others. So they donned their wraps and sallied forth to the new booths, which were open even on Christmas Day, to purchase white gift offerings for the missionaries on the field. Joy began to come in the little girl's heart, and she almost forgotten her tears, when there came a knock on the door, and behold, there was the courier. A package for Mademoiselle Marguerite, with all sorts of lovely things therein. How good it was of God! And the excitement had hardly subsided when Mademoiselle Marguerite was hardly more than arrayed in her lovely new suit when there came a knock at the door. And they came to one of the rooms below to have American tea, which was being served by the Americans in the hotel? Mademoiselle Marguerite and her mother were leaders of the French, and did not seek occasions for English, but this was CHRISTMAS and so they accepted, and spent a happy afternoon, almost forgetting they were away from France.

And then came the French dinner at Perrier's, which brought them back to France again and made them realize they were strangers in a strange land. They had spent long enough in France, and so they came back to Yaloke to review two Christmases.

For the time being we must pass over Christmas of 1927. We were almost to speak of this Christmas of 1928 "French" Christmas. Dinner was served at the Foster home in French style, to men, military officers on the Station, incidentally of course, to the remaining missionaries. Gifts were exchanged in session, even the officers being generous members. The conversation was

Some Past Christmases

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

PART II

And now we must go back to Christmas, 1922 at Bangui, Christmas week was a happy one for James Gribble, even though he had suffered an accident to his shoulder. To quote again from "Undaunted Hope,"—"For the boat had brought him not only a wife, but a friend, whom he loved at a glance and who returned his love. Henceforth there was between James Gribble and Allen Bennett a love "passing the love of women" David had found Jonathan.

On December 23rd, Mr. Haas and the three missionaries of his party (who had arrived with Dr. Gribble and Allen Bennett) left for their destination. Allen Bennett was again in bed with a severe attack of fever, having succumbed the day after his arrival in Bangui.

It was a sad but sweet moment as the missionaries now about to separate gathered about Allen Bennett's bed and sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." He again revived and threw himself with tremendous ardor into the work of preparation for the long overland journey which awaited them (to Bassai). They were a united family now, these three, and the two men vied with each other in the effort to make the journey as easy as possible for the one who was traveling with them. Christmas, 1922 was spent in Bangui. It resembled Christmas very little, for the only semblance of ordinary festivities was a fruit-cake which graced the little camp table, and which had traveled all the way from Pennsylvania. But they were happy, for on the 28th they were leaving Bangui for Bassai.

And now we must speak of two Yaloke Christmases. We should indeed speak of four in all, but between them we must speak also of a French Christmas. Christmas, 1924 at Yaloke was a very quiet one. The three missionaries who had opened Yaloke Station, Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Dr. Gribble were the only participants in the festivities. Our memory fails us in some of these points. We believe "goat" graced the table and we know that Christmas gifts were exchanged, but they were such as could be delved from trunks, among them we remember a package of carbon paper. 1924 had been a quiet year at Yaloke. This Christmas was correspondingly sedate.

1925 was a ladies' Christmas. Mr. Hathaway had left shortly before to accommodate Mr. Sheldon on an exploration trip for Bellevue Station. At Yaloke poste remained Mrs. Hathaway, Miss Tyson, Miss Emmert and Dr. Gribble. There was someone at Bassai who too was spending Christmas in a lonely manner; someone who had been engaged to the younger of the two explorers for but a brief period; someone who was looking forward to helping him to open this hardly realized that it was actually Christmas at Yaloke.

we must speak of the Christmas of which was again a ladies' Christmas. Hathaway was again away, not exploring time, but trying to bring in several baggage along the then pioneer between Douala and Yaloke.

Morning was uneventful. In the afternoon a White Gift Service was held as the natives vied with one another for offerings and gifts. The sermon preached in Banou, on the text, "Is it Too Hard for the Lord?" As they were walking home from the church, they remarked, "Once the mail came Christmas Day." Another said "Wouldn't it be lovely if it were so this time?" A third crossed the path leading from the house to the house and said "If that man is on the proper path, I should say that carrying the mail sack." Mail sack proper path or no, Christmas packing all. Surely it was good of the personnel of the ladies was somewhat different from the Christmas of the previous year. Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson were on furlough, and Miss Bickel was absent. Mrs. Hathaway and Dr. Gribble in charge of the work at Yaloke. Dinner was served before the mail was read, an unsuccess; but the mail had not been delivered and dinner was ready. And then dinner was over, and the gifts had been exchanged, the letters and packages eagerly opened. It was five minutes past six o'clock before the last letter had been opened and the last word spoken. Five minutes of repose and quiet, and then the closing event of Christmas, 1929 at Yaloke took place. There came a triple knock at the door. One of the ladies threw open her gown and went quietly to the door. Who should be there but the then chief of Yaloke, desiring to surrender. He was invited to enter, given a chair in the rear corner of the room. The blinds were drawn and then Voloungou and Belikau came to the Sergeant with the news. It was before they returned. Meanwhile the ladies sat in fatigue and suspense, the outcome would be nobody knew, but could conjecture. But the waiting came to an end as the Sergeant knocked at the door. He came in with a broad smile and stretched hands to greet the now surrendering chief. We thought of the text "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" We shall never forget Christmas 1929 at Yaloke.

Now again we must go back, for we consider two Christmases at Bellevue. This is the second one for me. Three years ago on Christmas Day Mrs. Kennedy had Christmas dinner in the house where Bickel now lives. Those participating, I remember rightly, were Mr. and Mrs. Kime and Junior, Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon, Emmett, Miss Myers and Dr. Gribble. I could not do justice to the ample viands, but I will refrain from admiring our listlessness on this occasion, which was to fulfillment of one of her heart's desires, that year; for it was just two days before that the missionary population of the Station was increased by the arrival of little Louis Paul. He was a slight, but very acceptable Christmas present. We shall not forget Christmas, 1927 at Bellevue either, and as we look around tonight upon this gathering, we rejoice that we are privileged to meet, as we see here those who have participated in other Christmases that we have mentioned—Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway, Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon and Miss Bickel, all but one of whom have been in our Christmas reminiscences since 1923, as we see Miss Myers, Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson and rejoice in their presence, as we see the other arrivals of the present year, Miss Byron and Miss Patterson, as we rejoice that the Foster's are still permitted to labor with us, we cannot help but feel that after all Christmas, 1930 is to be the crowning one of our earthly experience thus far.

We know not where we shall spend our Christmases until he shall come again, but he shall come. We know tonight, this Christmas night of 1930, that "now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Although there are times when we reminisce, may our gaze tonight be not so much backward even to Christmases that are past, as forward to his Coming, and may we consider it our highest privilege to hasten that coming. Sunnyside, Washington.

REVIVAL SERVICE AT RITTMAN, OHIO

Brother Uphouse assisted me in a two weeks' meeting. There are two who have been baptized up to the present time. The meeting was a spiritual blessing to the church. Many of the members and friends of the church did not miss a single service. And Brother Uphouse gave us splendid soul-stirring messages. The attendance was encouraging, and the seed sown will no doubt spring into good fruit.

One of the outstanding features of the program was a Bible reading contest. The contest was a close race and proved a blessing to the readers. Mrs. Fred Blatter received a New Testament for winning the contest. She read nearly thirty-one thousand verses. Gus Petit was second. He read nearly thirty thousand verses. There are thirty-one thousand, one hundred and seven verses in the entire Bible. We also presented a plant to the oldest person at the meeting. Mrs. Brennenman received this honor. She not only attended every service but has been a faithful Brethren for over half a century.

So the meetings proved a spiritual blessing to the church. And we are praying and endeavoring to bring more lost souls to the Savior.

EVERETT NISWONGER, Pastor.

REVIVAL SERVICE AT RITTMAN, OHIO

Some time ago Brother Niswonger and I conducted a series of meetings at Rittman, Ohio, at which place he serves as their very able pastor.

The meetings were unique in several respects. Brother Niswonger preached the first week and I the second. Mr. Kime led the congregational songs. We are sorry to say that our time for visitation was miserably limited as we attempted to carry on our full college work at the same time. We drove from Ashland to Rittman each evening during the week, many times arriving just in time for the pre-prayer service.

I shall remember the services as a great Christian experience and am happy to say our contacts with the Christian people were uplifting and encouraging. The people created proper inspiration for the meetings by joining in a whole-hearted song service and especially singing beautifully on memorized choruses. We kept learning new ones until we had so many that we could not sing them all at one service, but rather had to take two evenings to go over them all. One time we arrived at the church a bit early and heard the children across the street singing away on the chorus:

"Since Jesus came into our town,
The Devil's been wearing a frown.
Many hearts have been changed,
Many homes rearranged,
Since Jesus came into our town."

Well, this gave the impression that even the children were interested and were willing to maintain the spirit of the meetings throughout the entire day.

The people of the church were kind and hospitable, making sure that we were well cared for and that every possible advantage was placed in our hands. Moreover they were loyal to the church by their regular attendance. Some attended every service.

The best of all was that two young people took a definite stand for Christ for the first time. We anticipate a great future for these, for who can tell what the Lord has in store for such noble young people, who early in life remember their Creator. Our prayers are that they realize the great significance of the step and that the Lord will lead them into a well-rounded Christian life.

Student Preacher.

REVIVAL AT WASHINGTON

After weeks of anticipation and preparation our revival with Evangelist R. Paul Miller opened on Tuesday night, November 24th, with fine interest and attendance. The meeting closed with a blessed service on Sunday night, December 13th. It is impossible to enumerate all the results of such a series of meetings as this. They are so varied and many of them will not be made evident in this life. To appreciate in a little way at least the blessings of the meeting one should have listened to the testimonies which were given on the last Sunday night of the meeting. Souls have found a new joy in the Lord, they have made noble resolves to give him the very best of their lives, they have been stirred to a greater zeal in his service, they have been warmed by the rich fellowship of these days. Surely the Lord has visited his people here in Washington during these three weeks.

Brother Miller was fearless in his declaration of the pure Word of God. His sermons went straight to the hearts of his hearers. The saints were brought face to face with their responsibility as Christians and unbelievers were convicted of their need of Divine help. The greatest difficulty in these meetings seemed to be in getting the unsaved to come to the services. However some came and the Gospel of Salvation was plainly given to them. Some responded and as always is the case others locked the door against Christ.

Scores of personal visits were made during the meetings by the evangelist and pastor, and by various members of the church. No one will ever know here just what shall be the results of such visits as these. The Gospel was presented to many in homes where the individuals would not come to church. We trust that the influence of these visits will reach out in ever-widening circles. It is a pleasure to work with Brother Miller in personal evangelism. He is willing and ready to go into any home that may be suggested to him. He is most effective in his appeal to the individual soul. Much of his efficiency, we believe, can be traced to his fine work along this line.

One of the most interesting and profitable phases of the meeting was the Question Box which was opened every week-day night and from which scores of perplexing questions were answered. Many testified to the help they had derived from the answers to the questions. The questions were answered by the evangelist wholly on the basis of the Scriptures in a most clear and convincing fashion.

Among the special features of the meeting were Young People's night at which time the young folks responded with a splendid attendance and special music and Brother Miller delivered a gripping sermon on "The Passion of the Cross," and Linwood, Maryland, night, at which time a group of Brethren from that place motored to Washington to lend their support to the revival. We want to thank the pastor, Brother J. L. Bowman, and his good people for their interest which they showed in our work.

In all there were twenty-four persons who made confessions during the meetings. As yet none of these have been baptized. We are having a baptismal service on next Sunday evening at which time we hope that all those who have not as yet received the rite will do so. We look forward to a great service. By having baptism at the close of the meeting instead of during it we hope to prolong the good spirit of the meeting and trust that others who have not as yet made the great confession will yet do so. When it is considered that we had an unusually large meeting last year with Brother Ashman and another such meeting two years ago with Brother Miller and that the field is pretty well gleaned we have reason to rejoice at these visible results. We believe that doors have been opened for the reception of others before many months go by.

Thus we appreciate the faithful service of Brother Miller while he has been among us and the prayers and interest of many souls will follow him in all his work, both as evangelist and Home Missions Secretary. Come back again, Brother Miller.

We are glad to report that the local church has just lifted a record Home Missions offering. The amount to date is $359.00. This pastor is happy that his people are responding so nobly to an enlarged

Home Missions program. Also in October with the assistance of Brother A. V. Kimmell, of Philadelphia, the church pledged and gave between $6,000 and $7,000 for this year ending next October, looking forward to the completion of the new building. Pray for us, Brethren, that we may witness a faithful witness for the Lord here in Washington. May the blessing of God be poured out upon all the Brethren churches in a most bountiful way during the coming year. The year 1932 will be a great year in Washington City. The Bicentennial of the Birth of Washington will be celebrated in the greatest celebration of the City's history. Many of you Brethren had better come for the festivities and if you come be sure to visit the Brethren church. A welcome awaits you.

AN APPRECIATION OF ELDER WM. A. CROFFORD

Elder Wm. A. Crofford was born in 1860 and departed this life to be with his Lord in 1931 at the age of 71 years. He was a graduate of Juniata College, graduating in the same class with the late Governor Brumbaugh. Albert Trent, who recently was called by death, was a member of this same class. Elmer Crofford was a school teacher. For almost 50 years he was an esteemed and successful salesman for the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. For many years he was an active and energetic member of the Brethren Church. He served faithfully for a period as deacon. In 1898, he was ordained to the Eldership. Although he did not find it possible to devote his entire time to the ministry, he served as pastor of a number of churches in addition to his salesmanship duties. He served the Listie, Second Brethren, Third Brethren, McKees Gap, and Mt. Pleasant churches. Fifteen years ago he became non-resident pastor of the Mt. Pleasant church. For a short period he surrendered this pastorate, but several years ago, he was recalled and served devotedly until his decease. He leaves to mourn their loss, the widow, Mrs. Lovenia Crofford, a daughter, a son, and four grandchildren. Two brothers and two sisters also remain among the living.

In our fellowship with Brother Crofford we found him to be a sympathetic advisor and genuine Christian friend. Whenever he was not away preaching, he always attended our services. He was willing to help his pastor in every way. He "earnestly contended for the faith." Personally, we have suffered a loss in his departure. We have one more sincere Christian friend awaiting us in the Paradise of God.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA

Our church here is still holding forth the Word of Truth, for our pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell, is a faithful preacher of Christ and his Word.

We have had a number of accessions recently. It was fine to see a father of a large family step out for Christ, then, one after another of his sons and daughters until now, five of them have been baptized and received into the church. It reminds us of that phrase, so often used in the Book of Acts, "Thou shalt be saved and thy house." Then, too, there were some splendid folk already Christians, who came into our fellowship, because they love the Truth for what it stands.

All of our auxiliaries do splendidly with special mention of our fine Bible class under the leadership of our enthusiastic superintendent, Brother Carl Seitz. Attendance has been above the average several Sundays recently, with a number of classes having perfect attendance.

Before Thanksgiving Day we had a special, "Homecoming Day." A combination of church and Sunday school. A special program of "Thanks"—and "Giving"—giving of money for our needs, and stacks of groceries for other Wednesday before Thanksgiving Day. We sent out twenty-five baskets, filled with kinds of good things to eat, to families who were personally known to us, most of whom were connected with our school.

On December 6th we held a memorial service for our dear Brother Kennedy, who gave down his life in Africa. Brother Kennedy comes very close to our hearts, his wife being members of our church. He graduated from a Bible Institute, Philadelphia. After they were married, they went from here to Africa. When they returned on their furlough, it so happened that we were without a pastor. Brother Kennedy served us as supply pastor for several months. We had the opportunity to get very well acquainted with him at that time, and learned to love him very much. So we feel his death keenly in Philadelphia, and our hearts go out in sympathy to his bereaved wife in Africa. There were many of his former associates from the Bible Institute at his memorial service. Also Dr. W. W. Rough, one of the leading teachers of the Institute assisted in the service. After paying tribute to the memory our pastor gave the final verse from 1 Thess. 4:13-18. Our choir sang an appropriate anthem, and Miss Seitz sang so beautifully, "Face to Face."

We had prayed much for his recovery but we bow in submission to God's sovereign will—his thoughts are higher than our thoughts; he doeth all things well. We go beyond the present sorrow, to "The Hope of the Coming of our Lord." We shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air." Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

As there has been no report from the Dallas Center church for some time, we thought perhaps you might be interested in knowing what we are doing.

We enjoyed having the Conference here this year. We heard so many good sermons, it would be difficult to say which was the most interesting.

We enjoyed having Miss Myers very much, and her talk on Africa was very interesting.

The church and Sunday school attendance has been good, much better even than last year.

There have been seven new members added to the church, making four new families.

Brother Staley conducted the communion service in his home church at Udell, Iowa.

There was a very good attendance at communion and it was a very impressive service.

Brittanic Majesty. The modern declaration of independence is more extensive and various than any of these. No single crusade is under way. Children are declaring independence of their parents; parents are declaring independence of their husbands, (and perhaps even vice versa). Laborers are demanding to be freed from their bondage to employers. Employers are demanding freedom from the restrictions in government. Authors and producers are demanding to be free of all restrictions, and teachers are demanding their "right" to run their schools and colleges to suit themselves and are politely requesting their trustees to walk the plank. The tyranny of convention is everywhere denounced. In sum, we are declaring our independence not of our sovereign but of our past. This is a new freedom.—Science: The False Messiah—C. E. Ayres.

The things we surmount make us stronger; and the processes by which we carry ourselves through, as, for instance, hard work, wise planning, courtesy, diplomacy, and perhaps the bold stroke, are fine educational courses. And sometimes, when we fail or meet defeat, as we all do, there are compensating educational results that we must not neglect to treasure.—Catholic Citizen.

life.—Peloubet. And Christ alone is life.

The Source of Light

"And the life was the light of men." Peloubet says, "For not only was the first effect of life on matter to produce light, but the first condition of seeing the light is life. All the light in the universe cannot make dead things see. Dead minds cannot know. And mere life without light is of little avail. It is difficult for us to realize what Light does for us.

"Hail, holy light, offering of heaven, first-born."

"Light is everything to us. All things are practically non-existent without light. Light set in motion by life is the source of life, of beauty, of manifested reality, of warmth, comfort and joy, of health and power. Now, what light does for the natural world, Jesus does for the world of man, of mind, soul and spirit. He reveals God, and heaven, and truth; he shows the way; he cheers, comforts, vivifies and renews."

Of His Fullness We Received

And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace (John 1:16).

Anna Edith Meyers recounts that M. A. Quayyam Daskawie, a teacher in Gordon College, in India, was born a Moslem, but became a Christian more than ten years ago. In The Missionary Review of the World (August, 1931), he tells of his conversion, and says:

"In Christ I have found God. He is the tangible manifestation of God. In so far as I am able to apprehend Christ, I am able to understand what God is like. I believe in God because I believe in Christ. If I did not believe in Christ I could not believe in God. He is worthy, and more than worthy, to receive the truest and the utmost devotion of my heart and all my love because he first loved me and redeemed me. Christ has shown me that in and over and behind this confusing universe is a Fatherly Heart of Love. This is a revelation no amount of money can buy and no one but Christ can substantiate. In him was the love of God manifested to us and in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. He is the answer to the cry of the human heart through the centuries, 'Oh, that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down'; that men may see face to face the invisible God whom they worship."

OUR LITTLE READERS

WINNIE UNEARTHS A STORY

Winnie picked up the bit of broken china. It was the prettiest piece she had ever seen, creamy white with a gay pattern of softly colored field flowers, dull blue and deep yellow and lavender and warm rose. She rubbed it against her pinafore and got off the last particle of sandy soil. She turned it over. On the back was a queer looking signature and a date, "1826."

"Why, that's a hundred years old!" said Winnie. "I'd like to know whose it was, a hundred years ago." She left the new playhouse and went to show it to mother.

Mother turned it in her hands with a curious smile. "Did you find this under the dogwood trees?" she asked.

"Yes, mother, when I was sweeping the dead leaves away to make me a playhouse. See, it's a hundred years old! Whom do you reckon it belonged to then?"

"It belonged to your great-grandmother, dear Winnie," said mother. "When she was married her brother in France sent her six of these plates. Fine china was rare and costly then, and she was very proud of them. She kept them all until she was old, then she gave one of them to each of her six daughters. My mother used hers for a cake plate. And she always let me pass the little iced cakes when she had a tea party. And I held that plate very carefully, too, I can tell you!" Mother laughed softly. "I always wanted it for my playhouse, more than anything in the world! I never had a real tea set like yours, only bits of china that had bene broken."

For the first time Winnie realized that once mother was a little girl like herself. "Where was your playhouse, mother?" she asked eagerly.

"Come on," said mother, "I'll show you!" She took Winnie's hand, and together they went out through the backyard gate. They followed the small beckoning path down the little hill until they came to the brook. It was a noisy little brook, always in a hurry, and on the banks beside it grew blue and white violets and starry pink crow's-foot. They stepped across it and climbed the steep bank beyond and came to the sweet dogwood thicket.

"Right here's where I found it," said Winnie.

Mother nodded with that curious little smile on her lips again and a far-away look in her eyes. "It's where my playhouse was," she whispered. They sat down side by side.

"But how did you get the plate, mother?" persisted Winnie. "You never did tell me."

"I was so busy remembering things that I forgot it," said mother. "Well, one day mother was having a big tea party for the minister and his wife. They were going to China. He was a big, tall man, very gentle and kind and very near-sighted and awkward. Mother let me wear my red cashmere dress that day and my white apron with its ruffle all starched and fluted. I was going to pass the cakes as usual. I was much excited. And I loved to hear the ladies telling each other that I was 'Such a helpful child!' 'So graceful!' 'A perfect little lady!' I was making my way among the guests, and the minister was standing by the fireplace. But as I came up behind him, he turned to sit down, his foot caught in the hearthrug, and he fell sprawling, knocking me down at the same time. I got up, not hurt at all. He got up and said he wasn't hurt either, but terribly outdone, of course. But the lovely plate was broken into thirteen pieces!"

"Oh, dear!" cried Winnie. "I bet you were glad the preacher did it!"

"I was, dear Winnie!" said mother, laughing. "Of course no one could scold the minister. It was just laughed off, as if it were nothing. But when everybody had gone home, mother cried a little and gave me the pieces for my playhouse." Mother looked around her as if she were coming back from a far-away place. "And this is the very spot. Of course the trees were little then, and the ground was not so shaded, so grass and wild flowers grew under them. I had a board between those two trees for my china cupboard, and there I kept the broken plates."

"Mother," said Winnie curiously, "truly, weren't you kind of glad he broke it?"

"I'm afraid I was," admitted mother, "but I didn't let mother know it until he sent her a very beautiful new one from China!" —Christian Observer.

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS

We pass on to our readers "A set of New Year resolutions" given to his congregation in St. Louis by Dr. R. H. Schuett, pastor of the Grace M. E. church, and published in The Globe-Democrat. Every one may adopt them with profit.

I am a child of God. God is in my life. I will trust him. It is he who gives me rest by night and strength by day. I shall rise above life's fretful fevers because I know my own shall come to me. He has promised that as my days so shall my strength be.

I will believe in myself. If I do not believe in myself, I can't expect others to do so. All true religion places a high emphasis upon egoism, not upon egotism. This is the place where Christianity differs from Buddhism, which hopes for Nirvana, the fading out of personality.

I will know myself better. As sevenths of the icebergs are submerged in the water, so much of life with its infinite resources and capacities lies beyond my sight, but may be known if patiently I care to know it.

I will seek to know eternal values, because I am more than my body, but a spirit with hopes and longings that reach far beyond 1929. I will know the truth and only be governed by the truth. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to be true.

I will look upon my work as a sacrament. It is not to me a burden but a joy. By means of it I have fellowship with God, who is the great worker.

I will treat my fellow men with the same consideration that I expect for myself. I will keep my mind and soul open, because "by the way" in most unexpected places have come to me life's finest lessons, and I have met angels unawares.

I will live each day, and not postpone life till some time in the future, when I am better prepared for it financially, or have more time.

WHAT DOES LOYALTY MEAN?

Quite a bit has been said through the columns of The Evangelist during the past few weeks about loyalty. This may raise the question in the minds of some as to what constitutes loyalty? Much is being made of "party loyalty" in a political sense at the present time which causes some of us to fear that the welfare of "party" shall take precedence over the welfare of the country or of the world.

If the welfare of the people depended upon the success of a particular party it would be a patriotic duty to support that party and to loyally uphold it in everything it does. But past experience has not demonstrated it to be a truth that political parties are always seeking to do "the greatest good to the greatest number." Unless they are doing this they have no claim on the loyalty or the support of the people they are supposed to represent.

Likewise the same thing may be said of the church or of any institution of the church. Unless the church or the particular institution of the church that is asking for support is seeking to serve the particular field it represents it has no claim upon the loyalty of the church membership.

The Brethren Publishing House

The different boards representing the various "interests" of the Brethren church have each had their say during the past twelve months, and they have made their appeals through the columns of The Brethren Evangelist with more or less success, and in every instance the Publishing House has backed them up to the limit of its ability to serve. Space and special effort have been given without stint or measure. It now becomes the privilege of The Publishing House to make the first appeal of the New Year in its own behalf, and since it has given such unstinted support to every other institution of the church it has a just right to expect each one of these institutions to give in return their support in equal measure as the campaign is launched looking toward a successful and generous Publication Day offering on the fourth Sunday in January. A great deal more will be said about that in succeeding numbers of the Evangelist, but for this occasion we desire to confine ourselves to only a few VITAL points.

The Depression in The Church

We have been told a great many that the depression that rests like a blanket over our land is largely psychological. This may have been true in a measure a year or so back, and it may be true yet as it has to do with a number of churches, but it is a reality with the Publishing House as the cumulative effect of all the churches and Sunday schools on in this institution. A retrenchment because of financial stress upon the part of individual or one church or Sunday school would not produce any noticeable effect upon the Publishing House, but when it is multiplied by the hundreds the effect is not only noticeable but it is almost catastrophic. There are hundreds of subscribers to the Evangelist that seem to feel they cannot afford to renew their subscription; we would rather believe they can not afford to renew them. This feeling among subscribers to The Evangelist coupled with a feeling of necessity to economize in the purchase of Sunday school supplies by the schools is making this the most difficult year of the seventeen years we have been trying to serve the church through the medium of the Publishing House.

What Can Be Done?

There is much that can be done by individuals and Sunday schools and churches. If every subscriber would renew his subscription promptly upon receiving notice of its expiration, and if every Sunday school and church that owes unpaid bills to the Publishing House would pay them promptly it would afford quick relief from a embarrassing situation.

A Final Admonition

We had planned to publish the Evangelist Honor Roll in this number with a statement of the number of churches that renewed since it was last published, but Corner has grown too large to give for that until a later number. But are a number of Honor Roll churches' lists of subscriptions expire at the closing of the year, and it is to them we make this closing appeal, and urge them not to let the seeming financial stress of congregations cause them to lose the honor they have held for so many years.

The Publishing House has no other object for its existence than to serve the Brethren church as the church serves the Lord by preaching a whole Gospel to the whole world, but it can not do this service unless the church body renews its output and thus enables it to fulfill its mission.
